The announcement of Mr. Lichtman's appointment follows a long stay in Los Angeles by the former Famous Players-Lasky executive, during which time he was engaged in conferences with the members of Associated Producers.

S. R. Kent, of Paramount, to Tour United States

S. R. Kent, general manager of distribution for Paramount productions will leave New York April 5 for a six weeks' tour of the country during which he will investigate business conditions in every section.

In the course of his tour Mr. Kent will spend one week at the Lasky studio in Hollywood where he will confer with Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The week will be devoted to a resume of the big productions scheduled for release by Paramount next fall and will go fully into details as to the most advantageous manner in which they can be distributed for the benefit of exhibitors throughout the country.

A large part of Mr. Kent's time, during his transcontinental journey will be devoted to a study of business conditions which, it is expected, will be instrumental in the formation of a big fall drive which will be made by Paramount.

All Aboard for the Rochester Convention

THE MOTION PICTURE THEATRE OWNERS of the State of New York have issued a last call to every exhibitor from Montauk to Buffalo to attend without fail the big convention to be held at The Hotel Seneca, Rochester, April 5, 6 and 7 (Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday). The organization has just started a most intensive and vigorous campaign against the proposed Clayton Censorship Bill and the wave of anti-censorship agitation is to reach its crest at Rochester.

There is no longer room for the slightest doubt as to the record-breaking character of the convention as far as attendance is concerned. The requests for reservations received up to date by Irving M. Salyerds, the chairman of the Convention Committee, show that more than five hundred men will be in attendance. New York City delegates will go on a special train. A factor working in favor of a large attendance has been the reduced railroad fare obtained by the able and active Convention Committees.

In point of entertainments provided for the delegates, all previous records will be eclipsed; the climax being the Grand Movie Ball, which will be held in the big State Armory on Thursday night, April 7. Previous mention has been made of the galaxy of stars which the Rochester men, who visited New York City for this purpose, have been able to obtain.

The convention will elect a complete set of officers. It is arranged to have the election occur on the last day of the convention. The opening of the convention takes place on the same day, which has been set for the hearing of the Clayton Censorship Bill, which is scheduled to be held at Albany. As a result, a special committee, to be appointed by the president, will come to Albany on the day the convention opens and will register its opposition to the bill on behalf of both the exhibitors and the motion picture theatre-going public. Owing to the unforeseen coincidence of dates, the convention at Rochester, after opening at 1:30 P.M., will go through some preliminary routine business and then adjourn to await the return of the delegation from Albany and listen to their report. The real business of the convention will then begin and the pace from then on will be rapid right to the end.

Screen Interests Protests Clara Hamon in Films

The report that Clara Smith Hamon, recently acquited of the charge of slaying Jake L. Hamon, is to appear in pictures, has aroused the ire of many screen organizations. Among those who have passed resolution or taken other steps to show their disapproval of the appearance of Mrs. Hamon on the screen are the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry; the Rocky Mountain Screen Club, of Denver, Col.; the American Exhibitors' Association of Western Pennsylvania; the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York State; the Affiliated Picture Interests of California, and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Indiana.

Flynn Bill Will Not Pass This Session, Is Report

The Flynn bill, of interest to motion picture operators and on which a hearing was held at Albany, N. Y., on March 15, will not be passed by the present session of the legislature, according to the best information. The bill still remains in cities committee and there is no likelihood of its being reported out between now and April 15, when the New York State Legislature will adjourn. It is understood that while there has been no open opposition to the bill, that certain forces have been at work beneath the surface with sufficient strength to tie the bill up in committee.

Frank B. Rodgers Now with Robertson-Cole

Frank B. Rogers, until recently traveling sales manager for J. Stuart Blackton Productions, releasing through Pathe, has been appointed traveling sales manager for Robertson-Cole, and has assumed his new duties. He will be constantly in the field for Robertson-Cole representing its sales organization in various parts of the country.

Mr. Rogers comes to his new position after a thorough training, the earlier part of which was obtained in the Middle West. He entered the ranks of the motion picture industry several years ago as a salesman for George Klein, in Chicago, where he sold Essanay product.

Shipman Sails for Europe

Ernest Shipman will be one of the passengers of the S. S. Duca degli Abbruzzi, which sails for Genoa, Italy, on April 2. While no announcement was made as to the object of his trip abroad, it was stated that Mr. Shipman was going to participate in a series of conferences, already arranged for, with important financial and motion picture interests in London, Paris and Turin, Italy. He will be gone for at least four weeks.

Over $2,500,000 Realized for Hoover Relief Fund

THE National Association of the Motion Picture Industry announces that the motion-picture industry's recent campaign for Hoover Relief Fund has been a profound success. Through the efforts of exhibitors, producers, distributors and allied branches of the industry more than the industry's quota towards the Fund was realized. Belated reports from many states have been received during the last few days by Charles C. Pettijohn of the Motion Picture committee which conducted the drive and he is now working out a final report with comptroller Rick of the European Relief Council. This report will be ready in about a week. While no total figures have been given out, the returns to date indicate that the industry has been responsible for contributions in excess of $2,500,000, declares the statement, from the National Association's headquarters.

John P. Harris, who headed the drive in the Pittsburgh section of Pennsylvania, has turned over to the treasurer of the Relief Council $55,058.51 which was raised in the theatres of his section. This sum does not include the sums sent direct by exhibitors to the New York headquarters.

L. M. Miller, regional chairman for Kansas, has turned over to the state chairman of the Relief Council, $35,000 raised by the theatres in Kansas. A report submitted by E. V. Richards of the Saenger Amusement Company shows that the New Orleans territory has raised $30,000 for the Relief Fund.

With several counties still to be heard from, Indianas contribution to the fund has reached $10,691.98, according to reports from E. H. Bingham, regional chairman for Indiana.

Illinois Exhibitors Plan Convention in April

At a well attended meeting of the directors of the Illinois Exhibitors' Alliance in Chicago on March 29th, it was decided to call a convention to be held April 11th and 12th at the Hotel Sherman, Chicago. The first session is to open at two o'clock Monday afternoon.

The principal business to come before the convention is the consideration of the Blue Law and Censorship legislation now pending in the state legislature, and the election of delegates to attend the national convention of the Moving Picture Theatre Owners of America at Minneapolis. A large attendance is predicted owing to the growing interest in organization and the important matters to be considered which effect the well being of every exhibitor in Illinois.

"Four Horsemen" to Open in Four More Cities

With "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" breaking records for box-office receipts and advance sale of tickets at the Lyric theatre, New York, Metro Pictures Corporation, announces that they are planning for premieres of the picture in the immediate future in Detroit, Boston, Philadelphia and San Francisco.

Precision to Enlarge Sales Facilities

Officials of Precision Machine Co., figuring in reorganization plan. Wm. C. Francke, Ass't Gen. Mgr.; E. M. Porter, Gen. Mgr.; and W. E. Greene, Sales Manager.

AN announcement of interest to the the equipment and projector division of the motion picture industry, is contained in the statement just issued by General Manager E. M. Porter of the Precision Machine Company, Simplex Projector builders.

Mr. Porter said in part: "It has long been my desire in connection with our policy of exclusive distribution to add to the personnel of our Simplex organization, which in the past has functioned most wonderfully. But anticipating a far greater volume of business, as indicated by distributors' surveys, we find it necessary to enlarge some of our departments, outside of the manufacturing division, and to this end we have evolved plans that call for greater floor space, in which to house the numerous exploitation and sales units, each of them under a most efficient and highly trained head.

"William C. Francke, who for the past several years headed our publicity and advertising departments has been selected to fill the newly created office of assistant general manager of the company, while Walter Greene will be general sales manager with a most comprehensive sales system and carefully selected working force already organized.

"Various departments for the marketing of Simplex specialties and accessories now in mind have been organized and this, together with our new plans for the maintenance and rendering of unequalled service to our distributors and users will provide us with organization methods that are as yet unheard of in the projector's industry."

Mr. Porter who has been responsible for the building up of the present sales organization will now devote a great deal of his time to organization matters that are now to become effective, and will have another statement to make within a very short time concerning the policy of the Precision Company in the future.

Mr. Francke is well known to the trade since his entry into the industry in 1908 in the city of Boston where his political career together with his activity in the motion picture business won him many friends and he has greatly added to his popularity since his connection with the Simplex organization.

Walter Greene started his career in the equipment world when he entered the sales department of the Thomas A. Edison Company in Orange, N. J., in 1909 and has been well known and a leading figure ever since to supply men of the industry. Mr. Greene steps into the office of general sales manager for Precision with a world of experience and training behind him.

Thirteen Companies Incorporated in New York

Thirteen companies, with a total capitalization of $741,500, were incorporated in the secretary of state's office, at Albany, N. Y., during the past week, for the purpose of entering the motion picture business. These included the R. and R. Sales Corporation, New York city, with a capitalization of $1,500, and with Anna Prager, I. B. Gutzler of New York and Sal Sosnowitz of Stamford, as directors:

Major Theatres Company, Inc., New York, $1,000, Harvey L. Watkins, A. Frank Jones, J. A. Hopkins, New York; Pordell Projector, Inc., $5,000, William E. Waddell, E. M. Porter, B. C. Elliott, New York; Weinsil Amusement Corporation, Brooklyn, $10,000, William Knecht, Elias Liebert, Terrence Mullan, New York; Frontier Theatres, Inc., $100,000, E. S. Cramer, W. H. Northrup, T. D. Powell, Buffalo; Folio Films, Inc., $100,000, A. E. Baerman, Brooklyn, W. J. Russell, Alfred Ross, Woodhaven; Hammond Export and Import Company, Inc., $30,000, M. M. Henschel, Ridgefield Park, N. J., A. H. Bogan, Brooklyn, R. J. Riley, New York; Robbins Syracuse Company, Inc., $227,500, Nathan Robbins, Julius Rothstein, Barney Lumberg, Utica; James W. Brooks and Staff, $500, J. M. Vincent, Syracuse; Amsterdam Theatres Corporation, $1,000, H. L. Watkins, A. F. Jones, J. A. Hopkins, New York; Betamy Service, Inc., screens and slides, $5,000, A. F. Tanzer, Ralph Myerson, C. M. Rosenthal, New York; Yankee Film Corporation, $10,000, Samuel Borchardt, James R. Boswell, William A. Leith, New York.

Plan to Entertain Elks on Coast

THE Motion Picture Industry of the West Coast will take a most active part in the entertainment of the one thousand Elks, who will visit the city July 10 to 16 to attend the Annual Convention, for up to this time plans have been made which promise exceptional publicity possibilities for the film companies, which will radiate advantageous publicity to all sections of the country.

The most spectacular feature of the film industry entertainment will be an electric parade consisting of floats representing the biggest studios of the Coast. This parade will be lighted by power generated on the trucks, and being independent of trolley wires or other kinds of connections can be sent over the more attractive boulevards of Los Angeles.

The arrangements for the Elks Convention are in charge of Motley Flint, president of the Los Angeles Trust & Savings Bank, and he has enlisted the aid of a committee, composed of B. P. Fineman, of Katherine MacDonald Studios; Clark Thomas, of Thomas H. Ince Studios, and M. C. Levee, of Robert Brunton Studios. A canvass of the studios has already been made and plans for floats have been submitted to the General Committee by practically all of the leading studios, including Universal, Ince, Metro, Selig, Mayer, Ray, Fox, MacDonald, Vitagraph, Brunton, Hampton, Sennett, Hollywood Studios, Roach, and others.

The plan to be carried out provides for the use of floats prepared for the Elks parade to be preserved and used later for a similar parade as a part of the entertainment for the Annual Convention of the American Bankers' Association to be held in Los Angeles October 3 to 10, which will be attended by more than 4,000 delegates, representing almost 100 per cent of the banking interests of the nation. The two conventions will offer the production department of the film industry a most valuable opportunity to demonstrate the stability of the industry from the standpoint of direction and such a demonstration to the exceptional class of citizens who will attend the Elks Convention and the delegates of banking institutions who will visit Los Angeles later has never previously been offered.

In addition to the spectacular feature given by the film industry at the two conventions, the studios will take part in other entertainment features.

Lubin to Form Foreign Production Unit

"Pop" Sigmund Lubin, pioneer motion picture producer, and his daughter, Emma Lubin Lowry, wife of Ira M. Lowry, director-general of the Betzwood Film Company, sailed for Germany aboard the steamship Mongolia on Monday, for the formation of a production unit abroad. Their plans include the amalgamation of the more prominent concerns in Italy, France, Spain, Germany and Vienna for the production of pictures adaptable to the needs of this country.

Fees collected from the motion-picture interests during the fiscal year ended June 20, 1920, in Pennsylvania, for the examination of films by the State Board of Censors, cost the industry $87,250, more than the State paid in salaries to the members of the board and the board's employees. This was revealed in the board's annual report just made public in Harrisburg, the State capital.

There was a total of 11,066 films examined by the censors, and this resulted in the modification, disapproval or reconstruction of 1,705 subjects. Forty-four subjects were disapproved, 154 were reconstructed, and 1,507 were modified. The report shows the board collected a total of $87,250 for the examination of original and duplicate reels during this period; $3,509 for the issue of substituted approval seals and $1,680 in fines.

The report of disbursements showed $7,486 spent for contingent and traveling expenses out of an allotment of $25,000; $7,899 for salaries of members of the board, out of an allotment of $15,800 and $41,626 for salaries of employes of the board, out of an allotment of $92,800.

Prepare for New York Censor Hearing

ALBANY (Special). — Arrangements have been completed for the public hearing which will be held in Albany, N. Y., Tuesday afternoon, April 5, on the Clayton censorship bill. It will be the biggest demonstration ever made by the motion picture industry in New York state. Sydney S. Cohen, president of the M. P. T. O. A. announces that the speakers opposing the bill will include D. W. Griffith, Thomas Dixon, author of "The Clansman," Sophie Irene Loeb, Palmer Canfield, Jr., of Kingston, representing the New York State Conference of Mayors, and either Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, or the vice-president of that organization.

William A. Brady also appeared in Albany, Wednesday, and spent the afternoon in and about the State Senate. He announced that Irvin Cobb and Rex Beach, representing the authors, would be heard Tuesday in opposition to the bill.

A petition containing over 250,000 names of persons who are against the bill, will also be handed over to the committee before whom the hearing is held. Pertinent slides are being sent to every motion picture theatre in New York state as a part of the campaign to defeat the bill.

Plans for Irish Relief Drive Perfected

Organization plans for participation of motion picture theatres throughout the United States in the campaign to raise funds for the Relief of Suffering in Ireland are well under way. Telegrams have been sent by the executive officers of the American Committee for Relief in Ireland to fifty-three prominent motion picture exhibitors requesting that they act as chairman of the campaign in their respective localities. These exhibitors are the same men who conducted the Hoover Drive so successfully in their territories.

No set rules have been adopted for the gathering of funds for relief in Ireland. The chairman in each locality is expected to organize a committee and adopt whatever plan of campaign may appeal to him as the best adapted to secure the largest amount of money.

Newcastle, Ind., Organizes Against Blue Sunday

Exhibitors of Newcastle, Indiana, have started to combat a movement of the churches to close the photoplay houses on Sunday. The blue laws have not been enforced in the town for five years and things went serenely until recently when the ministerial association conducted a straw vote in the churches and published figures purporting to show that 1,788 persons were against Sunday movies and only 61 for.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 220 SO. STATE ST.

Ben W. Beadell, who retired as Chicago manager of the Stoll Film Corporation, when that company made its new selling arrangements with Pathe, is considering some very favorable offers and will announce his new connection in the course of the week. Probably no exchange manager has more friends than Ben, and they all hope to see him remain in Chicago.

Buddy Crump, popular film salesman, intends abandoning the motion picture field and going into the stock and bond business where he will make a success as he did as a film salesman, according to the prediction of his friends.

Harry Weiss has returned from a trip over the territory and as a result of his first hand contact with exhibitors, is optimistic over the business outlook in the motion picture field. He reports that exhibitors, generally, are looking for a good Summer, but the tendency is to insist on getting better pictures at lower prices.

George Oestricher has sold his Forest Park theatre to John King, who already has taken possession. It is understood Mr. King intends making some improvements in the house and will show a line of high grade features.

William Esch has purchased 120 feet of ground in the rear of his Princess theatre at New Castle, Indiana, and will enlarge that theatre so it will accommodate 1200 persons. Workmen will start remodeling this house on May 1st, according to Mr. Esch, and push the work as rapidly as possible.

Maurice Zelechower of the Orpheum theatre, Waukegan, has just taken over the Majestic theatre of that city and will conduct it as a first-class vaudeville and road show house, also showing moving pictures.

Citizens of La Porte, Indiana, within the next few days, will have a splendid new place of amusement. It is the Central theatre, owned by Reddington and Root, which will seat sixteen hundred persons. Final plans for the opening of this now are being made.

The Amusement Supply Company has opened up its new show rooms and offices at 740-42 S. Wabash avenue. General Manager Benson looks for a marked revival in the accessory business within the next few weeks and reports that considerable buying is being done by exhibitors at the present time.

Max Levey, former manager of Robertson-Cole's Chicago exchange, and Maurice Kline, another widely known Chicago film man, have opened a new state right exchange under the name of Klimax Pictures, and already are doing business at their new offices, 17 E. Seventh street.

The Elba theatre at 31st and Indiana avenue, has been purchased by Fred Rosenthal, formerly booker for Robertson-Cole's Chicago exchange. It is understood that he will make considerable improvements in the house.

The death of E. E. Frisby, widely known as owner of a circuit of theatres in the smaller Northern Indiana towns at his headquarters in Angola on March 22nd, has brought sorrow to his many friends. His son has been appointed administrator of his estate and will personally handle the theatrical business.

Work of remodelling and improving theatres goes merrily on and is the best proof of the confidence of exhibitors in the future of the business. The latest announcement is that the Temple theatre, Mishawaka, Indiana, will be enlarged to a seating capacity of one thousand entailing an extension of frontage of fifty feet. The house formerly held four hundred persons.

The following changes in the sales force of Superior Screen Service became effective April 1st. Southside territory S. Keeley, formerly of the Fox Film Corporation; Westside territory A. L. Hoffman, formerly Illinois salesman, Superior; Northside territory R. H. Hadfield, formerly Indiana salesman, Superior, the Illinois territory remaining with Wm. Weiss and the Indiana territory going to L. K. Eagan, formerly manager of First National branch at Buffalo, New York.

Harry Weiss announces that the following pictures have been taken over for distribution by Superior Screen Service in the territory served by that organization. "The Man Who Trifled," "The Tame Cat," released through Arrow Film Company of New York; Fifty-two Kineto Reviews, and the six-reel feature, "Welcome Children," through the National Exchanges of New York, and Cissy Fitzgerald Comedies through the Producers Security Corporation of New York.

I. L. Lesserman returned to Chicago on March 25th after two month's vacation spent at Hollywood and said he was glad to be back at the big desk in Universal's Chicago exchange, although he enjoyed the outing very much. During his absence Universal Exchange moved from its old quarters in the Consumers Building to 831 S. Wabash. Maurice Helman, who has been in charge during Mr. Lesserman's absence, is planning to leave shortly for French Lick where he will rest up after his hard work of the past eight weeks.

South Bend, Indiana, is to have a splendid new moving picture theatre, according to plans just completed by Ezra Rhodes, owner of the La Salle theatre of that city. Mr. Rhodes has purchased a site for the new house, a lot 98 x 165 feet, and will start building operations early in the Fall.

Joseph Zelechower has severed his connection with the Universal Film Company and expects to tie up with another distributing organization shortly.

Barney Kregar, formerly associated with Universal's Chicago exchange, has joined Goldwyn's Chicago sales force and will cover Northern Illinois for the latter company.

F. O. Nielson, one of the most widely known film men in the Chicago district, has joined Universal's sales staff and will cover the north and northwest sides of Chicago.

Manager Tarbell, of Vitagraph, has been absent from his desk all week making a tour of the territory so as to come in personal contact with the exhibitors.

G. A. Ferguson, of the Lincoln Theatre, Valparaiso, Indiana, has fully recovered from his recent illness after twelve weeks in the hospital and is back on the job. Another Indiana exhibitor, who also has recovered from an illness, is Wm. Lipps, of the Princess Theatre, Alexandria, who is again at work after a ten day's lay off.

It is reported that Louis Gumbiner, well known Chicago theatre-owner, will erect one of the country's biggest moving picture houses in Los Angeles, California, where he already has acquired an excellent down town site for the house.

J. Mulhauser, personal representative of Mack Sennett, who has been in Chicago helping put over "The Small Town Idol," at Barbee's Loop Theatre, where the picture established new house records for attendance, will return to New York within a few days after visiting two or three central west film centers.

Manager Goldman, of Associated Producers' Chicago exchange, is optimistic on business conditions and declares his exchange has been doing an exceptionally good business. At present he is getting the booking of the new two-reel Mack Sennett's under way and states that Lubliner & Trinz and Ascher Brothers circuits already have signed up.

Scout Younger spent a week at the Chicago Rothacker Laboratory revamping the picture, "Life of the Younger Brothers," with which he is making personal appearances. Only by several hours did he miss meeting Jesse James, Jr., who was at the plant in connection with the printing of the photoplays based on the life of his father, the famous outlaw, of which the interior scenes were produced in the Rothacker studio.

Gollos Enterprises have established an unusual record by having two important feature productions playing simultaneously in the Chicago loop. Barbee's opened Sunday with "The Hidden Light," featuring Dolores Cassinelli, and the event was given considerable publicity by the Chicago newspapers, and several quarter-page ads were run to help put the picture over. The second feature was "Deliverance," which opened at the Playhouse Theatre on Sunday for a two week's run. Gollos Enterprises recently purchased this George Kleine production for the State of Illinois, and the fact that Helen Keller happened to be playing at the Majestic Theatre, Chicago, during the run of the picture, was taken advantage of in exploiting this run at the Playhouse. A large amount of newspaper advertising was also placed on this feature.

Al. Kahn, who was in Chicago this week, announces that at a director's meeting of the Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., in New York City last week he was given a franchise for the states of Iowa and Nebraska, which was formerly owned by Greater Productions, Inc. Offices soon will be opened in Omaha and Des Moines, and great results are looked forward to in that territory.

Mr. Kahn will release Selig's latest animal serial, "The Miracles of the Jungle," 13, Chester's two-reel animal comedies; 52 Chester's one-reel comedies; 26 one-reel comedies produced by Henri Lehrman; 26 one-reel comedies produced by Warner Bros.; 13 two-reel Monte Banks comedies; 26 new Hallroom Boys comedies; 26 Burlingham Travel Adventures. "Dangerous Toys," five reel, featuring William Desmond, and other high-class subjects, which will be announced in the near future.

Music and The Picture

Something About the Music Clubs

By Charles D. Isaacson

DURING the convention of the association, an interesting speech was delivered by Mrs. Anne Oberndorfer, of the Federated Music Clubs. Being a woman and a clubwoman, many exhibitors and producers wanted to see her at close range, and were very much amazed to find her a charming lady, and one who seemed to be eager to improve conditions with the co-operation of the motion picture people, and not with the spirit of the Blue Flag and censorship. The censorship agitators and the blue-law distillers have for some reason or other come to mean club-women to many picture folks; but there is no reason to condemn the clubs for the sins of some offenders. Just because Anthony Comstock happened to be cast in the figure of a man, was not enough cause to condemn masculinity.

My reason for asking Mr. Oberndorfer to speak to the convention was that I wished a very gifted musical lady to express the hopes of the women in relation to motion picture music, and I know that those who were present were given the most favorable impressions. Exhibitors went back home convinced that the club women—especially the music club—women were worth while cultivating. Mrs. Oberndorfer and Mrs. Chapman (who represented the Motion Picture Committee), both agreed that they would introduce measures for arousing the membership of the country to go forth with a spirit of co-operation to discuss music with the local manager and motion picture conductor.

Now, I want to give you a rapid sketch of the music clubs as I have seen them at work, and I believe that what I have to say will serve to annihilate any latent antagonism you may feel toward the organization, and will begin to look upon them as very important allies, surely very good friends.

The picture is of Florida, during early March, in Tampa near the orange groves redolent with perfume, where while Northerners shiver in their blustery cities, the home-folks and tourists go about in their summer flannels and straw hats.

I had been asked to come to the city, to speak to the Club Women of Florida in convention assembled. Susan Dyer, of Winter Park (head of the Rollins College Conservatory), is president of the State Federation. Mrs. McKay, of Tampa, was president of the Hostess Club, and there were present: Miss Bertha Foster, vice-president of the Jacksonville Music Club and Director of the School of Musical Arts; Mrs. Laura V. Rische, president, Bartow Music Club; Miss Margaret A. Haas, of the Music Teachers' Association of Jacksonville; Mrs. James Y. Wilson, president of Ladies' Friday Musicale of Jacksonville; Mrs. W. G. Brownlee, president of the Carema Club of St. Petersburg; Mrs. James Hirsch, chairman of general publicity of the Orlando Music Club; Miss Adelaide Sterling Clark, Miami Music Clubs; Miss Bonna Vera Murphy, member of the Woman's Club of Madisonville, Ky. I am just giving you a little idea of the kind of people who were present, and I don't mind pointing out that the Florida Federation is probably the smallest in the whole country, for Florida has under a million population. But the point which I desire to impress, is that every city of the state was represented, and that the best musical influences of each city were in the body, and that the same general ambitions of the Floridians applies to the music club women of every state in the Union.

Why was I summoned to Tampa, to travel fifteen hundred miles down and fifteen hundred miles back, and to stay there just for one day?

Because the women wanted to know about the very things we have been discussing in these columns, and which I have been doing in my New York Globe concerts of education.

They set aside an entire day for these ideas. They had me tell them to the delegates, in the convention assembled. They carried me over to the high school where the youth of the city and the educational authorities listened. They arranged a luncheon, and they had the Mayor, Charles Brown, present to hear, along with the important business men and heads of the Chamber of Commerce. Then at a reception where the leading members of the fair sex came to hear, and then a banquet for others, and then a big public meeting. And always the same discussion—the matter we have carried forward in these columns.

I told them about the need for utilizing every kind of agency which is spreading good music—and what other force is comparable to the motion picture theater? That there is something more in music than just sounds—pictures in every composition, and in every composition an aid for the bettering of pictures—chiefly I impressed upon the women that their duty lies in getting out and supporting the efforts for music and acting as missionaries for the art.

But it is not of what I have said, that this brief article is written. It is what the women did! They fell right in line! They proved the most eager, enthusiastic, ardent supporters that I have seen. The Tampa delegation being at home were in the best position to show the stuff of which they were made. They had their Mayor and their business men on hand, and they immediately started an effort which will stimulate musical interest in their city as it has never been aroused before! Mrs. McKay headed it off. She was backed by Mrs. J. C. Shaddick, the chorale director (and also the husband of Mrs. Shaddick, himself a singer and teacher of music). Mrs. McKay was also supported by her husband, one of the leading business men of the South. Then there was Mrs. Jackson and many others. The newspapers were interested . . . and the thing I want to impress very strongly is this:

IF THE MOTION PICTURE MEN OF TAMPA ARE ALIVE AT ALL (AND I KNOW THEY ARE AMONG THE LIVEST IN THE SOUTH), THEY WILL BE AT

BULLETIN OF THE ASSOCIATION OF MOTION PICTURE MUSIC CONCERTS

Many conservatories are opening motion picture departments; as for instance the Toronto Conservatory of Music (Canada) which is a direct result of the demands made at the convention.

The New York Chamber of Commerce of Exhibitors is instituting a music department for the interrelation of the exhibitors and music. Mr. William Brandt's letter in this issue is highly interesting, in this connection.

The first of the matters between exhibitors and the musician's union of official character is now up between President Joseph Weber and your temporary chairman, the undersigned. The question is involved in Andrew Cobe's request (See letter from Lawrence, Mass., in this issue).

MEMBERSHIP

The membership is coming along nicely—many applications arriving every day, but the real drive will not come until the executive board is completed and functioning. . . . Send your application right away.

EXHIBITORS' REPORTS ON NEW RELEASES

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATERS

FAMOUS PLAYERS

The Passionate Pilgrim—

This picture was only mediocre and it brought forth only fair box office receipts. (East.)

Fair picture. Fair business. Fair performance throughout. (Middle West.)

Forbidden Fruit—

Picture up to the usual De Mille standard as to photography and settings but story seemed to be somewhat improbable. Played to average business for a week. (Middle West.)

The Kentuckians—

What's Worth While—

This is a splendid feature picture and good box office attraction. We did big business for the week it played at our house. (Middle West.)

Chickens—

Not as good as previous McLean-May productions and the "feminine half" of this combination was sadly missed. Still the picture was good and drew well. (East.)

Straight Is the Way—

Above average of crook pictures with some excellent comedy in it but did not seem to pull very well. (Middle West.)

The Easy Road—

Our patrons seemed to like this one, which played to excellent business for one week. (Middle West.)

Thomas Meighan draws no matter what sort of picture, or role he has. This production an excellent one, and played to excellent business. (East.)

The Jucklins—

Worthy of even better attendance but receipts were very pleasing. (East.)

The Price of Possession—

Does not come up to Ethel Clayton's standard. A fair house all week, but an unsatisfactory picture. (Middle West.)

To Please One Woman—

Nothing exceptional either about the production or results from playing it. (Middle West.)

The Frontier of the Stars—

This is rather an average picture. It started with big business but this decreased towards the end of the week. (West.)

The Witching Hour—

Draggy, disconnected—somebody always going somewhere after something. Shame to waste the talents of a star of Elliot Dexter's calibre in such stuff as this. Cast only fair—Mary Alden superb, as usual! (East.)

Brewster's Millions—

Fair picture to fair business. (East.)

The Ghost in the Garret—

Fair business; fair picture. (East.)

Beau Revel—

A splendid picture, well made, well acted, beautifully staged, but for some reason or other it didn't pull them in and business was only average. (East.)

Idols of Clay—

Perhaps I'm wrong—this may be a great picture—but my patrons agreed with me that it was the reverse. Consider it an average program picture, but by no means worthy of the featuring it has had. (East.)

O'Malley of the Mounted—

One of the best Bill Hart has done and pleased the Hart fans. (West.)

Heliotrope—

The Testing Block—

Hart has gone back. Box office value of name nil. Good production, but not a sensation. (Middle West.)

FIRST NATIONAL

Peaceful Valley—

The Old Swimmin' Hole—

A very good Charles Ray picture, but failed to please majority. Played to exceptionally poor business for seven days. (Middle West.)

The Kid—

Mamma's Affair—

Played to a capacity house the entire week, but it would not be fair to give the credit to the picture alone, as it was run in conjunction with a week's musical festival, featuring works of local composers. (Middle West.)

Scrambled Wives—

Man, Woman, Marriage—

Drew very well despite the fact that it was the week before Easter. (East.)

GOLDWYN

Hold Your Horses—

Great! Played this with a special St. Patrick's Day program and cleaned up. Moore is immense in roles of this sort. (East.)

The Song of the Soul—

Receipts pleasing on this one. (East.)

His Own Law—

A fine picture, but did only fair business. (Middle West.)

Godless Men—

Comfortable business, which is better than expected Holy Week. Picture has great possibilities as a drawing card under normal times. (Middle West.)

Roads of Destiny—

The North Wind's Malice—

Played to a capacity house for a week, principally because of the fact that Vera Gordon, who is featured in the picture, played in vaudeville here the same week, which resulted in some effective advertising. (Middle West.)

Honest Hutch—

A great box office attraction. The picture offers a large field in exploitation. (Middle West.)

Earthbound—

An exceptionally fine picture, beautifully made, but a poor drawing card. The subject is hardly movie material and it failed to appeal. (East.)

METRO

The Little Fool—

Very good. The picture follows the story well and it holds an audience as only a Jack London story can. (East.)

Extravagance—

A program picture with nothing out of the ordinary to recommend it. (East.)

Billions—

The Greater Claim—

Good picture and drew fine. (East.)

Are All Men Alike—

The Price of Redemption—

This is a big picture, from a spectacular point of view and Lytell's work is satisfactory, but it is decidedly draggy and has little to hold on the spectator's interest. Business was fair. (East.)

UNITED ARTISTS

The Nut—

Fairbanks has slipped in this picture. It is much poorer than the "Mark of Zorro" and while many patrons came to see him the first few days, the rest of the week's business was poor. (East.)

Went over big. Some adverse criticism to the effect that it was not up to star's standard. Receipts fine. (East.)

Fine picture which brought good business. (West.)

Brought big business. Pleased my patrons and was a drawing-card. (West.)

Love Light—

A departure from the usual Pickford picture. Miss Pickford displays that she is fitted for emotional as well as comedy roles. Good film, and an excellent box office feature. (Middle West.)

PATHE

The Killer—

One of the best Westerns I've ever played. First day's gross surpassed anything for fifteen weeks back. My audiences demand Westerns, and they went after this! (East.)

The Devil—

Now or Never—

Splendid comedy that went over very big at two simultaneous first runs. (Middle West.)

UNIVERSAL

Colorado—

Average picture. Business about as usual. (West.)

Outside the Law—

Created a record for a two weeks' run heretofore untouched in this section. A picture you can go the limit on in exploitation—and the picture will bear you out in the good things you say about it. (East.)

A splendid picture with thrilling plot, which confirmed Priscilla Dean as a favorite with our patrons. Did splendid business for week. (Middle West.)

Pink Tights—

Gladys Walton is gaining a following among the admirers of "flapper stuff" and this picture, while it isn't a knockout by any means, is entertaining. (East.)

REALART

The Furnace—

The Plaything of Broadway—

Pretty poor stuff. Justine doesn't live up to expectations, after all the press-agent flub-dub about her. (East.)

The Outside Woman—

Just about as silly as it is possible for such a picture to be. Took it off after a three day run, and am sorry I played it at all. (East.)

Out of the Chorus—

ASSOCIATED PRODUCERS

The Small Town Idol—

Sennett has given us one of the best comedies of the year in this picture and it is a laughing success from start to finish. Broke house records first week of its stay here and we are holding it for a second week. (Middle West.)

Down Home—

SELZNICK

Broadway and Home—

World's Apart—

Just a fair picture which attracted only fair business. (East.)

FOX

The Road Demon—

The Cheater Reformed—

EQUITY

Hush—

Just an average picture. About usual business. (West.)

ROBERTSON-COLE

The Stealers—

This is a good picture, but is too much of a "steal" on "The Miracle Man," and follows too closely on the latter's heels. Consequently it fails to thrill very much and the box office receipts were only fair. (East.)

Kismet—

Fair houses this week. Second run. (East.)

VITAGRAPH

The Whisper Market—

Good little picture, star well cast. (East.)

STATE RIGHTS

Mid-Channel—

Only a fair picture, but played to a good house all week, helped along by a live comedy, "The Punch of the Irish," which luckily was shown the same week in which St. Patrick's Day came. (Middle West.)

Isobel—

Had packed houses with this picture. Audiences were very much pleased with it. (West.)

The Parish Priest—

A picture that pleases a certain element of every audience. Poor run on account of Holy Week. (East.)

BUTTERFLY
WALLACE REID IN
"THE LOVE SPECIAL"
An Excursion to Joyland for his admirers is provided by Wallace Reid in his latest screen success. See the dynamic star as an engineer pushing a railroad through a mountain. He has no time for pink teas, but when the daughter of his boss breezes into camp SHE SOON LEARNS WHO IS HER ENGINEER! It's a non-stop story with the kind of punch that only Reid can deliver. It speeds through your blood a mile a minute.
EASTER GREETINGS! GOOD MUSIC! DELIGHTFUL SURPRISE!
SPECIAL—WE HAVE AN EASTER EGG FOR YOU COME AND SEE WHAT IT CONTAINS

Novel "Passion" Prologue

Los Angeles Showman Stages High Class Presentation Feature

S. BARRETT McCORMICK'S initial presentation effort incident to his affiliation with the Sol Lesser-Gore Brothers interests in Los Angeles, was marked by his use of contortionable masques in which the six characters taking part in his prologue to "Passion" were dressed.

With his extreme originality and strong leaning toward the fantastic, Mr. McCormick devised a prologue that took for its theme a quatrain by Omar:

"With Earth's first clay They did the Last Man's Knead,
And then of the last Harvest Sow'd the Seed:
Yes, the first morning of Creation wrote
What the Last Dawn of Reckoning Shall Read."

Consequently, Mr. McCormick took for the theme and title of his prologue "Clay," and proceeded through a series of dances which were staged under the personal direction of Marion Morgan, to show how the basic human instincts are controlled by Passion—which is virtually the story of Du Barry.

The stage set depicted the "forest of Life" with the settings done in rather vivid colors—the trees bright and weird and set against a pitch black background. The stage floor was black as was the ceiling giving the effect of interminable space.

Three women representing the Three Virtues, and three men portraying "The Golden Lure," "Lust," and "Destruction," formed his cast.

The Three Virtues danced first into the scene. Then entered "The Golden Lure," to whom the Virtues paid heed; then Lust and Destruction. In fear, the Virtues attempt to draw away; but the Lure, Lust and Destruction pursue them.

During this dance, the castle set against the rear drop begins to quiver and crumble while the orchestra scores cues in the drums of Destruction. As the castle walls fall apart, the Scarlet Spirit of Passion is revealed rising from the works of Clay. The prelude closes with the symbols of Sin dragging the Virtues to the Altar of Passion.

Mr. McCormick's prologue is by far the most vivid and striking yet conceived for "Passion," and the fact that he introduced the contortionable masques adds extra interest to his enterprise.

Rouda Brings Scottish Atmosphere to the Merrill

A very Scottish atmosphere was brought to Ascher's Merrill theatre, Milwaukee, for the week's showing of "Bunty Pulls the Strings," by H. M. Rouda, manager of the theatre.

Patrons began to feel the Scotch atmosphere immediately upon entering the lobby of the theatre, for the cashiers were dressed in Highland costumes, the lobby mats were all covered with Scotch plaids and the lobby itself decorated with thistles and heather. The door-man was clad in kilts, and lassies in plaid and tartan ushered the patrons to their seats.

Mr. Rouda engaged a soloist and a bagpiper for the booking of "Bunty Pulls the Strings" and clad them both in Scotch costumes. Many of the old standard Scotch songs, such as "Loch Lomond," "Annie Laurie," "Scots Wha Hae," "Three Draps o' Brandy," Harry Lauder's "Wee Doch and Doris," etc., were sung or played on the pipes.

Unusually Original and Complete Exploitation Campaign Staged at Omaha

AS soon as he had signed contracts booking "The Devil," Harry Goldberg, Managing Director of the Sun, Moon and Muse Theatres, Omaha, announced that he was going to make Omaha "Sit Up." He did. The details of that two weeks' exploitation campaign would make a fair-sized volume; here are the outstanding features:

Mr. Goldberg's enthusiastic lieutenants in the enterprize were his publicity director, N. N. Freudenfeld, and his assistant, Ralph Goldberg, the managing director's younger brother. "The Devil" was booked at the Sun Theatre for the week of March 13. The main idea for advance work was to give the citizens of Omaha a free foretaste of their own theatre Devil every day for two weeks prior to the opening, showing His Satanic Majesty doing "stunts" in the streets and other public places, the same to be duly announced in newspaper display advertising. Here are some sample announcements printed in The World-Herald and The Bee:

"To-morrow, Thursday, at 12 o'clock, Noon, 'The Devil' will climb the Woodmen of the World Building—Watch to-morrow's papers for other devilish tricks that the Devil will do."

"'The Devil' will perform another thrilling feat to-morrow, Friday, at 1:15, at the Nebraska Clothing Company. This is the Devilish feat—tied hand and foot, suspended in midair (upside down) 'The Devil' will release himself and climb the rope to the top of the building.—Saturday, at 1 o'clock 'The Devil' will make the Sun red."

"'The Devil' will even make the Sun red. Nothing is beyond his power. Saturday at 1 p. m., 'The Devil' will again thrill thousands at The Sun Theatre. Saturday night at dusk 'The Devil' will leave by aeroplane from the Ak-Sar-Ben field and fly over the roof of the Sun. 'The Devil' will throw from the plane spectacular fireworks. He will christen the Sun with his fiery rays."

"Keep your eyes on the sky to-night (after darkness), 'The Devil' and Jack Atkinson, of the Atkinson Aviation Company, will bombard the downtown district with 'The Devil's' fiery rays from the sky-Mammoth fireworks display from an altitude of 2,000 feet in the air. Sunday at 1 o'clock the biggest thrill that Omaha has ever known will take place at Ak-Sar-Ben field. Watch Sunday papers."

The judgment of the Sun Theatre management was amply justified. Their "personal Devil" and his open air "stunts" were daily awaited by multitudes. And the thousands crowding the streets were never once disappointed. "The Devil" was on everyone's lips—and the line at the Sun Theatre box office grew longer day by day.

Mr. Goldberg's display newspaper advertisements for the opening were specially designed works of art.

Neither did Mr. Goldberg's house staff neglect any of its opportunities. The lobby and foyer displays conceived and executed by Harry Goldberg, attracted crowds to the front of the theatre for several days prior to the opening. In addition to striking posters, Mr. Goldberg built up a spectacular head of "The Devil" for one side of the lobby. It was outlined in green electric bulbs, and had eyes of red electric bulbs, which glanced about with a startling effect.

An elaborate prologue with ingenious light effects was credited to Mr. Freudenfeld. The prologue was played before a fancy drop hung in 1, with a centre door flanked by spirals of incense rising from urns. A table held "The Devil s" record book as in the picture. Beside the chair back of the table appeared the Butler, as the footlights glowed red. The Devil—George Arliss, in high hat, monocle and opera cloak over evening dress—entered, was relieved of his hat, gloves and cloak by the butler, and introduced himself as "one that lurks in your home and in your neighbors' homes, ever whispering in your ears evil thoughts and evil deeds." As he writes in the book he continues in similar vein. A spotlight concentrates upon him. Finally, as he talks he is enveloped in flames. He disappears in the flames, saying:

"My friends, I warn you again—look out for the Devil—for he may be here among you tonight."

This was the finishing touch of two weeks intensive preparation for the raising of the Sun Theatre on "The Devil" picture.

Novelty Herald Invented by MacDonald

H. K. MacDonald, manager of the Fox theatre, Springfield, Mass., dug up one of the old fashioned geletine mimeographing outfits and used it for getting out a unique herald on "Know Your Men."

The herald, written in long hand, was in the form of an alleged personal letter from Pearl White, reading as follows:

"To whoever picks this up. If you are a woman, take heed—profit by my example! What's happened to me can happen to you.

"When the crisis of your life arrives, and you are faced with the big decision—(as I was)—don't act until you are sure you "KNOW YOUR MEN! On this rests all: KNOW YOUR MEN!

"PEARL WHITE."

Lancaster Exhibitor Gets Out Unique Program

When Manager Robert B. Albert of the Albert theatre, Lancaster, N. Y., celebrated Metro Week, Feb. 27th to March 5th, he got out a very attractive program including a four-page color insert on Nazimova in "Madame Peacock." This highly colored book was given out in the theatre a week in advance and during Metro Week. The big feature of the program, however, was the front page which was some of Mr. Albert's own art work. He drew the attractive border for the week's bill and with the use of some Metro trademarks and the line "Metro Week" at the bottom produced a high satisfactory cover.

The Albert is one of the most attractive theatres in Western New York and Mr. Albert is always attracting attention to his house with unusual exploitation stunts. Several months ago he staged an airplane flight to exploit a picture. He is now planning to bring Webb's Novelty Jazz Band to the Albert as a special attraction.

St. Paul Getting Results with Puzzles

From St. Paul comes an idea which may prove of interest to publicity men throughout the country. It is a puzzle stunt which B. C. Ferriss, publicity director for the St. Paul Finkelstein & Rubin theatres, gave to the St. Paul Daily News.

Each week this paper receives a star portrait of a well-known player, from the F. & R. publicity department. This portrait is cut with the shears into 10 or 12 pieces. The pieces are then laid flat and so mixed as to disguise the identity of the player, and then photographed. Uusually a cut two columns wide and seven inches deep is made. This cut appears on the children's page with the announcement of the previous week's winners. Three prizes are offered by the newspaper to those solving the puzzle, the prizes being passes provided by the F. & R. publicity department, and good for the picture in which the star is to appear.

The greatest value of this stunt seems to us to lie with its position on the children's page of the newspaper. Children have shown a great interest in the puzzle, and at the same time are becoming more and more familiar with the various stars, and therefore increase their interest in motion pictures. These children, it must be remembered, are the photoplay fans of the future.

Phonograph Tie-up Goes Over Again

The phonograph tie-up was used in an effective manner by A. E. Nathan, Paramount exploiteer for the Buffalo territory, when "The Restless Sex" played the Universal theatre, Auburn, N. Y. Nathan arranged the tie-up, obtained the material and dressed the window.

It offered an unusual feature in the huge head of Marion Davies. This was by cutting out the head from the 24 sheet and draping the shoulders with velvet. By the able co-operation of Mr. Schwartzwaider, of the Universal theatre, another window, in a book store, was also obtained to help the showing.

"Free Apples" Exploit De Mille's "Forbidden Fruit"

One hundred boxes of apples were distributed in Seattle, Wash., as part of the exploitation campaign on "Forbidden Fruit," when the picture played at the Coliseum theatre in that city. There were 150 apples in each box, which makes it a simple matter to estimate how many people were reached by the campaign.

The free-apple movement was initiated by A. M. Vogel, Paramount exploiter for Paramount Pictures in Seattle. It took quite a while to arrange the tie-up; but when it was consummated it assumed such immense proportions that the entire city talked about it. The Wenatchee Fruit Exchange was "sold" on the idea as an advertising stunt and agreed to supply and distribute the apples. In each apple a little card was stuck. The face read: "Cecil B. DeMille's 'Forbidden Fruit,' Coliseum Theatre, Beginning March 12. It's a Paramount Picture." The reverse read: "This is Not FORBIDDEN FRUIT. It is the Acme Brand. Ask for it by Name. Wenatchee Fruit Exchange."

A week before "Forbidden Fruit" began its run, the manager of the Coliseum dressed his girl ushers as summer vacationists with straw hats, pumps and silk stockings. Each of the girls carried a long wicker basket from which the fruit was distributed. Outside the theatre the apples were distributed in factories, office buildings, public squares and clubs and restaurants.

The stunt was a tremendous impetus in arousing mouth-to-mouth publicity, and the best part of it was that it didn't involve a cent of expense to the Coliseum theatre.

Attractive cut-out used in a window display on "The Restless Sex" showing recently at the Universal theatre, Auburn, N. Y.

Hugo Riesenfeld has supplied a prologue and epilogue for Sir James M. Barrie's "Sentimental Tommy" at the Criterion Theatre that are unusual in two respects; they are beautiful and distinctive and yet, they go almost unnoticed because they become a part of the picture.

The prologue is a sort of Scotch songfest, with settings especially painted for the production by Herbert Schulze. Josiah Zuro, of The New School of Opera and Ensemble, staged the whole thing under Mr. Riesenfeld's guidance. Betty Andersen starts off the number with "My Lassie." In the numbers that follow Fred Jgel, tenor, and the double quartette play an important part. Principals and ensemble singers are all dressed in the costumes of the period, costumes that recall American colonial days, not the Scotch highlander kilts and cap. Following "My Lassie" comes "Highland Lad My Love Was Born," "Bonnie Doon," "Charley Is My Darlin'" and "Ay, Wakin' Oh."

Coming after a scenic that shows some remarkably beautiful bits of highland and lowland of Scotland, the effect is really charming, especially when costumes, voices and backgrounds blend so well.

In the epilogue all the singers of the prologue appear and in addition the two star solo dancers of the Riesenfeld theatres, Paul Oscard and Vera Myers, become the principals. To the tune of "Bonnie Bells of Scotland," "Robin Adair," "Flow Gently, Sweet Afton," "Who'll Be King but Charlie?" the dancers present charming minuets and other simple dances of the period—while the chorus sings and the Criterion orchestra plays the accompaniment.

Village Theatre Gets Out Excellent Folder

It consists of six page text booklet under the title of "Making a Movie," and containing a lot of information concerning the technical part of picture making, a strip of new film cut from a reel of "Parentage," some advertising for the above mentioned picture and a lot of other interesting information concerning the fifth industry.

The idea was not to sell any particular production, as much as to impress Wilmette people with the magnitude of present-day picture making and to counteract the effect of some people who were expressing dissatisfaction at the so-called "lurid movies."

The booklet has been gotten up with a fine lot of text matter of really interesting nature to any fan. It does not argue about things or make claims, but just gives facts. It is a sort of "What the Picture Patron Ought to Know."

Two views of the presentation number which is being presented at the Criterion theatre, New York, in conjunction with "Sentimental Tommy" opening last Sunday for an indefinite engagement

Boston Store Lends Window to Exploit Picture

Double significance attaches itself to the department store tie up which S. G. Sladdin, Paramount exploiter for Boston effected when "Forbidden Fruit," was having its run at the Park theatre, Boston.

In the first place the department store showed a gorgeous display of laces, silks, velvets and jerseyettes advertising the Park theatre and "Forbidden Fruit." Quite a spread had been made in the newspapers of the expensive gowns worn by Agnes Ayres in this production; and the window dresser of Houghton and Dutton used the posters to mention that the gowns used by Miss Ayres in "Forbidden Fruit" could be reproduced by the store.

Even more significant than the arrangement of the display is the fact that Sladdin's invasion of aristocratic Tremont street marks the first occasion that a department store in the Puritanical Hub has unbended sufficiently to agree to a tie up with a motion picture theatre.

The upset to ironclad tradition may be expected to make the exploitation path a bit easier in the Hub in the future.

Wendt Hires Telephone Operators to Advertise Picture

While the mailing list has always been considered a good friend of exhibitors in getting a personal touch in their advertising, Harold F. Wendt, publicity director of the Rivoli, Toledo, has hit upon a different method of reaching possible patrons.

After spending considerable money for newspaper ads, teasers, street stunts, auto tags, window cards and throw-aways, in exploiting A CHILD FOR SALE, he decided to spend a little more in a different direction. So he handed each of the two operators in one of the leading hotels a sum of money and told them to call each and every phone subscriber, asking the person who answered the call but one question: Are you going to see A CHILD FOR SALE next week at the Rivoli? These operators did this between regular calls and the speed with which they worked on this side work was astonishing. Of course they didn't bother when a line was busy or when no answer was received, and after one day these girls had covered a good portion of the big book.

Another Showman Pulls Stunts for "County Fair"

Realizing the importance of effective publicity campaigns and the box office value of original tie-ups with newspapers and other interest creating institutions, Mr. Sharp conceived the idea of exploiting this picture in a manner that would convey to the people of Fresno the same spirit that the real old time county fair brought to any community.

The street was draped in a festive garb giving one the impression of a gala celebration. Flags and banners galore floated to the breeze. An ancient quadruped sleepily drew about the streets, a decrepit wagon loaded with straw and milk cans and bearing a sign to the effect that the day of days in the county had come to the Liberty theatre. The ushers wore the well known denim jeans and coarse straw hats, bandana handkerchiefs and made quite a hit with the patrons.

There was an effective tie-up with some of the merchants whereby a County Fair page of advertising appeared in the newspapers. The Liberty ad occupying the centre of the page and the advertising of the merchants grouped around it.

A novel feature of lobby display was instituted by putting up cards inviting the people into the side-shows, such as the wild man and the greased pig, etc. Each distinct feature of the picture, such as the big horse-race, was advertised as a feature not to be overlooked when attending "The County Fair."

The box office proved that the results were worth the effort, and the interest of the general public proved without a doubt the value of Mr. Sharp's novel exploitation campaign.

An innovation is to be made in Screen Snapshots, the fan magazine of the screen, beginning with an early issue, announces C. B. C. Film Sales. It is announced that "high spots" of current musical comedy successes will henceforth be shown in each issue of this single-reel release, and that the prettiest girls from each of the productions from which bits are chosen, will bow and smile at their admirers, from the screen.

This new feature of Screen Snapshots comes, it is said, in answer to the requests that have been received recently by Jack Cohn, who, in conjunction with Louis Lewyn, is the producer of Screen Snapshots, from Broadway producers, asking whether or not it would be possible for Mr. Cohn to include in his screen offering various musical comedy bits, and some of the pretty girls these productions boast.

Mr. Cohn declares himself delighted at this opportunity to give film fans an added treat by showing them real Broadway stage favorites at the price of admission to a film theatre.

New Syracuse Exchange Has Big Product

Thos. W. Dooley of Syracuse, formerly executive head of Dooley Exchange, Inc., has opened up a new exchange, the Exhibitors Film and Service Co., at 565 South Salina St., Syracuse, from whence several brand new features will be released with special exploitation by M. G. Ward, formerly publicity director for Gardiner Pictures, Inc. These features include "The Fighting Kentuckians," "Welcome Children" and other powerful dramas.

Short subject releases out of the Exhibitors will be many and varied. The latest release, the Kineto Review, bids fair to become the most popular periodical Up-State, it is stated.

Touraine Film Offers "His Better Half"

The new two-reel comedy, "His Better Half," featuring Flora Finch, produced by the Film Frolics Pictures Corporation and distributed by the Touraine Film Company, is said to get away to a quick start.

Vaudevilles' big headliners, the Berlo Sisters—now the New York Hippodromes incomparable "water nymphs," should add increased box-office value to this out-of-ordinary comedy.

New Music Service Ready

Active Supply Co. to Offer Synchronized Music Scores April 1

AL FRIEDLANDER, sales manager of the Active Supply Co., of New York City, which company is the distributors for New England, Philadelphia, Washington and New York for the Synchronized Music Service, announces that this musical service will be available for exhibitors by April 1. Other offices are to be opened in all the key cities.

This service, it is said, will be available for every type of theatre, from the largest supporting symphony orchestra, down to the smallest theatre with simply a piano. The first production for which the company has prepared a musical score is "The Kid." This is already in use.

A central theme will run through all the scores, and the music will be simplified so that all musicians can readily play it. The scores are timed. On the margins appear notations of the change of scenes and all the subtitles, so that a leader can readily follow the film closely. This is expected to be of value in cities where a film has been censored, as a notation on the margin of a score will make it a simple matter to bring the orchestra up to the film when an elimination is noted. Black arrows on the margin call attention to an approaching subtitle.

Arrangements have been made with all the national distributing companies for the reviewing of pictures three months in advance of publication. This gives ample time for the perfect preparation of the scores.

The scoring will be done by Carl Edourde, director of music at the Strand theatre, New York City; James C. Bradford, for seven years director of music at the Broadway theatre, New York, and the composer of three hundred scores for the large distributing companies, and C. J. Breil, composer of the musical score for "The Birth of a Nation."

Baum, of Equity, on Trip

Sales Manager of Equity and Joan to Visit Many Western Exchanges

LOUIS BAUM, sales manager for Equity and Joan Pictures, left New York this week for a three-month tour of the Western exchanges that will take him to the coast. Baum's first stop will be at Chicago and his last at Los Angeles.

Baum's trip is something more besides a selling-trip. His main purpose will be to study the business conditions in the independent field, and to investigate the state of the buying market. A survey of the field in which Equity and Joan distribute their product is part of the policy of those organizations. Baum believes in meeting the exchangemen, who have bought Equity and Joan product, as often as possible, so that he might keep close tab on the success of the pictures sold. On his previous tours to exchanges, Baum was always eagerly welcomed.

Although Equity and Joan make it a point to render every aid in the way of exploitation and advertising, it is their conviction that what the independent buyer needs at this time above any other is selling co-operation. As a veteran salesman and exchange manager, Baum's help has come in handily during all his travels to the key cities. Baum, it is known, does not believe that the sale of an Equity or Joan picture terminates the interest of the producer in the distributor. He believes in close co-operation with buyers up to the very last run of a picture.

Many exchangemen have written to Baum asking for details on the various Equity and Joan releases. While most of the territory is sold on this product, there are a few remaining districts still open. Before closing any deals with buyers by correspondence, Baum is anxious to meet his customers face to face and to ascertain which buyers are in the best position to handle Equity and Joan releases. The pictures that Baum is especially interested in are "Whispering Devils" and "Keep to the Right" released by Equity and "The Invisible Ray" serial, "She Played and Paid," a feature, and the twelve two-reel Billy West comedies.

Frivol Films to Make Comedy Series

The Frivol Film Company will start work on their first two-reel comedy soon at the Victor studios in New York. These comedies will be directed by Charles Burner, and will star Harry Williams.

Court Declares Kremer Company Solvent

Late Tuesday Justice Newburger, sitting in Part One, Special Term of the Supreme Court, rendered his decision in the case of Victor Kremer, President of the Victor Kremer Film Features, Inc., denying the motion of the plaintiff for a receivership for the company.

The action was brought by Jacob Shenfield, a former employee of the Kremer corporation, and the allegation made, states Mr. Kremer, was that the company was either insolvent or about to become so through the mismanagement of the business.

Justice Newburger in his decision said that even if all that the plaintiff, Shenfield, said were true there was no ground whatever upon which to base an action of the kind, according to a statement from the Kremer office.

Mr. Kremer states that he will shortly institute proceedings against Shenfield.

Exploitation Aids for "Things Men Do"

M. B. Schlesinger, who controls the world distribution rights on "Things Men Do," announces that every exchangeman will be equipt with the necessary exploitation facilities to make the picture a success.

A. L. Feinman, in charge of all advertising and publicity on this feature has prepared an eight-page press book printed on coated paper. News notes, advance stories, special feature articles and many other aids for the exhibitor are contained in it.

The Ritchey Lithograph Company has been retained to do the poster work on "Things Men Do." The picture will have two styles, one, a three and a six-sheet. In addition to the posters, a complete line of advertising accessories including two styles of slides, photographs, lobby display, etc., has been prepared to enable state right buyers to market the production profitably in their respective territories.

Crandall to Represent Equity at Convention

The Equity Pictures Corp. will be represented at the Rochester Convention of New York Exhibitors by Milton D. Crandall, exploitation director for Equity's Clara Kimball Young productions. In the absence of J. I. Schnitzes, President of Equity, Crandall will do the honors of meeting exhibitors and officials of the Convention. Besides taking part in the proceedings, Crandall will publicize Miss Young at Rochester.

"West of the Rio Grande" (Bert Lubin) to National Film Distributing Company, of Atlanta, for Georgia, Florida, Alabama, South Carolina and Tennessee.

"The Parish Priest" (Herman Garfield) to the Exhibitors' Film Exchange, of Milwaukee, for Wisconsin.

"Every Woman's Problem" (Plymouth Pictures, Inc.) to the Empire Film Exchange, of Chicago, for Northern Illinois and Indiana.

"The Evolution of Man" (Aywon Film) to the Commonwealth Pictures, of Chicago, for Northern Illinois.

"When Dawn Came" (Hugh Dierker Production—Producers' Security Corp.) to the Equity Photoplay Co., of Cleveland, O., for Ohio and Kentucky.

"Diana of Star Hollow" (Producers' Security Corp.) to the Equity Photoplay Co., of Cleveland, O., for Ohio and Kentucky.

"The Call from the Wilds" (Pacific Film Co.) to the Equity Photoplay Co., for Ohio and Kentucky.

"Midnight Riders" (Richard Kipling Enterprises) to the Equity Photoplay Co., for Ohio and Kentucky.

"Outlawed" (Richard Kipling Enterprises) to the Equity Photoplay Co., for Ohio and Kentucky.

Film Frolics Active Again

Loss of First Picture by Fire Does Not Discourage This Company

THE disastrous fire which recently destroyed the initial product of the Film Frolics Pictures Corporation, did not destroy the hopes or ambitions of that company, according to an announcement issued this week. The company states that a second comedy, similar to that which was destroyed has been produced.

Having suffered a total loss of the completed first negative, "His Better Half," together with the preliminary output of "first run" prints, not to mention the early takes of a second production, this successful comeback of one of the newer companies bespeaks undaunted pluck and indefatigable energy upon the part of the men behind the organization.

With a wealth of scintilating humor, entirely outside the beaten path of present day screen comedy, this much heralded two-reeler, featuring Flora Finch, is said to have met with the most favorable consideration on the part of a majority of the prospective buyers during the trade showings just prior to the fire. If the new picture will adhere closely to the lines of the first, it is said, and it is expected to meet with a big demand.

Twelve new prints are reported in the hands of representatives covering New York and nearby territory at this writing, with a release date set for week after next, with other territory to be supplied as fast as the laboratory can turn out the finished product.

Unusual Views of Dixie

Kineto Review, "Down in Dixie," Has Many Interesting Scenes

EARLY in April the Kineto Review "Down In Dixie," released by the Kineto Company of America through the National Exchanges, will be available to exhibitors. It follows "Babyhood" in the regular order of release.

"Down In Dixie" is said to be one of the most charming travel subjects in the huge Kineto library of films. It is a journey through the rejuvenated "Sunny South" of America and is at once a lesson in industrial-geography of the South and a riot of wonderful scenery.

The trip starts as the travelling party is enroute to Tennessee, through the wonders of the Cumberland Gap. Many feature motion pictures have had their "locale" down in this section of the United States and it is interesting to watch the folk who actually live there and compare them with the types that have been portrayed so often on the screen. The Cumberland folk are often referred to as "16th Century Americans," because their habits and customs and even their manner of speech is very much in the style of 400 years ago.

After watching them for awhile, the party guide takes his charges 1,000 miles away to the swampy country where irrigation and other modern engineering works show how civilization is piercing these wildernesses. It is surprising to audiences to find out how many such virgin spots there are.

From the country the sight-seeing party and the cameramen go to the city; and see how many of the old, quaint customs of the South still persist—and it is mighty delightful to see that they do.

One learns also that the South has its Nomads; bands of gypsies. They have a nice capacity for work, however, and are seen busily working on the sugar cane crop, with their youngsters following along to suck the juice from the cane.

"Woman Untamed" Prologue Is Popular

Despite Holy Week, "The Woman Untamed," which Elmer J. McGovern offers on the state right market did big business at the Broadway theatre, Richmond, Va. The following review of the prologue for this Doraldina feature appeared in The Evening Dispatch:

"Lithe and rhythmical, Signe Paterson uncovers a series of barbaric revels done in the fierce intensity in which they had origin, mad whirls that breathe the passion of the South Seas in their hectic revolutions. Assisted by the Royal Hawaiian Quartet of instrumentalists, Miss Paterson gives the prologue to 'The Woman Untamed' and succeeds admirably in providing an Hawaiian atmosphere for the framing of the picture.

"Miss Paterson and her associates are to be congratulated for the prologue, which proves undeniably good diversion."

Bert Lubin's Feature Selling Rapidly

Bert Lubin, who is distributing the Western feature "West of the Rio Grande" announces that now 75 per cent of the territory on that picture has been sold. The latest sale is reported on another column.

"Mother Eternal" May Run in Key Cities

Negotiations are now under way which may culminate in an arrangement for simultaneous first run engagements, in all the key cities in the United States, of Ivan Abramson's new feature "Mother Eternal" starring Vivian Martin, the negative of which Mr. Abramson just finished cutting.

This move is, in a measure, due to the enormous amount of mail which reaches the Graphic offices daily with inquiries from exhibitors all over the country as to the earliest release date of "Mother Eternal." No decision, other than that the Broadway run of this feature is scheduled for April 15th, has been reported by the producer.

Many theatre owners mention Miss Vivian Martin as always having been a tremendous drawing card in the past. The balance of the cast of "Mother Eternal," which is all-star includes Thurston Hall, Earl Metcalfe, Jack Sherril, Vivienne Osborne, J. W. Johnston and little Ruth Sullivan.

Plymouth Plans Campaign on Picture

Fulfilling its promise to equip state right exchanges with a complete line of publicity material with which to back "Every Woman's Problem" with an aggressive sales campaign, Plymouth Pictures, Inc., national distributors of the picture announce the completion of several novel sales accessories constituting a compact and efficient publicity drive. This campaign, now available to all territorial distributors, is regarded as an enterprising move on the part of Plymouth to assist its state rights buyers to stimulate the interest of local exhibitors in "Every Woman's Problem."

One of the most interesting features of the campaign prepared by Plymouth for the exchanges is an imitation summons for jury service. The summons contains the name of the local exchange and is mailed in a plain white envelope with an imitation legal seal on the flaps.

Another phase of the exhibitor campaign is an attention-compelling broadside containing trade paper reviews of "Every Woman's Problem."

Federated Meets in New York

Signs Contracts for Big List of Comedy Subjects

ONE hundred per cent attendance is the best evidence of the wonderful spirit with which the second annual meeting of the board of directors of the Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., opened at the Hotel Astor, New York City, on Monday, March 21st and continued throughout the week.

The Federated Exchanges are considered the largest distributors of short material in the United States and have fortified themselves to uphold this envied position in the future in the film world by signing contracts for some of the foremost comedies to be shown on the screen during the coming year, consisting of one hundred and four one-reel and twenty-six two-reel Chester Comedies; fifty-two one-reel comedies produced by the Warner Brothers; twenty-six Hall Room Boy Comedies; thirteen Monty Banks; and fifty-two one-reel comedies manufactured by one of America's foremost producers. However, as releasing arrangements have not been completed for the last-named group the Federated will not announce his name at this time.

Knowing the popularity enjoyed by serials at this time the Federated exchanges have purchased from the Warner Brothers a fifteen episode super-animal serial entitled "Miracles of the Jungle," produced by Col. W. N. Selig. Film critics who have witnessed screening of this serial say that it is in every way superior to the wonder animal serial entitled "The Lost City," which was also produced by Selig.

The Federated have also acquired distribution rights to series of features. The first release will be "Don't Leave Your Husband," featuring Martha Mansfield and William Desmond.

The meeting at the Astor Hotel, which was in reality a continuation of one held in Los Angeles during the week of February 8th, was presided over by President Joseph L. Friedman of Chicago. Those attending were, Harry Charnas, of Cleveland, Ohio; O. K. Kahn, Kansas City, Mo.; J. Eugene Pearce, New Orleans, La.; Benjamine Amsterdam, Philadelphia, Pa.; Samuel V. Grand, Boston, Mass.; Samuel Werner, St. Louis, Mo.; H. P. Baldwin, Springfield, Mass.; L. E. Ouimet, Montreal, Canada; Arthur G. Whyte, Albany, N. Y.; H. A. Lande, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Abe Warner, New York City; C. W. Dimock, Boston, Mass.; P. Oletsky, Baltimore, Md.; and George H. Wiley, general manager, in charge of the New York office.

"Hush" Four Weeks in Chicago

COMING to Chicago's first-run theatre, the Ziegfeld, February 27, "Hush," the fifth and latest Clara Kimball Young production took possession of this theatre and held audiences that filled every seat for four consecutive weeks. In a month full of many big screen hits "Hush" competed against them all. I. Van Ronkel, head of the Favorite Players Film Exchange of 63 East Adams street, Chicago, who opened his new exchange with this new series of Clara Kimball Young productions, anticipated a prosperous run for the fifth Equity release, but even his high hopes were surpassed, it is stated. When production after production began to bid for public favor and Van Ronkel found that "Hush" had to fight against heavy odds to beat a dozen or more strong features current in Chicago's biggest theatres, he welcomed the battle as a test of box office strength.

Chicago fans were literally flooded with a host of new features and sensations. Yet "Hush" played to capacity for four weeks and turned many away at its very last showing Sunday night, March 20. Three of the largest theatres of the country opened in Chicago during the run of "Hush." The Tivoli, seating nearly 5,000, the Senate with 3,000 seats and the Roosevelt with 4,000 were enticing the public to their doors and offering features like "Passion" and "The Kid" and lavish musical programs.

The number of productions that can boast of a four-week run at the Ziegfeld or any other first-run theatre in Chicago can be counted on one's fingers, states Equity. "Chicago," claims Equity, "has the reputation as a burial-ground for legitimate productions that run for months elsewhere but die after a week in Chicago. The number of pictures that have played long runs in other key cities, but have "flopped" miserably in Chicago is legion. Among informed film circles, it is claimed that the average run of a production in Chicago is one-third as long as in New York—with some few exceptions.

"The success of 'Hush' is all the more phenomenal when one considers the theatre in which it played. The Ziegfeld is not a program-picture house. It has no franchise on any series of productions. It is not an institutional theatre, like the Randolph, Riviera or Tivoli. It is common knowledge that an established theatre will do a good business even with a mediocre picture. Its patrons are accustomed to go to the theatre habitually. Other features, besides the picture itself attract them to an institutional house, whether it is the vaudeville, music or beauty of the theatre itself. The Ziegfeld theatre has no lavish interiors to entice patrons. It has no unusual scenic displays or prologues. Every pat-

Needless to say, the noteworthy success of "Hush" at the Ziegfeld has stimulated advance bookings on the picture in Van Ronkel's territory to an unexcelled degree. From all indications "Hush" will make the nearest approach to a 100 per cent booking that any independent production has ever boosted. The rentals that Van Ronkel will gross in his district give every sign of surpassing every previous total in the independent field for the same territory.

New Film Center at Fresno

ANOTHER city devoted exclusively to silent drama appears on film lands map with the foundation of Film Art city on the outskirts of Fresno, California, according to a report received from the coast.

The Film Art Studio will be devoted to the filming of feature pictures for Russell-Greiver-Russell, the Chicago producing concern. Edwin Middleton, whose ability as a director has been well established by his work in the past, will be in charge of the productions. Such well-known stars as Jack Richardson, Lee Hill, William Laury and Eula Leigh will form the nucleus of the new productions.

Fresno is a city of 100,000 people, located midway between Los Angeles and San Francisco, on both the Santa Fe and Southern Pacific railroads. The new Film Art Studios are situated just within the city limits and are located on a tract of land that in the olden days was the mansion of the old Spanish governor. The property contains 150 acres. The studio will have a total floor space of 193,000 square feet. Within an hour's drive can be photographed at least three hundred days out of the year.

The open air stage measures 120 x 300 feet and the enclosed stage, 150 x 100 feet. Fresno has more hours of sunshine than any city in the state of California, according to the U. S. weather reports. It is expected that exteriors

The Film Art Studio will comprise besides the studios and the necessary working buildings, homes for the directors, and bungalows for the use of the various members of the company, besides which the erection of a four-story hotel is contemplated to care for visitors, and a system of information will be inaugurated whereby visitors may tour through the entire studio in company with a trained guide, who will introduce to them the finer features of film manufacture.

Film Art City will throw open its doors on July 1, according to present plans.

Parisians Copy Gowns of Equity Stars

An unexpected effect of the screen on a particular field of inductry is disclosed in a letter from the Commission Interieure Industrielle of France, received by the Equity Pictures Corporation of New York. In its communication, the Commission expresses its appreciation of the influence that this company has indirectly exerted on the improvement of France's millinery and fashion trade.

It appears from the letter, that the release by the Equity Corp. of several Clara Kimball Young productions in which this star wore Parisian hats and gowns effectively, induced patrons of her pictures to do likewise. Well-to-do motion-picture devotees, it seems make mental note of the style and material of every attractive gown displayed on the screen and proceed to order the same from their modistes, who in turn transmit the order to the Parisian costumers.

The showing of 'The Forbidden Woman'—one of Miss Young's early productions in this country and the British Empire, first directed the attentions of the French Commission to the effect that the wardrobe display in that picture exercised on the demand for imported apparel. Many orders, they state, were received by Parisian costumes, specifying the designs worn in 'The Forbidden Woman.'

Hallroom Series Popular Abroad

The Hall Room Boys Comedies, the series of which were recently acquired by the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation for exclusive foreign distribution, covering a period of three years, are meeting with unprecedented success in foreign film markets, according to a report disclosed this week by the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation.

Contracts between the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation and Jack and Harry Cohn, producers, conveying to the former organization the world distributing rights, exclusive of the United States and Canada, to the justly famed Hall Room Boys Comedies, were signed and executed a little less than a year ago, within that brief period a large portion of the foreign film markets have been closed for the comedy series.

New State Right Producers

Burr Announces Affiliated Pictures; First Release is Named

BIGGER and Better Pictures, productions more worthy of the increasing prestige of the independent market, are the keynotes struck in the announcement made this week of the formation of the Affiliated Pictures, Inc., a new producing organization to which C. C. Burr has extended his efforts.

"I want to make it clear, said Mr. Burr, a few days ago, that Affiliated Pictures, Inc., will devote its self exclusively to the production of a series of really big feature productions for the independent market. Our initial picture will be 'Lonely Hearts' an American drama of the oil field, featuring Miss Kay Laurell.

"The story of 'Lonely Heart' is from the pen of Edgar Selwyn who, in addition to being one of the foremost producers of stage sucesses, is credited with such literary efforts as 'Pierre of the Plains,' 'The Country Boy,' 'The Crowded Hour' and more recently, 'The Mirage,' which he produced with Florence Reed in the leading role."

Anthony Paul Kelly, the adapter of "Way Down East" and the author of "Three Faces East" and other hits, is responsible for the scenario. John O'Brien, famous for Mary Pickford's "Poor Little Pepina" directed "Lonely Heart" and Capt. Caldwell, of the Hillicker Writers did the titles.

"A further announcement will shortly be made as to the distributing arrangements agreed upon, said Mr. Burr, "and I confidently believe that the formation of the Affiliated Pictures, Inc., marks an epoch in the State Rights field and that the line of demarcation between the old and the new epochs will become increasingly distinct as our productions are marketed."

Sardino Succeeds Dooley

Well Known Showman Will Head Dooley Exchanges in Upper N. Y.

A. J. SARDINO of Syracuse, N. Y., formerly owner of The International Feature Film Company of Syracuse, N. Y., Manager of the Savoy, Grand and Regent Theatres of Syracuse, N. Y., and present owner of Hippodrome Theatre, Syracuse, N. Y., has acquired The Dooley Exchanges, Inc., of Buffalo, Syracuse and Albany.

The Dooley Exchanges will distribute the produce of the Ben Fitzer productions and the Great Northway Film Corporation. The Ben Fitzer Productions are now handling the state right feature "Madonnas and Men" and other features. The Great Northway Film Corporation was recently incorporated under the laws of New York State at $350,000.

It is Mr. Sardino's aim to make his distributing company the largest and most efficient distributing Company that has ever and will ever operate in the upper state of New York. He is now negotiating with several big state right producers to handle their different productions in the above territory and it will be possible for the exhibitor to receive a complete show from any one of his three exchanges.

Some of the new product that will be released, beginning the first of April, will be eight five-reel Neal Hart productions, one-reel comedy featuring Billy Franey, one-reel comedy featuring Geo. Clark, one-reel comedy featuring Bud of Ham and Bud fame, and six Great Northway Film Corporation Productions.

J. M. Sitterly, former owner of Popular Film Exchange, special representative of Universal Film Company and Manager of Dooley Exchange, Inc., Buffalo office, has been retained by Mr. Sardino as Manager of Buffalo Exchange and also special representative of the Distributing Corporation.

Urban Subjects on B'way

Two Kineto Reviews and Movie Chat Run in Leading Theatres

ALL three of the Broadway theatres under the direction of Hugo Riesenfeld are playing Urban Popular Classics this week.

The big electric sign of the Criterion heralds the news that an Urban Kineto Review is on the program. "Bonnie Scotland" is the name of this Kineto Review and from its first showing last Sunday it has drawn applause from all the audiences. It is a beautiful scenic with a Scottish flavor that lends an admirable atmosphere to the feature picture, "Sentimental Tommy." The Criterion will play "Bonnie Scotland" all during the run of the feature, so this Kineto Review will remain in this one Broadway theatre for four or five weeks.

The Rialto goes to the other main group of Urban pictures and chooses one of the Movie Chats—No. 31 which is out of the Second series of the Movie Chats. It has the variety which has made the Movie Chats so famous and features one of the Urban Science series, "The Germination of Plants."

C. B. C. to Re-Edit Its French Picture

Editing and re-titling of "The Nightingale of Paris," the French picture featuring Zany Mieus, the French star, which is to be distributed to the American State Right market by the C.B.C. Film Sales Corporation of New York, has been begun at the office of the latter company.

While the feature is in perfect condition for distribution at present, it is said that the foreign flavor is just a bit to pronounced and the feature is to be cut and edited and the titles changed and Americanized to give the picture a greater value for release in America.

"A Doggone Mix-Up" is Still Going Big

Reports are still coming in from all parts of the country on "A Doggone Mix-up," the Hallroom Boys Comedy which played for an entire week at the Strand Theatre, New York, and which opened to the independently produced short subject the largest first-run theatres throughout the country.

According to the Standard Film Service of Cleveland, Cincinnati, and Detroit, this comedy is still breaking records.

A. E. Stillwell Produces for the Screen

The Brownie Comedies, Inc., of which Arthur E. Stilwell is president, announces that it has undertaken the production for the screen of a farce written by Mr. Stilwell. Work was started last week at the Estee Studio, New York City. John S. Lopez is the director of the new company, while the all star cast is headed by Margery Wilson and Lorraine Manville. Mr. Stilwell is already known as a writer, playwright and railroad builder.

Salt Lake Exchange to Change Its Name

The name of the McDermond Theatre Amusement Company of Salt Lake City, Utah, has been changed to Superior Screen Service, Inc., by action of the Board of Directors.

This Exchange is buying and distributing State Right Features for the five states of Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, New Mexico, and Idaho, and also distributing Clara Kimball Young Features and other Equity subjects for the state of Utah and southern Wyoming.

Ennis Withdraws form S.-E. Enterprises

Formal announcement was made on March 23d by Bert Ennis that he had withdrawn from the partnership conducted up to that date by Jacob Shenfield and himself under the name of S & E Enterprises in New York City. In withdrawing from the firm of S & E Enterprises. Mr. Ennis announces that he will not be liable for any debts or obligations contracted by S & E enterprises on or after March 23d.

Bert Lytell Leaves for the West Coast

After completing the final scenes in "The Man Who," a Maxwell Karger production for Metro, Bert Lytell, the star of the picture, left for the West Coast studios of the company at Hollywood, Cal., where after his absence of nearly a year in the East he will start work at once upon his forthcoming picture, "A Trip to Paradise," adapted from Franz Molnar's famous stage success "Lillian." As in "The Man Who," Mr. Lytell's leading lady in "A Trip to Paradise" will be Virginia Valli.

Phoebe Hunt in Leading Role for Goldwyn

Phoebe Hunt, leading woman in the Wilkes Stock Company, at the Majestic Theatre, Los Angeles, has been chosen for the leading feminine role in an all-star Frank Lloyd Production by the Goldwyn Company of "The Grim Comedian," an original photoplay by Rita Weiman. Miss Hunt's engagement at the Majestic will end Saturday night, and production of the picture will begin immediately.

Harry Sweet's Best Is Universal's Verdict

Harry Sweet's latest comedy, "The Country Heir," is asserted by the Century Film Corporation, which made it, and by Universal, which is to release it, to be the best yet enacted by that comedian. It was directed by William Watson. Sweet is supported by Florence Lee. It is expected the comedy will be released in about three weeks.

Beban Heads for the Coast

Completes His Tour of Personal Appearance in the Windy City

GEORGE BEBAN is starting toward the Pacific Coast on his tour of personal appearances in connection with "One Man in a Million," his super-special production which is being distributed by Robertson-Cole, and is leaving behind in Chicago a record which even exceeds that made by him in any previous cities of his itinerary.

One of the greatest attributes which was paid to Mr. Beban's picture while in Chicago was given him by Samuel Katz of Balaban and Katz, managers of four of Chicago's biggest theatres. Regarding Mr. Beban's engagement in Chicago Mr. Katz wrote:

"Please accept my hearty congratulations on the screens achieved by your new photo-play, 'One Man in a Million.' This is by far the biggest attraction we have ever played.

"It might interest you to know that 'One Man in a Million' played to the biggest number of paid admissions in the theatrical history of Chicago, at the Tivoli Theatre last week. This was due, no doubt, partially to the fact that our Tivoli Theatre has a seating capacity in excess of any other motion picture house in the city.

The only open time which Mr. Beban had, has been filled by the Central Park Theatre, Chicago, and he is leaving this week for St. Paul where he will make his final stand before going to Seattle at which point he starts his invasion of the West Coast.

"FourHorsemen" Showing in Chicago

CHICAGO'S first glimpse of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," the Metro picturization of the world-famous novel by Vicente Blasco Ibanez, was scheduled for March 26 at the La Salle theatre. In anticipation of this auspicious event an elaborate publicity and advertising campaign has been conducted in the Windy City under the direction of Ned Holmes, a well-known theatrical man, and William Brill, a former Chicago newspaper writer, who was connected with the recent New York premiere.

Increased Activity in Lasky London Studio

With production entering upon its final stages on the photographing of "The Mystery Road," the adaptation of E. Phillips Oppenheim's novel, which Paul Powell is directing at the London studio of Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., increased activity at the studio is noticeable with the commencement of work on a new production.

The latest picture, which has been started, is "The Princess of New York," an adaptation of Cosmo Hamilton's story, which Donald Crisp is directing, and which has been prepared for screen production by Margaret Turnbull.

Director Crisp has assembled a very capable cast for "The Princess of New York." Miss Mary Glynne, who has a reputation throughout England as a young actress of charm and personality, will play the title role. Opposite her, in the leading male role, will be David Powell. The cast also includes such well-known players as Ivo Dawson, Miss Dorothy Fane, George Bellamy and Mrs. Saba Raleigh.

Tom Gallery in Jimmy Wallingford Role

Tom Gallery has been selected by George Randolph Chester to create the role of Jimmy Wallingford, the leading character in "The Son of Wallingford," the Vitagraph special production which is now in the preliminary stages at the West Coast studios. The story was written especially for Vitagraph by Mr. Chester, production editor of that organization, and his wife, Lillian E. Chester, and the story will be transferred to the screen under the personal direction of the author, who recently went to the Hollywood studios for that express purpose.

Holmes Travel Picture Released March 27

March 27 is the release date of another Burton Holmes Travel Picture relating to "Jerusalem." This time Mr. Holmes visits such portions of this ancient city which are comparatively modern and where one can see up-to-date Jerusalem and see what is going on in the daily life of its citizens at the present time.

Ass'd Exhibs Acquires Feature

To Release Holman Day's "Rider of the King Log"

ANNOUNCEMENT is made from the offices of Associated Exhibitors that the first feature attraction to be released by the re-organized company is a Holman Day production, "The Rider of The King Log."

The executives of Associated, who were invited to see the picture when it was offered to the organization for release, were immensely pleased with the production. With this judgment confirmed by the others who saw the picture Mr. Kane decided to conclude negotiations at once. Mr. W. B. Williamson, treasurer and general manager, and Mr. H. P. Carver, representing the Edgar Jones Productions, Inc., conferred by wire with the others interested, and before the close of the business day "The Rider of The King Log" was established as the first Associated release.

"I pride myself on being conservative in my judgment and in my expression of opinion on pictures," Mr. Kane said when announcing the contract, "but this production has reached my enthusiasm and I am proud to state that Associated has secured one of the finest pictures ever given to the screen. It is a picture of the dimensions of 'The Barrier' with great sweeps of drama in the outdoors and with an appeal finer than anything I have ever seen.

"Mr. Holman Day and his staff of assistants deserve the greatest commendation for their achievement. I would be glad to know that all future Associated product will be on a par with this initial release and I am perfectly willing that exhibitors judge our future productions on 'The Rider of The King Log. We know what we have secured and every force in advertising and exploitation will be put behind the picture."

The picture is from the latest novel of Mr. Day. The book has already sold out several editions. The story is of the Maine woods and the picture was actually made there. The studio in which the interiors were taken is at August, Me. Mr. Day personally supervised the making of the picture which was directed by Harry Hoyt.

Production was commenced shortly after Mr. Day's book was published fifteen months ago. It took an entire year to complete the filming of the picture. Many of the scenes were taken in summer, and the exact camera locations were cut in rock so that that company could return to the scenes in mid-winter and with their cameras in the exact positions duplicate in winter the scenes taken in summer.

Several dams constructed years ago at a cost stated to be more than $50,000 each were blown up in the making of the production. These explosions were not designed especially for the picture but the directors took advantage of their destruction to work in the action of the story. The results are declared to be spectacular. Some of the river scenes with the dams blowing up and the giant logs rolling down a river which is steadily rising in power and volume surpass anything of a like nature shown in a feature, it is declared.

The story is of a battle of lumber interests. The fight for control of the forests and the right of way on the rivers provides the action, but a strong romance and love theme runs throughout.

Poli Circuit to Present Tom Terriss Picture

"The Heart of Maryland," based on David Belasco's famous Civil War Drama and put out by Vitagraph as a Tom Terriss production, has been booked over the entire Poli Circuit, and the Capitol Theatre, at Hartford, Conn., will be the first playhouse to present it to the public. This will be some time in mid-April.

Catherine Calvert is the star of "The Heart of Maryland," portraying with grace and charm the role of "Maryland Calvert," the Southern girl whose path frequently winds between duty to the Stars and Bars of the Confederacy and love for her Northern fiancé. In the cast which supports Miss Calvert are Crane Wilbur, who plays the chief male role, Felix Krembs, Willie Collier, Jr., Ben Lyon and Bernard Siegel.

Twelfth of the Edgar Series Is Ready

Edgar Pomeroy, Booth Tarkington's screen representative of American boyhood turns detective in the twelfth episode of the series, known as "The Adventures and Emotions of Edgar Pomeroy."

Paul Bern directed "Edgar the Detective." Others in the cast are Katherine Bates, Frank Cole, John McCallum, Alberta Lee and Lou Salter.

Thomas Holding Chosen for Important Part

Pathe announces that Thomas Holding has been engaged for the leading male role in the picture version of Rudyard Kipling's story "Without Benefit of Clergy." The filling of the part, says Pathe, has occasioned much time and thought on the part of Director James Young. The part is an exacting one, but Director Young believes that Mr. Holding is peculiarly fitted to carry it through. Virginia Faire plays the leading female role. Evelyn Selbie and Otto Lederer are also cast in important parts.

Universal's Releases for April

Gladys Walton, Harry Carey and Carmel Myers on List

FOUR five-reel features, beginning with what is said to be the best Harry Carey picture in many months, are announced for release by Universal during the month of April. They include pictures starring such other favorites as Carmel Myers and Gladys Walton, and one introducing a new star to the screen in the person of "Breezy" Eason Jr., the four-year old son of Reaves Eason Sr., a Universal director.

The first April release is a Harry Carey picture called "The Freeze Out." It is a red-blooded western drama from the pen of George Hull, well known as a scenario writer and who now has turned his entire attention to the construction of Universal photoplay plots.

It was directed by Jack Ford, claimed by Universal to be peerless among directors of "western" atmosphere pictures. It is Ford's first picture with Universal since last Spring, when he directed Carey in "Marked Men," said by many to be that star's greatest picture. "The Freeze Out" shows Carey at his best, as a human, straight-shooting hero with a well-developed sense of humor.

The next five-reeler on the Universal release schedule is "The Dangerous Moment," starring Carmel Myers, and directed by Marcel de Sano. It is a Greenwich Village story written by Douglas Doty, formerly editor of the Cosmopolitan Magazine.

Supporting Miss Myers in "The Dangerous Moment" are Herbert Heyes, George Rigas, Lule Warrington, Bonnie Hill, Fred Becker, Marion Skinner, W. F. Fellows, William Fay and B. M. Turner.

The third April release is "The Big Adventure," a boy and dog story in which little "Breezy" Eason Jr. is starred. The story was written especially for the young film star by James Edward Hungerford, a popular writer.

Reaves Eason, Sr., directed this feature for his youngster. Lee Shumway and Gertrude Olmstead, the prize-winning Chicago Elks beauty, also are featured in the cast. Fred Herzog and Millie Shafer play important roles.

The last Universal release this month will be a new Gladys Walton picture. It is called "Desperate Youth." is an adaptation of F. Hopkinson Smith's popular novel "A Kentucky Cinderella." All of the vivacity and charm of Miss Walton's personality are said to have been brought out in the making of this film.

Harry B. Harris was the director. The young star had Harold Miller as leading man in the screen version of the F. Hopkinson Smith story, and a supporting cast comprising J. Farrell McDonald, Muriel Godfrey Turner, Louis Willoughby, Hazel Howell, Lucy Harris and James Blackwell. "Desperate Youth" is said to be especially notable because of the beauty and artistry of its settings and photography.

"Roads of Destiny" Is Booked by Loew

Goldwyn's picturization of Channing Pollock's play, "Roads of Destiny," based upon O. Henry's short story and starring Pauline Frederick, plaaying the Capitol Theatre this week, has been booked in the Loew theatres.

M. Leone Bracker to Do Goldwyn Posters

M. LEONE BRACKER, one of the most prominent younger artists of the country, has been engaged by Goldwyn to draw the posters for J. Ernest Williamson's story of the submarine pirates and the hunt for their buried treasure, which forms the basis of his latest photoplay, "Wet Gold." Goldwyn has acquired and will distribute this production.

Mr. Bracker is not only a magazine illustrator of note, but one of the outstanding figures among the younger American painters. He was the artist who painted the famous "Keep 'em smiling" poster for the United War Work Campaign; the War Savings Stamps poster, "Behold Your Enemy," and the "Help lest we perish" poster placed over a cradle at the aviation show held in Grand Central Palace.

New Francis Marion Story

Author Directs "Just Around the Corner" for Cosmopolitan Company

FRANCES MARION has completed at the Metro Studio in Sixty-first Street the taking of "Just Around the Corner," a Cosmopolitan production, which she is directing from a scenario made from a collection of stories by Fannie Hurst. Miss Marion, it will be remembered wrote the scenario for "Humoresque," the highly successful Cosmopolitan production of Fannie Hurst's story.

In "Just Around the Corner" Miss Marion has written another story of mother love, the theme of which was so delicately handled in "Humoresque." This time, according to an announcement by George B. VanCleve, general manager of W. R. Hearst's film interests, Miss Marion is taking a different phase of the same theme. The story differs greatly from "Humoresque," but it lacks none of the penetrating pathos and human emotion that made that production such a tremendous success, it is declared. In "Just Around the Corner" Miss Marion is making a picture which deals with plain everyday people, who are familiar to all of us. The story takes place in a tenement house, and deals with the kindly, sympathetic folk who make up the Birdsong family. Much care and attention was given by Miss Marion to the selection of types for her characters.

The leading part is played by Lewis Sargent, famous for his interpretation of "Huckleberry Finn," who in "Just Around the Corner" has opportunity to display the same boyish charm that distinguishes his characterizations, and at the same time his part requires pathos. Miss Sigrid Holmquist, Swedish screen actress, plays the heroine, and her beauty and charm are displayed to great advantage. Others in the cast are Margaret Seddon, Zyllah Shannon, Edward Phillips, Madame Rosonova, Peggy Parr and Fred C. Thomson.

Many N. Y. Bookings on Cabanne Feature

ONE of the most comprehensive Greater New York bookings ever reported by Robertson-Cole, has just been secured on "What's a Wife Worth?" the second William Christy Cabanne super-special production, which has just been released. More than a score of New York theatres, the great share of them being Fox and Loew houses, have just closed with Robertson-Cole to show "What's a Wife Worth?" immediately.

The Fox houses, which have booked the picture, are the Audubon, Academy of Music, Star, Nemo, Jap Garden, Standard, 103rd Street, Crotona, Jamaica, Folly and the Comedy.

In Brooklyn the Stone Theatre, Sheffield Garden, and other houses have booked "What's a Wife Worth?" The Loew houses concerned are the 116th Street, Seventh Avenue, New York, 42nd Street, Bijou, Hoboken, Spooner, Burland and Victory theatres.

Rothacker Sends a Big Shipment Abroad

One of the largest foreign shipments of industrials film ever made left the Rothacker Chicago laboratory this week. The prints went to all parts of the world. Ten different languages were represented in titles.

This picture, which was produced by the Rothacker Industrial Division, will be used by an American manufacturer to help create a foreign demand for his product.

Kohn Discusses Conditions

Sets Forth Observations Made on His Recent Tour of Key Cities

MORRIS KOHN, Realart's president, has just returned from an extended tour of the key cities of the country. Discussing conditions as he found them, Mr. Kohn said:

"On the West Coast, in San Francisco and Los Angeles particularly, the conditions are very favorable. Things are booming right along and business seems excellent.

"In the northern section, around Seattle, and in the Northwest and Middle West states, business seems to be about twenty-five per cent below normal. This, I believe, is due to the general readjustment which the motion picture business is going through.

"Speaking with exhibitors, I found that they are not in the frame of mind where they believe that the end of the motion picture is in sight, or that the millenium is approaching. Far from it. They are convinced that the business is on a sane, healthful basis and that once we become adjusted to new conditions, the entire industry will ride on to a continued success and permanence.

"Every exhibitor," continued Mr. Kohn, "seems determined to bend his mind toward the improvement of local conditions. In many instances, this improvement takes the form of the erection of bigger, better motion picture theatres or the general physical improvement of the older houses. It is in either case a healthful, progressive sign.

"The censorship problem," he added, "while a vital and serious one, has not unduly alarmed the average exhibitor. He finds, with his local board, that there is a tendency on the part of the agitators to accept as fact the statement of producers that they are cleaning house from the inside. The tendency, I observed, is to lay off and permit the industry to work out its own salvation."

"Reputation" Set for April

Bookings on Priscilla Dean Film Accepted for Dates After Apr. 15

Priscilla Dean as she appears in "Reputation," as a musical comedy prima donna. This new Universal Jewel production is to be released soon

"REPUTATION," the new big Universal - Jewel starring Priscilla Dean, will be ready for release about the middle of April, it is announced. Bookings already are being accepted for dates after April 15th, it is understood.

Cutting and editing of the new feature has just been completed at Universal City by Stuart Paton, the director, assisted by Frank Lawrence, Universal's film editor, under the personal supervision of Mr. Laemmle and Mr. R. H. Cochrane, vice-president of Universal.

"Reputation" is from the story "False Colors" by Edwina Levin, which ran serially in Ainslee's magazine. It is a drama of stage life and contains a dual role in which Miss Dean is said to do the best work of her screen career.

One of these parts is promised to be the most striking screen character ever evolved. It is that of the London Flame, England's most popular musical comedy prima donna. The part was drawn to combine all the vivacity of such of her former roles as "The Wild Cat of Paris," the "Wicked Darling" and "The Virgin of Stamboul," with the cleverness and charm of her characterizations in "The Exquisite Thief" and in "Outside the Law," her latest success.

"Reputation" is Stuart Paton's first big Universal-Jewel picture under his new contract.

"Reputation" is said to have the strongest cast ever assembled for a Universal picture. Miss Dean is supported by Niles Welch, one of the most popular leading men in the cinema field. Rex Roselli, Spottiswood Aitkin, William Welsh and Harry Van Meter also have important parts in the production. Others in the cast are James McLaughlin, Al Garcia, Harry Carter, Kathleen Myers, Joey McCreery, Alice H. Smith, Francois Dumas, Joe Ray and little May Giraci.

The Problem of the Empty Seat

If the regular crowd just covers your overhead, then the empty seat is your missing profit

ONE of the greatest of America's statisticians probed the motion picture business the other day and said: "The empty seat represents the greatest single loss to the exhibitor today."

You can fill those seats occasionally by a spurt of showmanship or the showing of a great special.

You can fill those seats regularly by making your theatre a habit with your patrons.

Take the poorest day of the week and put in a really big serial sponsored and presented by the greatest serial house in the business.

You will make a bad day good; you will fill your seats for fifteen weeks and you will make your theatre a habit.

Ruth Roland gets them in. She is the world's greatest serial star. "Ruth of the Rockies" shattered all records. From her first serial, "Who Pays?" down through "The Red Circle," "Hands Up," "The Tiger's Trail" and all the rest, her serials have been very successful.

Now comes "The Avenging Arrow," her latest, a true-blue story of adventure and romance, without a shadow of the underworld in it.

It is your big opportunity for an appeal to men, women and children. It is Romance. It is Outdoors. And it is clean-clean-clean.

Dust off the empty seats and polish up the glass on the box-office front for the most constructive move you ever made.

Book it now for the star
Book it now for the picture
Book it now for your patrons
Book it now for present and future profits

A scene from "Proxies," a Cosmopolitan production, and a Paramount picture, directed by George D. Baker. It will soon be seen at the Rivoli in New York

"Proxies" Booked for Rivoli, April 10

"PROXIES," the latest Cosmopolitan production, described by Cosmoplitan as "the fastest moving comedy drama ever screened," will be shown for the first time at the Rivoli theatre, New York City, beginning April 10. According to an announcement by George B. Van Cleve, general manager of William Randolph Hearst's film interests, "Proxies" is in a class by itself for its skillful blending of mystery, thrills, fights, love and regeneration.

"Proxies" was screened from a story by Frank R. Adams in the Cosmopolitan Magazine. The scenario was written by George D. Baker, who directed the picture as well.

Norman Kerry and Zena Keefe play the featured roles. Raye Dean, Jack Crosby, William H. Tooker, Marie Shaffer, Paul Everton and Robert Everton complete the cast.

"Proxies" will be distributed by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

"The Pretenders" to Be Cabanne's Third

Word from the Robertson-Cole Studios in Los Angeles to the effect that William Christy Cabanne's production being made under the title "The Pretenders" for this company is almost completed indicates that there will be three of these Cabanne super-special productions on the market within a very short time.

Robertson-Cole has just released "What's A Wife Worth?" the second Cabanne production, while the first one, "The Stealers" has been playing for some little time. The human qualities of the two of these pictures which already have been released by Robertson-Cole also are being imparted to the third picture, now in the making, according to word from the Robertson-Cole Studios.

These three pictures are the fruits of Mr. Cabanne's years of experience under the best masters in the industry, and his own years of directorship.

Best Circus Film Yet, Is Claim

Bert Leo Supervises Production of the Realart Release

"THE best representation of 'Big Top' conditions as yet placed in a motion-picture" is the verdict circus authorities returned on "The Little Clown," Realart's latest Star Franchise production with Mary Miles Minter.

Bert Leo, one of the most famous of circus clowns and inventor of the renowned "Mother Goose" act which he used for years with Ringling's Hagenbeck-Wallace and the Barnes shows, declared he considered the picture the acme of circus realism. Together with Rex Roselli, manager of the Al G. Barnes show, Mr. Leo supervised the filming of the circus scenes which form an important feature of the production.

"Circus people feel that in the past their life and customs have been incorrectly depicted on the screen," explained the famous clown, For that reason we were very glad to render technical advice during the making of Realart's "The Little Clown." The resultant picture, we feel, is the best representation of 'Big Top' conditions as yet placed in a motion picture."

"I particularly enjoyed my association with the picture," continued Mr. Leo, "because Avery Hopwood, who wrote the play, has made his circus characters just what they are—one big family enjoying all of the joys and sorrows of travelling thousands of miles together.

"Mr. Hopwood's long association with the show business made his situations fundamentally sound. Mr. Roselli and I, however, were able to iron out the little details, which, if incorrectly mirrored, would bring censure from all over the country.

"The director, Mr. Heffron; the star, Mary Miles Minter; and all of the supporting players threw themselves enthusiastically into the parts and they look on the screen just what they purport to be—the attaches of a small circus."

The matter of supervising the circus scenes was no simple one for it included every detail—even the language used by the players. The average picture-goer is so adept at reading lips that the actors had to be tutored in the utterly different jargon of circus people.

"For instance," said Mr. Leo, "we call an actor a 'kinker,' because acrobatics and riding require 'kinked' muscles. A train loader is a 'razor-back' and a clown a 'joy.' Clowns joining a circus for their first season are called 'First of Mays,' because it is on that date that newcomers sign their contracts.

"Candy salesmen are 'candy butchers' and elephant tenders 'bull men.' We call the sideshow the 'kid top' and aerial acts 'casting acts.' Horses trained for trick acrobatic riding are 'rosinbacks'—due to the fact their backs are covered with powdered rosin. That, incidentally, is why white horses are always used in this act—so that the rosin won't show.

"One thing, particularly, that we cautioned Director Heffron to guard against in this picture, was any scene showing players climbing around on circus wagons. This has been seen so often in other circus pictures. It may be 'cute' but it isn't circus; circus people simply don't do those things."

Mr. Leo and Mr. Roselli were in their element during the making of "The Little Clown" as Realart rented an entire circus for the "Big Top" scenes in the picture. The Escalante circus camped on the Hollywood lot for several days. Thousands attended the show because it was all free and as a result Director Thomas Heffron was able to obtain some unusual crowd scenes.

The leading male role is carried by Jack Mulhall, who in addition to his screen experience, is also an accomplished horseman and capable of performing the difficult feats required of him in this picture. The supporting cast includes Lura Anson, Winter Hall, Helen Dunbar, and Cameron Coffey.

Ingram Special Opens in West

METRO'S brilliant Los Angeles premiere of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" on Wednesday evening, March 9, proved almost as worthy of position in film history as did the actual making of this masterpiece of the screen, declares Metro, in a statement just issued from the headquarters of that organization.

Because of the unusual interest in this Rex Ingram production, the entire picture industry, from producers and stars down to the most humble extra, sought to gain admission to the Mission theatre, where it is scheduled for an indefinite run. Although the admission price for this showing of "The Four Horsemen" was set at $5—a precedent in Los Angeles—there were not half enough seats to supply the demand, it is declared by Metro. Hundreds of men and women stood before the playhouse in a spring shower in the hope that they might wedge themselves with the throng.

With the exception of "Doug" and Mary—who were in Mexico—practically every producer, star, director and player of the screen either was in the audience or attempting to obtain a seat, says the Metro statement.

Among those most readily recognized in the darkened house were:

Mayor Meredith P. Snyder and staff, William S. Smith, president of the Motion Picture Producers' Association, who was host at a party following the showing; Nazimova, Gloria Swanson, and members of a party who were her guests at a supper following the showing; George Melford, director and producer; May Allison, Viola Dana and Alice Lake, Metro stars, joined forces in an after-theatre gathering; Sol Wurtzel, representative of William Fox studios on the coast.

Eighteen-year-old Alice Terry, who plays the leading female role in Metro's big production, "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse"

Za Su Pitts, Tom Gallery, Shirley Mason, Bernie Durning, Max Linder, Gareth Hughes, Dallas Fitzgerald, Herbert K. Somborn, T. Daniel Farwley, Joseph Swickard, Stuart Payton, William D. Taylor, Herbert Rawlinson, Jack Ford, Irving Thalberg, Bridgetta Clark, Nigel de Brulier, Arthur Hoyt, Virginia Warwick, Wesley Ruggles, Phil McColloch, William Johnston, Mitchel Lewis, Ann Sampson, Paul Bern, Mac Sennett, Marcel de Sana, Brodwitch Turner, Sid Franklin, Jackie Saunders, Theodore Kosloff, Natacha Rambova and Douglas Gerrard.

This list is not offered as anything approaching a chronicle of the notables who were present at the premiere. These are the names only of those whose faces were picked out of the throngs as they entered the darkened theatre just before the opening of the performance. Alice Terry, the youthful featured player whose name has become familiar to theatregoers almost over night because of her brilliant work in this production, was not present at the opening. She was called to San Francisco because of the serious illness of her mother and was unable to return to the film capital in time to participate in the triumph of those who participated in the making of the picture.

Neither was Mr. Ingram nor Miss Mathis present to receive the congratulations of the audience. They were called to New York to attend the Eastern premiere of their production and, according to telegraphic advices, found it impossible to start on their return journey in time to greet their co-workers at the Mission.

Reviewers were unanimous in their characterization of "The Four Horsemen" as one of the greatest screen productions of all times.

Sees Depression as Benefit

Taught the Exhibitors Greater Caution, Belief of John E. Storey

THAT the tension brought about by economic conditions during the past six months has actually been of benefit to the motion picture business in some important respects is the conclusion reached by John E. Storey, Sales Manager of Associated Exhibitors, Inc., in an analysis of conditions. Mr. Storey is of the belief that economic necessity compelled the exhibitor to exercise greater caution in the selection of product and in that way productions of real merit came into their full value.

"As a result of the necessity of better showmanship to maintain profits the exhibitor has become a discriminating buyer," Mr. Storey states. "With the boom days in general business at an end every business man found himself under the necessity of doing keener and better work, of doing more careful buying, better advertising, and better merchandising generally. Although the motion picture business did not feel the depression as did other industries the exhibitor could not help being influenced by his environment and he developed the quality of caution.

"The producers of good motion pictures cannot quarrel with that development. The stronger the caution of exhibitors in buying pictures the better it will be for the producers of good pictures. Too often in the past have we seen exhibitors oversold with product which kept good pictures out of his theatre when they were released.

"The experience of these past few months should be a pretty good guide to producers in the next year. The condition fits in exactly with the policy established by Associated Exhibitors, Inc., for the mediocre picture is out of the schedule of Associated releases.

"As a conspicuous example we may cite the case of George Arliss in 'The Devil.' That picture hit the market at a time when the bump of caution was most developed in the buying market of the exhibitors. They were hard to convince but when they were once shown, 'The Devil' was booked everywhere.

"It was not that exhibitors were chary about the price. They are paying today prices consistent with the ability of their theatres to pay and earn a profit. They are always willing to pay that price for a picture that will get that profit. The thing they are afraid of is buying a picture, even at a low price, that will keep people out of their houses and will lose them prestige."

New Gasnier Subject Ready

"Good Women" Based on C. Gardner Sullivan Story Released Shortly

ROBERTSON-COLE announces the early release of "Good Women" produced by Louis Gasnier, the director of "Kismet," "Good Women" was produced from an original story by C. Gardner Sullivan, and is acted by a strong cast. The story is based on one of the mooted questions of the day—that of how far the marriage relation is governed by the laws of convention, states Robertson-Cole.

The cast includes Rosemary Theby, who had a very important part in "Kismet," as well as Hamilton Revelle, who also was seen in the Gasnier-Skinner production. Earl Schenck who also has played leading parts, is another who has a big part in "Good Women," while Arthur Stuart Hull and William P. Carleton play the other leading male roles. Other women in the cast are Irene Blackwell, Rhea Mitchell, and Eugenie Besserer. This is a cast which is bound to attract the following of several stars, declares Robertson-Cole, for more than one of its members have frequently been featured or starred in various productions.

In the months which have succeeded the release of "Kismet," and during which Gasnier has been working on this new super-special, countless inquiries have been coming in to the Robertson-Cole sales organization from various parts of the country, asking when the next Gasnier production was to be released. This is considered by Robertson-Cole officials to be indicative of the interest exhibitors feel in the work of the director of "Kismet."

Master Films Moves into New Studio

Negotiations were completed this week whereby Master Films, Inc., producers of "Torchy" comedies, starring Johnny Hines and released by Educational Exchanges, will take over the Fifty-fourth Street Studios for their exclusive and permanent producing home.

"Caligari" Film at Capitol

Goldwyn's European Acquisition to Be Presented Week of April 3

THE Goldwyn headquarters in New York reports that keen interest has been aroused over "The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari," which opens at the Capitol Theatre, New York, on April 3rd. Goldwyn officials declare that this picture, judging from the advance reports, will prove another screen epic imported from Europe this season.

Following the spirit of modern art, the picture employs the method of impressionism in the unfolding of a story that might have been written by Edgar Allan Poe. The story is worked out on a strange plane of emotion—strange, at least, to the films if not to fiction or to the drama. In order to maintain this plane daring liberties have been taken with the backgrounds and sets in the picture. The definite, rigid lines of convention have been abandoned for fluent, impressionistic forms, so that the mood of the characters is expressed no less by what surrounds them than by their own interpretation of their feelings. This in itself would be a radical departure from anything that has heretofore been done on the screen.

An effective advance publicity campaign has been carried on for the past three weeks through the newspapers and the distribution of 100,000 circulars in the Capitol programs and in cafes and tea rooms.

The advertising is distinguished by its dignified presentation of the facts about the production, without display or illustrations and with no exaggeration in the statements concerning the picture. Consistent space was taken in the newspapers over a period long enough to impress New York theatre-goers with the importance of the picture.

Irene Castle Back on "Lot"

To Begin Production Within Week Under Direction of E. Hollywood

FINAL negotiations have been completed for work on the Irene Castle production, according to an announcement from the Hodkinson home office. Director Edwin L. Hollywood announces that camera-work will be begun within the next week. The first production will be made here in the East and will be the picturization of a Clarence Buddington Kelland novel which recently appeared in "Everybody's Magazine." Eve Unsell is at present engaged in writing the continuity. An announcement concerning the cast will be made very shortly.

Mrs. Castle danced on the screen in some of her early productions but was not satisfied with the results obtained, it is stated, insofar as she claimed that while the rhythm of the dance was perfect at the time it was executed at the studio and to the music of the studio orchestra it was different when the picture was played at various points in the country where the music of the theatre failed, perhaps, to keep properly synchronized with the picture. It is said by Hodkinson officials that this objection has been overcome through a new system of preparing the music cue sheet which insures perfect synchronization.

There are added points of appeal in the fact that she will be given an opportunity also to show before the camera all those diversified athletic accomplishments which have assisted in making her famous. She will ride horseback; she will swim, and she will ski in her new picture. The locale of the picture ranges from "the great outdoors,"—which, in this instance, happens to be a Northwestern Lumber Camp,—to the palatial home of a New York millionaire.

Fine Reports Received on "East Lynne"

THE W. W. Hodkinson headquarters reports that Hugo Ballin's production "East Lynne" has surpassed all expectations for its success and that it "has stood up under the severest tests." From all sections, according to W. W. Hodkinson, congratulatory wires and letters are reaching the home-office testifying to the success being achieved by its new release.

Thomas A. Rigler, of the Park theatre, Hannibal, Mo., wires: "Played 'East Lynne' pre-release four days to biggest business ever done in our theatre. Give us more pictures like this."

Mellinger Bros., of Cumberland, Md., in a communication to S. A. Galanty, the Hodkinson representative in Washington, D. C., declares: "'East Lynne opened to capacity business. Picture was big success."

The Hodkinson headquarters also reports that word has been received from Chicago stating that "East Lynne" will run simultaneously at the Capital, Davenport, Ia., and the Fort Armstrong at Rock Island, Ill., two houses recently opened and reputed to be among the most beautiful houses of the Tri-Cities district.

Bayard Veiller Directs "Woman Next Door"

Bayard Veiller, chief of productions at Metro's West Coast Studios, will direct "The Woman Next Door," in which May Allison is to be starred. Among the principals are, Albert Roscoe, Frank Elliott, Irene Hunt, Stanley Goethals, Dana Todd and Wilton Taylor. Stanley Goethals is the four-year-old player who was the sensation of "Outside the Law" a recent Universal production.

Three Salesmen Named by Ass'd Exhibitors

Announcement has been made by Phil L. Ryan, manager of franchises of the Associated Exhibitors, of the selection of the first three representatives of the Associated franchise selling force who will carry the plan to the exhibitors of the country. The men selected have earned the confidence of exhibitors in every territory during several years of experience in the industry and are said to be thoroughly qualified for the task in hand. They are H. L. KNAPPEN, E. S. FLYNN and IRA H. COHEN.

The representatives are men who have sold film in every state in the union, and who have held important executive positions in the field for some of the most important distributing organizations.

Borzage Starts New Production

To Make Fannie Hurst Story for Cosmopolitan Productions

FRANK BORZAGE, who directed "Humoresque," has begun work for Cosmopolitan Productions on "Back Pay," another Fannie Hurst story, which Frances Marion adapted for the screen. Miss Marion stopped work on "Just Around the Corner," a Fannie Hurst story which she adapted, and which she has been directing for Cosmopolitan Productions, in order to write the scenario for this new picture.

Seena Owen, whose last picture, "The Woman God Changed," Cosmopolitan Productions will release soon, is taking the leading role of Hester Bevins. Matt Moore takes the leading male role of Jerry. In "Back Pay" there is only one other important character, who has not yet been cast, and Mr. Borzage said that he is glad of the opportunity to handle a small cast. His last Cosmopolitan picture, "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford," to be released in a few months, required the management and direction of a large cast of principals and numerous supers.

Matt Moore, who plays the part of Jerry in "Back Pay," played in "The Passionate Pilgrim," a Cosmopolitan success, and also played the leading role in "Straight Is the Way," a Cosmopolitan Production, which has been delighting audiences since its release early in March.

"Back Pay" is the story of the redemption by means of true love of a girl who has taken the line of least resistance in her struggle for a livelihood. Its theme is of great heart interest, and it is a distinct departure for Mr. Borzage to go from "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford," a comedy, to this drama of modern life which Frances Marion has handled deftly in her scenario.

The theme of "Back Pay" also differs essentially from Mr. Borzage's tremendous success, "Humoresque." "Back Pay" presents a problem that any girl might have to solve, and at the same time the drama of the situation around which this problem is woven is so intense that the story holds the interest throughout. The heroine, Hester Bevins, when she is told that the wages of sin is death, remarks that then she has a lot of back pay coming to her, and that is the basis of the picture's title.

Mr. Borzage plans to take his most difficult scenes first. These are the scenes in a war hospital in this country after the hero has returned from France. In these scenes Miss Owen's great power as an emotional actress will have ample opportunity. The part of Jerry also requires great acting from Matt Moore.

Altogether "Back Pay" offers Mr. Borzage and his cast opportunities which are as great as those which he worked out to such advantage in "Humoresque."

The basis of the story as written by Fannie Hurst displays the same power of emotional writing for which she is famous.

Educational Drives for Record

"EDUCATIONAL product in 75 per cent of the theatres of the United States by July 1st," is the slogan adopted by the entire home office and field forces of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc. This campaign has been begun under the direction of President E. W. Hammons prior to his announcement of the complete production plans for the next year.

July 1st marks the close of the first fiscal year of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., the distributing organization. The first exchanges were opened at that time in 1920 though the entire system was not in complete operation until some three months later. However, the drive will apply to all offices. It will include the entire product now being distributed, but will not consider either new product or pictures under renewals of contracts with present producing units.

According to statements from Educational its product now dominates the first-run theatres of the country and especially is booked by every circuit of importance. This applies to every series of pictures in every city of importance. This campaign has been carried through the smaller cities, but now the chief effort will be centered in obtaining bookings in such smaller localities as all of the product has not been placed, and this policy has been encouraged by the voluntary contracts on the part of exhibitors who have run part of the series and have demanded the rest.

Mr. Hammons is this week on a tour of a number of the principal offices including Washington, Pittsburgh, Louisville, Cincinnati, Cleveland and Detroit and in each of these places he will talk over with the branch managers the business of the year and the plans for the future. Henry Ginsberg, domestic sales manager, has in the past week completed visits to the Boston, New Haven, Albany, Buffalo and Toronto, Canada, offices and will shortly leave on a trip to all of the other offices than those to which Mr. Hammons will go, with the exception of the Pacific Coast.

First year contracts with all the producing units carry first-run releases of every series well up into July. Announcements have already been made of the renewal of the contract for Torchy Comedies which will bring twelve in the next year and for twenty Mermaid comedies, twelve of which will be made by Jack White and Lloyd Hamilton with their own producing company and eight featuring Jimmie Adams and made by Astra. Other contracts have been signed, but announcement has been withheld pending the completion of some details.

Educational Product in All Canadian Circuits

Canada has now met the record made in the United States of having every important motion picture theatre circuit book Educational product, according to announcement made by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc. This statement was made following the return of Henry Ginsberg, domestic sales manager, from Toronto where he has been conferring with local officials of Canadian Educational Films, Ltd.

The four principal circuits operating in Canada are the Allen Theatres, the Famous Players Theatres, the Loew houses and the Griffin Circuit; the last named confining its attention to a number of Ontario cities. In such cases where one circuit dominates a city it has booked the entire Educational product, and at points where there is competition the product has been divided up, so that there is now one hundred per cent representation.

$4,000 Boudoir Set in "Enchantment"

A feature of the settings found in Cosmopolitan's production, "Enchantment," starring Marion Davies, is declared to be the boudoir of the affluent young lady played by Miss Davies. Cosmopolitan points out this setting as an instance of the care with which it arranges its settings to harmonize with the characters and the atmosphere of the star. The cost of the boudoir set is said to be $4,000.

In "Enchantment" Miss Davies is supported by Forrest Stanley. Arthur Rankin, Tom Lewis and Edith Shayne are also in the cast. The picture is being directed by Robert G. Vignola. Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will release "Enchantment."

"Puppets of Fate" Is Released March 28

Donn Byrne's story, "Puppets of Fate," with Viola Dana as the star, was Metro's release for March 28. Besides the star, the cast of "Puppets of Fate," includes Francis McDonald, Jackie Saunders, Fred Kelsey, Thomas Rickertts and Edward Kennedy. Adaptation to the screen was made by Ruth Ann Baldwin and Molly Parro. Albert J. Kelley directed the picture.

Better Serials Demanded

Brooks, of Pathe, Believes Small Towner is Now Discriminating

"FEW and remote are the audiences left for cheap and sensational motion pictures. Fewer still are the "hoakum" serials that can be disposed of anywhere, at any price. Audiences, even in the small towns drawing their audiences largely from the rural districts have developed along lines of taste even more rapidly than picture production has."

This significant statement represents the conviction of Edgar Oswald Brooks, Pathe Serial Sales Manager, after a tour of the Southwestern territory and talks with exhibitors catering to all classes of audiences.

Mr. Brooks has just returned to the Pathe Home Office after three weeks spent in visits to exhibitors in Indiana, Western Kentucky, Southern Illinois, Missouri and Iowa. He was pleased to discover that even in localities where present economic conditions are disturbing, and depressing for general business, no concessions are made in favor of cheap inferior pictures.

"It was the same story everywhere," said Mr. Brooks. "It appears that no screen audience is so small or so remote from any big city centre of culture that it has not developed in taste and ability to discriminate between good and bad pictures along with the rest of the world. This applies with special force to serials—the unchallenged popular leader in picture entertainment but only when they are serials with logical stories rationally and capably filmed. It is getting to be an old story that this means the Pathe Serial, which, from the beginning, has been the best among serial.

"The fact that Pathe serials, owing to their constantly increasing quality value, are being more and more heavily booked by the biggest and finest theatres in the country, causes no alarm in the mind of the small exhibitor. He realizes that his patrons are just as discriminating as those who crowd the foremost picture palaces of Chicago, St. Louis, Louisville or New Orleans."

A Strong Paramount Cast

Mitchell Lewis, Milton Sill and Ferguson Support Betty Compson

ONE of the strongest casts ever assembled on the screen at one time will be seen in "At the End of the World," the picture which, as has been previously announced, will mark Betty Compson's first appearance as a star under the Paramount banner.

Among those who have already been selected to support Miss Compson are Mitchell Lewis, Milton Sills and Casson Ferguson. Mr. Lewis in his stage career played with William Faversham, Nazimova and others. His six feet of height lends strength to the description that he is a man of unusual physique. Milton Sills' recent work in Paramount productions: "Behold My Wife" and "The Faith Healer" have increased his popularity to the extent where he requires no further introduction. Casson Ferguson, a Southerner who has derived a large part of his education in Paris, has played in many recent Paramount pictures, excelling in juvenile types.

The appearance of Miss Compson as a Paramount star is not the only new feature which will mark "At the End of the World," on which production work was commenced last week. Another feature will be the evolution of Penrhyn Stanlaws, world famous artist, as a full fledged director of motion pictures, this being the first production in which he has taken complete charge.

"At the End of the World" is peculiarly suited to Miss Compson's emotional style of acting. The story is an adaptation of the famous European success by Ernest Klein which has been scenarized by E. Bingham.

"Without Limit" on B'way

George Baker's Production Well Received by Capitol's Audience

NEW YORK put the seal of its approval upon "Without Limit," a George D. Baker production for S-L Pictures, released by Metro, when a crowded house received it favorably at its Broadway premiere at the Capitol theatre on Sunday, March 20. "Temple Dusk" was originally published in the Saturday Evening Post.

In Boston, Cleveland and other cities "Without Limit" was heralded as the picture which supplied a convincing answer to those advocating a rigorous censorship on the productions of the screen, declares Metro. It was praised by the critics as a picture which put over a forceful message in a way not only highly entertaining but in such a manner as to make a deep impression, says the statement from the Metro headquarters.

Because of this reception accorded "Without Limit," announcement is made by S-L Pictures of an energetic campaign now being conducted to have the picture exhibited in every part of the country where its story and entertaining message will be used by the exhibitor to prove that motion pictures of the highest calibre do not need the restraining and ofttimes destructive censorship to make them acceptable to the public.

Mr. Baker adapted the story for the screen.

New Stories Bought by Universal Film

UNIVERSAL announces the purchase of several new stories by prominent writers, and a playlet from the pen of Wilbar Daniel Steele. The playlet is called "Ropes" and was published recently in Harper's Magazine.

"Three in a Thousand," a tale of humor, mystery and melodrama by Ben Ames Williams, has been bought for Frank Mayo's next starring vehicle. The title refers to the three most beautiful and accomplished women in a thousand. Universal casting heads have selected Jean Calhoun, Jacqueline Logan, and Ruth Ashby for this trio. The picture will be directed by Fred LeRoy Granville.

"Renunciation" a forceful western story by Peter B. Kyne, will be picturized by Universal with an all-star cast under the direction of William Worthington. Grace Darmond has been selected for the leading feminine role.

Another new Universal picture soon to go into production is "The Scarlet Shawl," by Johnston McCully, author of "The Mark of Zorro." It will be used as the next starring vehicle for Carmel Myers. Jack Conway will direct.

Allies' Patrol Seen in Pathe News 24

Following its first exclusive pictures of the allied armies occupying German territory, Pathe News in its issue No. 24 vividly illustrates the chief features of pending efforts to come to some sort of settlement with Germany. French, English and Belgian troops are seen patrolling the streets of several cities beyond the Rhine, including Dusseldorf, the city first occupied on March 8th, and from which relays of airplanes hurried the Pathe News films to catch the Olympic at Liverpool. While the German people and the rest of the world await the outcome, the movements of French and English ministers seeking a solution of the perplexing problem are shown.

EXHIBITORS HERALD

"Heart of Maryland" a Fine Achievement

Vitagraph's Screen Dramatization of David Belasco's Stage Success Should Prove a Distinct Hit. In Settings, Lighting Effects, Costumes and Backgrounds Shows Exceptional Care. Fine Cast Headed by Catherine Calvert. Tom Terriss Directed

ABANDONING the trite technicalities that have made pictures of the Civil War boresome to an extreme by long drawn out battle scenes, galloping horses and pursuing troops, and long shots of historic personages, Vitagraph's version of the famed Belasco stage play, "The Heart of Maryland," employs only those elements making the artistic, permanently-interesting screen feature.

Romance and history have been deftly woven with the result that the completed pictorial canvas stands as one of the superior achievements of current motion picture history. It is a picture that carries as much entertainment value and interest upon a second viewing as with the first—criterion enough of its worth.

The picture patronage has made it known universally that present times are not far enough removed from the World War to give a chance to any features laying the stress upon that conflict that this one does upon the War of the Rebellion. With the Civil War it is different. Its perspective has glorified its romance and sentiment and made it perennially popular material for the screen. There is always a generation coming on to be instructed in the historical events surrounding its era. The picture that can meet this need and at the same time offer the amount of real entertainment value — wholesome and spirited—that this one does, has success assured for it

The Cast

Maryland Calvert	Catherine Calvert
Alan Kendrick	Crane Wilbur
Lloyd Calvert	William Collier, Jr.
Bob Telfair	Ben Lyon
Nanny McNair	Victoria White
Colonel Thorpe	Felix Krembs
Tom Boone	Warner Richmond

The public has been educated to appreciate the difference in the degree of screen mechanics with which pictures are now handled. They will find much to praise herewith from the technical viewpoint alone. The lighting is exquisite and photography charming. The patronage is also intelligent in the matter of plot strength and it will enjoy the intricacies of the one employed in this feature. It is many-sided, and commands close attention to follow it. But it is made to proceed smoothly and rapidly and without the least confusion.

It is reasonable to believe that the picture took six months in the making. Details have been given careful attention and the restored buildings, uniforms and costumes that are claimed to have come from Southern sacred keeping for use in the picture, lend it realistic and charming touch. The backgrounds in the Southern country are beautiful.

There are a number of thrills that include importantly the heroine's swinging from a bell clapper in a belfry to save the life of her lover whose life is threatened, he being accused of being a spy. A relieving touch of humor is effectively employed to make the proper contrasts in the character of the old colored servant employed about "The Lilacs," the Calvert plantation.

Maryland, the character taken by Catherine Calvert, is a Southern beauty and her sweetheart marches with the rebel army of the North. Her brother is a Southern soldier and through him she acquires valuable information regarding the movements of enemy troops, which she imparts to her lover. He, in turn, without realizing until later that he has misused the confidence, broken only to save himself, suffers through a situation that entangles the trio, another soldier who is in love with Maryland, and a rascally traitor.

Miss Calvert scores in character roles of this sort and she is engaging in every way as Maryland Calvert. Crane Wilbur is her able support and the role of the brother is carried capably by William Collier, Jr. Others of the cast are Felix Krembs, Ben Lyon, Bernard Siegel, Henry Hallam, Warner Richmond and Victoria White.

The picture is a Tom Terriss production and its director is entitled to compliment. It offers unlimited exploitation possibilities that will have the added value of being seasonable around the time of the patriotic holidays.—I. F. D.

Goldwyn Starts New Features

PHOTOGRAPHY will be completed at the Goldwyn studios this week on the forthcoming Reginald Barker Production, "The Old Nest," from Rupert Hughes' successful novel of the same title. Roland Rushton, the well-known stage director, was recently added to the cast for an important role, bringing the total number of players in the cast up to twenty-one, the largest number of principals ever used in one photoplay at the Goldwyn studios.

"The Grim Comedian," Rita Weiman's original scenario, went into production this week under the direction of Frank Lloyd. Goldwyn has borrowed for the leading male role in the photoplay Jack Holt, one of Paramount's best known leading men. The leading feminine role will be played by Phoebe Hunt, who left the speaking stage to create the part on the screen. This is her first motion picture role and she reports that she is fascinated by the work. Others in the cast are Gloria Hope, Mae Hopkins, Bert Woodruff and Laura Lavarnie.

An original photoplay by Mary Roberts Rinehart, famous novelist and playwright, will go into production soon under the direction of E. Mason Hopper who directed Goldwyn's picturization of Mrs. Rinehart's novel, "The Empire Builders" under the screen title of "It's a Great Life." Her original scenario is tentatively called "A Glorious Fool." J. G. Hawks, managing editor at the Goldwyn studios, is writing the continuity.

Gouverneur Morris' second original, "Ace of Heart's," is progressing rapidly under the direction of Wallace Worsley. The author is on the set daily in collaboration with the director.

Alice Duer Miller, novelist and playwright, arrived at the studios this week, accompanied by Maron Frances Lee, continuity writer, to collaborate on the film version of Mrs. Miller's story, "The Woman Who Hated Politics."

Lambert Hillyer, well known as a director and a scenario writer, having recently written and directed several of the William S. Hart pictures, has been engaged by Goldwyn to write the continuity for Katherine Newlin Burt's story written directly for the screen, "The Man from Lost River."

Will Rogers is in the midst of filming the "Romeo and Juliet" episode of his new comedy, "Doubling for Romeo," written by Elmer L. Rice, under the direction of Clarence Badger, and the studio is a riot of color with the fifteenth century Italian costumes called for by the dream scene of the Arizona cowboy. In this scene Will Rogers appears for the first time in tights despite his five years with the Ziegfeld "Follies."

Pathe Rolls Up a Heavy Score

"BRUNET MONTH," closing on Thursday of this week, when final results are tallied, is certain to stand as a great tribute to the President of Pathe, on the anniversary of his fourth year at the head of the eminent distributing organization, declares a statement just received from the Pathe headquarters.

No idea of the winner in any of the four divisions could be obtained at closing time, so heavy was the influx of contracts on the closing days. A week before the termination of the competition, indications were very plain then that there would be no "repeats" by the victors in November. However, these four branches came to the front in the last week with such force, as to place themselves in a splendid position of "coming back."

As an indication of the returns to be expected from "Brunet Month," one branch notified the home office on March 21st, that on that date it already had more contracts than for the entire month of November, and guaranteed to show a one hundred per cent increase over that period, which heretofore was the greatest in the annals of Pathe.

Other branches have made reports that were very flattering to their selling ability, and to the Pathe product, and it would not be surprising if every office returned a record that it has never before attained.

Conditions allied themselves most favorably with the "Brunet Month" drive. In those sections of the country where admittedly the situation was precarious for the motion picture industry, a decided change for the better set in early in March. This was particularly true in the automobile and manufacturing districts which had been severely hit by the changing economic conditions. Branches like Detroit, Boston, Indianapolis and others profited greatly by the newer conditions, and undoubtedly they will figure prominently in the ultimate outcome.

Winners of "Brunet Month" Drive Doubtful

In all probability, it will be the second week in April before the winners in the Pathe competition will be known. The flow of contracts in the last week was so strong and continuous that the accounting departments were virtually overwhelmed.

One thing has been conclusively proved by Brunet Month. That is that the exhibitor is still getting his goodly share of business whenever he plays pictures that have a popular appeal. The showman with the courage to thoroughly exploit his attractions, is not having any difficulty filling his house at every performance.

It has been very noticeable, too, that exhibitors are running stronger than ever to programs comprised in a large measure of short subjects. This fact is reflected in the greatly increased business the Pathe short subjects department will have to report for March.

Current Paramount Issues

Dorothy Dalton and Mae Murray Pictures Released on March 27

DOROTHY DALTON and Mae Murray take their places again as star and featured player respectively in the two pictures listed for general distribution on the Paramount release schedule for March 27th.

In appearing as the star of "The Idol of the North," the picture to be released on this date, Miss Dalton returns to the role of a daughter of the great Northwest, her characterizations of which have marked the heights of her greatest popularity.

The story of "The Idol of the North" is an original script prepared by J. Clarkson Miller especially for Miss Dalton with a view to giving adequate scope for the abilities with which she is peculiarly endowed.

In the stellar role Miss Dalton is ably supported by a cast composed of Edwin August, E. J. Ratcliffe, Riley Hatch, Jules Cowles, Florence St. Leonard, Jessie Arnold, Marguerite Marsh and Joe King.

By contrast the picture in which Mae Murray is featured, "The Gilded Lily," centers around cosmopolitan life, featuring a galaxy of Broadway cabarets and night life. In centers where it has been given a pre-release showing this Robert Leonard production has already won the sobriquet of being the companion piece to "On With the Dance," the initial picture featuring Miss Murray which won such favorable notice on its release.

Clara Beranger, skillful scenarist who adapted such successes as "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," "The Firing Line" and "Civilian Clothes" for the screen is the author of this original which was prepared especially for Miss Murray.

Harvey O'Higgins Joins Realart on Coast

Realart's West Coast scenario staff now includes six writers. The newest addition is Harvey O'Higgins, the dramatist whose plays "The Dummy," "On the Hiring Line" and "The Argyle Case," have won him a wide reputation. Mr. O'Higgins is now at Hollywood and at work on his first original photoplay.

The following writers are now with Realart: Elmer Harris, supervising director; Percy Heath, American author of "Sari," Douglas Doty, former editor of Century Magazine; Alice Eyton, Edith Kennedy and Mr. O'Higgins.

"In securing Mr. O'Higgins," said General Manager J. S. Woody, "we feel that Realart has most completely fulfilled its pledge of 'Perfect stories, perfectly played.' Mr. O'Higgins is one of America's most capable writers. He tells his tales with a wealth of dramatic sense and a keen knowledge of the public's taste.

"Mr. O'Higgins has made an especial study of the motion picture and its reaction upon the American mind and has developed the principles of photodramatic appeal to a high degree."

Stahl to Produce "King Lear" for Mayer

Paul C. Mooney, general manager of the Louis B. Mayer offices, announces that John M. Stahl will produce "King Lear" for Louis B. Mayer, to be released through First National. Arrangements for actual production are nearing completion.

"A Small Town Idol" Opens New Theatre

Mack Sennett's feature comedy, "A Small Town Idol," featuring Ben Turpin and a big comedy cast, had the distinction of opening Joseph Erber's new theatre in East St. Louis, Illinois.

New Briefs Concerning Fox Film Activities

WILLIAM FOX announces that "Over the Hill" is to open at the Philharmonic Auditorium in Los Angeles, beginning the first week in May. Johnnie Walker, who created the role of the "black sheep" son in "Over the Hill," has gone to Hollywood, Cal., where he will appear in several Fox productions. This Fox special is now nearing its eighth month as a Broadway attraction. It is at present playing at the Broadhurst theatre.

Dorothy Walters, who has appeared in the part of the Irish mother in "Irene," has been engaged to support Pearl White in a Fox picture now in the making. J. Searle Dawley is handling the megaphone.

Ad Display for Short Subjects Increases

One of the most significant developments of its recently completed survey of exhibiting and exchange conditions through this country and Canada is reported by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., to be the increased lobby and poster display and general advertising accorded one and two-reel comedies and short subjects generally. The demand for paper and photos has been tripled in the past six months, it is shown.

Educational is now issuing one and three sheets on each two-reel comedy, 11x14 lobby photos, press books, advertising aids and 8x10s to those theatres especially desiring them.

A. P. Premieres in Los Angeles

GOING further in establishing Los Angeles as the world's premiere show place for motion pictures, F. B. Warren, general manager of the Associated Producers, Inc., announces that in the future all the productions of the Associated Producers will have their premiere at the New Symphony theatre, Los Angeles, California.

This plan has been in mind ever since the formation of the Associated Producers, but the complete details were worked out at a meeting held several weeks ago between Thomas H. Ince for the Associated Producers and Dr. H. B. Breckwedel, who is managing director and owner of the New Symphony theatre.

The remodeling of the New Symphony establishes it as one of Southern California's most beautiful motion picture houses and there Los Angeles will see world premiere showings of the films of the Associated Producers. The stage has been enlarged to permit the presentation of special prologues and novelties, and the entire house has been redecorated at a great expense.

The A. P. directors, all of whom are producing on the Coast, have always felt that, since the advent of the silent drama, Los Angeles has fostered, encouraged and financed the greatest motion picture productions in screen history, and realizing that if the premieres were held on the Coast where they could be personally supervised in all presentation details, that it would be no trouble at all to eliminate all flaws and defects. This naturally would result in New York receiving a perfect picture, and the producer would not have to rely upon criticisms via telegraph before altering the picture.

The formal opening of the New Symphony theatre held February 22nd, was by invitation exclusively, the feature being Thomas H. Ince's production, "Lying Lips," featuring Florence Vidor and House Peters.

Dr. Breckwedel arranged a splendid program for the occasion, his orchestra of twenty pieces rendering some superb selections, all of them quite in keeping with the theme of the picture. All of the Los Angeles film colony attended this opening and paid homage to the new cinema institution of Associated Producers production.

"Lying Lips," which is now running in its fifth week has played to capacity business throughout the engagement. It remains for another week and will then be succeeded by Allan Dwan's production, "The Forbidden Thing." The Dwan staff is preparing a special exploitation campaign in conjunction with Dr. Breckwedel, so it is very likely that "The Forbidden Thing," will enjoy as long a run as "Lying Lips."

From now on the entire output of the Associated Producers, Inc., will have their premiere presentations at the New Symphony theatre. As these will include productions from the studios of such masters of the silent drama as Marshall Neilan, Thomas H. Ince, Maurice Tourneur, Allan Dwan, King Vidor, Gardner Sullivan, J. L. Forthingham, and J. Parker Reid, Jr., the Los Angeles motion picture enthusiasts are indeed to be envied.

The policy of the theatre will be indefinite and exclusive first-runs of the Associated Producers productions, the length of the run to be based entirely upon a set drawing power as established by one picture.

Paramount Winner Announced

AT the opening drive in its advertising and publicity campaign on "Experience," George Fitsmaurice's latest Paramount picture, the Paramount publicity department has just staged one of the biggest publicity exploits ever given to any one picture. To select girls who would compete for the role of "Beauty" in Fitsmaurice's picture, beauty competitions lasting three weeks each, were conducted by the Daily News of New York and the Detroit News of Detroit.

The Daily News, which has a circulation daily of nearly 500,000 copies, opened its competition in New York on February 21 and every day until March 14 carried a two-page spread, amply illustrated with photos of contestants, on its search for a girl who would play the role of Beauty. Each story set forth the name of "Experience" and told the nature of the picture. As a result of this tremendous publicity, more than 6,000 girls sent in their photographs as candidates for the role, it is declared.

On Monday, March 21, after a thorough examination of all the photographs had been made by a committee of judges, Miss Edna Wheaton of New York City, an eighteen-year-old music student who had come to the metropolis from Ithaca, was announced as the most beautiful girl in New York City.

The Detroit News opened its contest with a double-column display head story on the front page of its issue of February 16, and every day thereafter carried a front page story on the progress of the contest. On each Sunday during the contest it carried a full-page layout of contestants in its rotogravure section, and, in addition to this publicity carried posters on all its billboards and delivery wagons announcing the quest for Beauty to play in "Experience." In every story and in all the Detroit News advertising the title of "Experience" was prominently featured.

Miss Juliette Henkel, seventeen years old, a student at the ultra-fashionable Liggett School, and the niece of Julius H. Haas, president of the Wayne County and Home Savings Bank, was selected.

On Monday, March 21, both Miss Wheaton and Miss Henkel arrived at the Paramount studio in Long Island City to meet Mr. Fitsmaurice and compete for the role of Beauty. The Detroit News sent a staff correspondent, Mrs. Buda Stephens-Baker, to New York to report the activities of Miss Henkel, and Mrs. Baker telegraphed a column story to her paper each day.

William Vogel Sails on European Tour

William M. Vogel, foreign rights distributor for the First National Charlie Chaplin comedies, the Hodkinson productions and Chester scenics and comedies sailed on the Aquitania Tuesday, March 22nd for Europe. London is his first objective. He also has appointments in Paris, Brussels, Antwerp and will also visit Berlin in behalf of his interests in the Atlantic Cinema Corporation of which he is a director. During his absence abroad, the sales activities in his New York headquarters will be in charge of Albert K. Greenland.

Spirited Lion Hunt in International No. 24

Exclusive pictures of the Duke of Connaught's expedition to India are included in International News No. 24, released March 25 by Universal. They were taken by U. K. Whipple, official photographer with the Duke's expedition.

The series of "shots" show the Duke on a wild animal hunt in the jungles. The pictures were obtained by Whipple from the back of an elephant, upon which his camera stand had been mounted. The pictures show the Duke's party in the Bengal wilds, the preparations for the hunt, the "beating" parties rounding up the beasts, and the spirited chase of a lion as it makes it escape.

"Now or Never" Is Setting New Records

Maintaining his place in the finest theatres in the country Harold Lloyd is establishing a new record for prices with the first of his new series of comedies for Associated Exhibitors, declares a statement from Pathe. His initial picture is "Now or Never," a comedy full of thrills and the word from all branches in which exhibitors have seen it is to the effect that in this picture Lloyd has reached his best mark in production. It is a three-reel picture and in practically every case exhibitors are booking it as a feature.

Cecil Owen Realart's Casting Director

Cecil Owen, Broadway actor, producer and manager is now casting director in Realart's eastern studios. Owen will be remembered for his stage roles with Jane Cowl in "The Crowded Hour," "Lilac Time" and "Information, Please," and for his screen appearances with Ethel Barrymore, Violet Mercereau and others. He produced Earl Carroll's "The Lady of the Lamp" and "Daddy Dumplin's."

Joe Bloom on Visit to Hodkinson Office

Joe Bloom, Hodkinson supervisor of the Middle West Division, paid a flying visit to New York on Tuesday, March 22nd, where he remained just over night and then hastened out to get back on the job again. Mr. Bloom was more than optimistic about conditions in his territory and the prestige held by the Hodkinson organization.

Paramount to Release "Deception" Soon

UNDER the title of "Deception," Paramount will shortly release what it describes to be a tremendous production depicting the absorbing life story of Anne Boleyn. This will tell in dramatic fashion the romance of loves behind a throne. Directed by Ernest Lubitsch, the famous Bohemian director who staged "Passion," "Deception" is said to be the most stupendous production to have reached these shores from the Old World.

Playing the leading role of Anne Boleyn is Helen Norton one of the most famous of European stage and screen stars, who has been called "The second Bernhardt." In "Deception" she is said to have her biggest role.

Although the exact date for the first appearance of "Deception" has not yet been fixed, it is understood that the picture will be given its American premiere in the near future in New York under the direction of Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, managing director of the Rialto, Rivoli and Criterion theatres, New York.

All of the immense buildings and historic settings in the life of Anne Boleyn before and after her intrigues with Henry VIII of England have been reproduced with remarkable fidelity, Paramount declares. In addition to the street scenes of mediaeval London, Lubitsch reproduced Westminster Abbey which plays an important part in the development of the plot.

Fox Sets April 10 for Release of "Skirts"

William Fox announces that "Skirts," the big six-reel comedy, will be released April 10 and that in it Clyde Cook, the contortionist comedian will appear as the central figure among the fun-makers. The cast will include the army of Fox Sunshine Widows and the Singer Midgets.

Educational Supplies All Except Feature

For the fifth consecutive week the Strand Theatre, Seattle, last week bore out the claim of Educational Film Exchange, Inc., that it supplies "everything for the program except the feature." Kinogram is the regular news service used at the Strand and during all these weeks both the scenics and comedies have been selected from Educational product.

For instance, the program at the Strand last week included "Blondes," a single reel Vanity comedy featuring Patricia Palmer, Mary Wynn and Francis Feeney, and "Voices of the Sea," one of Robert C. Bruce Scenics.

At the Liberty, the other leading Jensen and Von Herberg house in Seattle, the bill included "Moonshine," a two-reel Mermaid comedy starring Lloyd Hamilton, and "Out of the Past," a scenic.

New Harry Carey Feature Under Way

Production work of Harry Carey's new starring vehicle, "Christmas Eve at Pilot Butte," was started last week at Universal City under the direction of Jack Ford. The story, written by Courtney Ryley Cooper, originally appeared in the Red Book Magazine. E. J. Clawson wrote the continuity.

Irene Rich and Barabara LeMar will play the leading feminine roles, and the rest of the cast will include Edward Coxen, George Seigmann, George Stone, Helen Field and Charles Insley.

"First Born" Shown in New Loew Theatre

"The First Born," Robertson-Cole super-special starring Sessue Hayakawa, has just received noteworthy engagement, being the second picture to be shown at Loew's State theatre, Indianapolis, Ind., which was opened only two weeks ago. Not only did the Indianapolis papers give "The First Born" favorable reviews, but the management of the theatre reported to Robertson-Cole the most satisfying results of the week's run.

No. Carolina Is Moved Westward for Picture

Asheville, N. C., has been transformed into the Indiana community of Canaan for the filming of "The Conquest of Canaan," in which Thomas Meighan will star for Paramount, according to Thomas Geraghty, supervising director of Paramount's eastern productions, who has just returned from the South where he inspected initial work on the new production.

An entire village has been laid out in Asheville, to reproduce the setting and atmosphere of Canaan as the town has been perpetuated in Booth Tarkington's well known novel.

Fox to Open Office in Copenhagen, Denmark

William Fox has placed another dot on his office map which shows that Fox Films encircle the globe. This dot was made at Copenhagen, where Arthur G. Gregory will open Fox offices from which the entire Scandinavian field will be covered. When Mr. Gregory has the new branch office in working order he will open other branches in Norway, Sweden and Finland.

The opening of the Scandinavian office, which will become an accomplished fact about the first of May, will give Mr. Fox personal supervision over his releases through a large portion of the continent.

Wyndham Standing for Lead in 'Ave Maria'

Hugo Ballin has announced that his leading man for the production that is now under way under the working title of "Ave Maria" will be Wyndham Standing, who has but recently returned from abroad. Mr. Standing is an artist well known to the followers of the silent drama. Perhaps his greatest screen accomplishment was his splendid performance in T. Hayes Hunter's picturization of Basil King's "Earthbound."

The leading feminine role will be in the hands of Mabel Ballin. Other members of the cast include John Webb Dillion, Jules Cowles, and Geo. Bancroft. "Ave Maria" is well under way at the present time.

Late Cardinal Shown in Kinograms

Pictures of the late Cardinal Gibbons, taken on the occasion of his late public appearance, are included in the issue of Kinograms, released through Educational, for the first half of the week. There is a splendid portrait of the dead churchman included.

Visitors are shown thronging the White House which has been opened to them again for the first time in years. There are some striking views of the launching of the newest super-dreadnaught, the Colorado and from San Francisco come pictures of the landing of the body of Lieut. Langdon, U. S. N., who was killed by a Jap sentry at Vladivostok.

ABOUT PLAYERS

ANOTHER star has enlisted in the corp of Actors' Equity Association, Motion Picture chapter, Hope Hampton, the charming star of "The Bait," "Love's Penalty," and who will be seen in a First National release, screen version of Fanny Hurst's famous story, "Star Dust," adapted for the screen by Anthony Paul Kelly. Miss Hampton, as a star is truly eligible, despite the fact that her career as an actress began only a year ago.

Seena Owen, who played the leading feminine role in the Robert G. Vignola production of "The Woman God Changed," will be seen in "Back Pay," a Cosmopolitan production under way, directed by Frank Borzage.

The screen mourns the temporary loss of a popular actor by right of par excellence in his profession, Montagu Love, who has after an absence of more than five years, returned to the speaking stage. The play offering the necessary allurement, is "The Survival of the Fittest," at the Greenwich Village Theatre. During Mr. Love's career as a picture star, he built for himself a reputation upon a firm foundation, that of such work as few artists of the picture world may boast of when it comes to versatility and admirable technique. The screen, it is hoped, will claim him ere long.

James Kirkwood arrived in New York, from California, with safety, after completing his work in the leading role of George Melford's production of Sir Gilbert Parker's "The Money Master." Mr. Kirkwood's trip East is said to be a combination of business and pleasure. He stopped for a week at his old home in Grand Rapids, Michigan, but finally arrived upon the scene of his former activities, and started in shaking hands with brother "Lambs" and "Players." But before leaving, Mr. Kirkwood signed on the dotted line guaranteeing his services to Jesse L. Lasky, for the leading role in "The Great Impersonation."

We recall Mr. Kirkwood's delightful work when he laid down the megaphone to play the leading role in Allan Dwan's "The Luck of the Irish," which Mr. Dwan agreed to produce, providing Mr. Kirkwood would play the principal part. His appearance seems to have marked his disappearance as a director, and made him an actor much in demand, since he is to be seen in "Man, Woman and Marriage," which is

Anna Q. Nillson, rapidly increasing her fame as a leading woman

Allen Holubar's contribution to First National's Big Five, "Heart of a Fool," and "The Scoffer," the latter both Allan Dwan productions, "Love," with Louise Glaum, and in Marshall Neilan's "Bob Hampton of Placer," scheduled for early once-over. Mr. Kirkwood's recent popularity as an actor has made him of the opinion that it is worth forsaking the directorial end of motion pictures indefinitely.

Charles Mussett, who recently completed work in "The Magic Cup," a John S. Robertson production for Realart, interpreted the role of the leader of a band of crooks. Shaking the atmosphere of the underworld tricks from his work, he is now playing a small town father of a small town young man, in the First National release, "Star Dust," starring Hope Hampton, under the direction of Hobart Henley.

Shirley Mitchell, who is said to be one of the youngest, if not the youngest motion picture actress in New York City, made her debut this week at the Fifty-fourth Street Studio of the Master Films, where the newest "Torchy" Comedy is being prepared for future release via the Educational Exchanges.

Never was a young actress better chaperoned nor did any one ever begin their career under more kindly auspices. She played opposite her uncle, Johnny Hines, famous for his screen characterization of "Torchy," Sewell Ford's red-headed office boy creation and was directed by Charles Hines, another uncle. Her mother, a former Griffith Vitagraph player represented and exhibited the maternal interests.

Shirley, who is just six months old, was difficult to direct owing to her limited knowledge of dramatic values but Uncle Johnny's grimaces and Uncle Charley's ingenuity, aided and abetted by rattles, bells and other nursery nicknacks, were equal to the occasion and Shirley is assured of further engagements.

Marie Louise Walker, best remembered for her screen work with the Mr. and Mrs. Sydney Drew comedies and the Frank Powell productions, but who some time ago forsook the silent drama for the legitimate stage, showed her worth recently when on two hours notice she undertook the stellar female role in the Century Theatre attraction, "In the Night Watch."

Miss Walker who, up to the closing of the company in San Francisco recently, had been leading woman of George M. Cohan's production of "The Acquittal," had been negotiating for the leading woman's part in the play in question and had read it and had also seen the play, but had never had a full rehearsal.

Jeanne Eagels, who regularly appears in the part, was taken suddenly ill and a hurried call was made for Miss Walker who, without a rehearsal and with an improvised wardrobe, hurriedly gotten together, went on and played the difficult role without any noticeable omissions of lines or business.

The feat comes pretty near to creating a record in stage annals and her performances for the balance of the week, considering the short time given her, were most creditable.

ABOUT DIRECTORS

CHARLES MAIGNE, former special director for Famous Players, announces that he is completing arrangements for his own producing company, for which plans are already under way. Rights to several notable work, which Mr. Maigne contemplates putting into screen plays, are being negotiated for and within the course of a short time full details of the new Charles Maigne Company, will be announced to the trade.

Jerome Storm has completed work on the Katherine MacDonald production, which he directed for First National release, and expects to complete cutting and editing within two weeks.

This MacDonald production, which as yet is without a title, is said to be of an entirely different nature than any in which the star has appeared and is replete with the human quality for which Mr. Storm is celebrated. The director's insistence upon "type" is carried out in the large cast, which includes among its principals Roy Stewart, Bertram Grassby, Helen Raymond, Betty Ross Clark, Joseph Girard, Vincent Hamilton, Lillian Rich and Winter Hall.

Mr. Storm has made no announcement of his plans following the completion of the MacDonald picture, but it is understood that he expects to commence work on a special production sometime in May or June. His remarkable achievements as director of Charles Ray, Enid Bennet and Miss MacDonald demonstrates his ability as a director of both male and feminine stars. He is now anxious to produce an all-star special from a story which he long has had under consideration.

Players' Income Tax

A tip to motion picture players, producing companies et al, as to the New York State Income Tax to be filed not later than April 15:

Costumes, except those of a period other than today, used in pictures, may not be deducted from return.

Hugo Ballin has added to his carefully chosen cast for "Ave Maria," Wyndham Standing recently returned from Europe. Mr. Ballin is now making pictures for Hodkinson release. Mr. Standing will, of course, play the leading masculine role while Mabel Ballin will be the heroine of the story which was written by a Dominican nun.

Standing's part in the drama, the first he will have essayed since his return from a holiday in England, is ideally suited to him. Had Sister Eileen, the deceased author of "Ave Maria," known him on the screen she could not have created a character more closely identified with the actor's personality and temperament. His finesse, his underlying simplicity and unassuming masculinity—all are embodied in his role, that of a young Englishman who comes to America to manage a steel mill and later finds himself involved in a complex psychological problem.

John S. Robertson's production of Barrie's "Sentimental Tommy," now playing at the Criterion theatre, has won the unanimous praise of the critics. Josephine Lovett, who adapted this classic for the screen, has also been hailed for her splendid work. It was a delicate task that Director Robertson had to perform in filming his big special, but it has been performed to the delight of all. Mr. Robertson is now finishing work on his latest picture, "Footlights," starring Elsie Ferguson, which Miss Lovett adapted.

Jack Noble, director, and one with an enviable reputation as an artist, is also an ex-army officer and a Virginia "nobleman." Besides, Mr. Noble recently became a member of the Motion Picture Directors Association and was one among the first to purchase a box for the Third Annual Ball. A list of early reservations was printed in various publications, and in some way, Mr. Noble's name was omitted. A friend he had invited to share the Noble box, approached the director, asking if he really were a member of the M.P.D.A. Noble did not relish the joke. He is proud of his membership, and immediately demanded to know why the question. "You asked me to share your box at the ball, April 2nd, and I accepted. Then I read about all the other celebrities who will be there, but I did not see your name. What is this?" Mr. Noble immediately got in touch with M. P. D. A. headquarters and learned that his box was reserved. Whereupon, to impress the dubious friend, he also invited a few more Great Neck Missourians.

Dorothy Farnum Writes for Bennett

Dorothy Farnum, who has just signed a contract by which she will become exclusive scenario writer for all the Whitman-Bennett special film productions, is but twenty-three years of age and has been engaged in photoplay work for only about two years.

Miss Farnum's first recognition was won from Ouida Begere, with whom she cooperated in preparing a couple of important subjects. Her first regular engagement was under the Selznick management where she prepared continunities and also wrote two original stories, both of which were accepted for production with the late Olive Thomas. Her next step was to join the Cosmopolitan forces, and from there to productions bearing the trade-mark of Joseph M. Schenck. It was under the management of Mr. Schenck that she wrote the scenario on "Good References," in which Constance Talmadge scored one of her most pronounced hits.

"Life" Acclaims Vignola Films

Quoting from Robert E. Sherwood, distinguished critic, "Straight is the Way," the Robert G. Vignola production (Cosmopolitan-Paramount release) "has again hit the bull's eye of popular taste and appeal." Mr. Sherwood further states:

"The credit for this meritorious production must go, first, to Robert G. Vignola the director, and to his cameraman, nor should one overlook the fact that the original story by Ethel Watts Mumford, is satisfactorily interpreted by Matt Moore, and an entirely competent cast. 'Straight is the way,' is a picture that we can recommend to everybody without fear that our mail next day will be cluttered up with time bombs from vindictive readers, who went to see it at our suggestion."

Realistic Effects for Titles

Some of the long felt wants of the motion picture industry are being met by the organization of specialists in lines kindred to motion picture production. Prominent among these, is the establishment of an organization which has already earned a welcome and a place of its own. It is the combined abilities of the personnel of a trio formerly known as Martin, McGuire and Newcombe, who have consolidated with other experts in their respecive lines, and assumed the "working title" of The National Motion Picture Title Company, which almost tells the tale.

As at present organized, the new company is prepared to take the typewritten title sheet from the editor of a picture, and after a remarkably short time present a negative and positive set of titles ready to be cut into the feature. Double exposures, special effects, miniature sets, in fact, everything to be desired in connection with such work, seems to have been worked out by these energetic gentlemen, to perfection. There is an impressive personnel, including besides Neil McGuire, on illustrations, Warren A. Newcombe, on settings, J. O. Raymond, on electrical effects and T. M. Stell on special effects. In addition, there are many others well known to the film industry.

The work already assigned them which has illustrated their ability and possibilities is best described by pointing to "Passion," "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," "Without Limit," the production of "Vendetta," awaiting release, and other high class productions.

Jacobs and Hart Business Partners

The announcement that Arthur H. Jacobs, well known and long identified with business activities in connection with the motion picture industry, has combined forces with Max Hart, is expected to arouse considerable interest. Mr. Jacobs has for several years past devoted his efforts to business negotiations relating to the producing and managing end of the film business, and for the past twenty months has been most successful in the personal representation of stars, directors and players, including some of the leading discoveries in talent.

Max Hart may need more of an introduction than does Mr. Jacobs, so far as the film business is concerned, but to the vaudeville world, he is known as one of the most aggressive and successful artists's representative in the business. It was he who discovered the talents of such celebrated entertainers as Frank Tinney, Eddie Cantor, Bernard Granville, Will Rogers, Ed. Wynn, T. Roy Barnes and the Lee children.

Rose Franzblau, who has been associated in business with Mr. Jacobs for the past six years, will be included in the combination of Arthur H. Jacobs and Max Hart, who will concentrate exclusively in the personal representation of artists in motion pictures, musical comedy and dramatic work. Their offices will be located in new and enlarged quarters beginning May 1st.

Director and Dog Star Renew Contract

Fred Fishbach, well known as a comedy director, and "Brownie" the Century Wonder Dog, have extended their contracts with the Century Film Corporation, it is announced by Mr. Julius Stern, president of the company, who now is in New York.

Fishbach has been with the Century Company for more than a year and has made some of that company's most successful comedies. He has been particularly successful, in making pictures in which "Brownie" the clever canine, has been featured. Fishbach also made several of the first popular "Lion" comedies. He has signed for two years.

Picture Activities in Far East and Balkans

MAJOR JAMES A. MILLS, Balkan correspondent of the Associated Press, writing to a friend in the Lois Weber studios in Los Angeles from the Hotel Grand Bretagne Lampsa, Athens, Greece, under date of February 5, gives an interesting summary of moving picture conditions in the Near East and the activities of American cinematographers and moving picture men in the Balkans.

Major Mills, formerly private secretary to President Melville Stone of the Associated Press, was in the intelligence service of the army during the war. Recently he was decorated by the Roumanian Government for services rendered to Roumania in 1919 when Roumania was attacked by the Hungarian Bolsheviks.

The Associated Press correspondent writes:

"There are so many kings, ex-kings, queens, near-queens, princes and princesses out here that there's nothing else to report. All the pretty American Red Cross girls who used to stay at the Hotel Angleterre in Athens are gone. The only pretty girls here are the marble ones in the museums, and they've been dead some 2,000 years.

"Prince Carol of Roumania is not overly pepped up over American movie and newspaper men. He told me a story of a 'Frisco journalist of tender years who asked him when he was going to sail. Carol said: 'I shall probably leave New York on the Mauretania.' 'Where's that country?' asked the reporter.

"In Pittsburg Carol told me that two movie news photographers lined him up to be 'shot.'

"'Listen, Carol, one of the movie lads yelled at him. "Get over a bit there and turn around to the light when you're shakin' hands. Remember, you ain't in Bulgaria now.'

"It sure was a discreet remark to make—that reference to Carol's being a Bulgarian. Like calling a Sinn Feiner an Orangeman, or vice versa.

"As for Balkan movie news, here is my little dossier: Captain Merle La Voy, of Seattle, recently photographed Constantinople from an aeroplane, making a trip up from the Dardanelles. The British aviation men were very kind to him. La Voy comes from Alaska originally and went up Mount McKinley with the expedition which set out a few years ago to disprove the Dr. Cook claims. He filmed that mountain climbing stunt.

"After he finished with the Dardanelles he went over the Black Sea to Novorossiysk, where the American Red Cross has an outfit. And what do you think he did there? He aeroplaned over to Mount Ararat and filmed the mountain where Noah came down with the Ark. A French aviator accommodated him. La Voy says the Ark is no longer on top of the mountain.

"La Voy also recently filmed King Boris of Bulgaria, King Alexander of Serbia at Belgrade and King Peter who rides into Athens on a motorcycle sidecar almost daily. Peter is very old and lives at Phaleron down near the Piraeus on the Aegean. He wears a false beard when he rides into Athens but everybody knows him.

"Too bad about young King Alexander of Greece, wasn't it? His death must have been a shock to Miss Kelly of St. Paul who you remember was feted so much by him while she was a steno' with the A. R. C. in Athens back in 1919.

"Now about the picture theatres out here. There are eleven movie houses in Constantinople, besides smaller halls. The Cine-Theatrale Corporation has correspondents in Athens, Sofia and Bucarest as they sometimes buy films on a royalty basis with exclusive rights for the Balkan states.

"Usually all films are bought on a royalty basis. A single print is purchased which is projected in one or two local theatres and then used for one year at least in all the moving picture halls of Smyrna, Beirut, Trebizond and other cities of the country. Of course distribution is shot to pieces just at present with the Greek-Turk brawl in Asia Minor and the Russian bolshies snooping around the Black Sea ports.

"There is no censorship of moving pictures in Turkey except on religious pictures. The exciting films like hunting and war stories, cowboy dramas, etc., are very popular. They are known as 'American films.' Educational films as well as cartoon and animal pictures are not appreciated while people take a tremendous interest in comedies, society drama, detective drama and episodes of the late European war.

"But appreciated above all are the Italian films with performers like Maria Carmia, Pina Menichelli and Ida Borelli. Next to these come the French and Danish films. English and Russian films are unknown here. The only periodical read by film fans is the French 'Courier Cinematographique.'

"Serial films are going well here and I see some of the old timers playing around Constantinople, Athens, Bucarest and Sofia. In Elbassan, Albania, what do you think I saw? Lois Weber's old film, 'Where Are My Children?' The Albanians have families ranging in size from 8 to 15, so perhaps they missed the point of the play.

"You mention 'The Miracle Man.' I saw it first in Bucarest. I was away from New York when it was shown there. It played for a month straight in the 'Populol' theatre in Bucarest. In movie parlance, it 'knocked 'em cold.' Best I ever saw. I understand it is going marvelously well all over Europe. What is George Loane Tucker's next picture going to be?

"Coming down through Bulgaria I talked with the American consul regarding American pictures. He said there were 96 permanent motion picture theatres in Bulgaria. About 23 move from place to place giving exhibitions in various towns. In Sofia I went to a fine theatre seating 2,300 persons and another which held about 1,800. Admission charges varied from one lev to 5 leva. A lev is about three cents in American money. The Government recently put a tax of 50 per cent. on admission tickets.

"In Athens there are six really good theatres. The ships bring American films direct from New York. Athens keeps right up to date with American pictures. I talked with Minister Edward Capps, formerly head of the Greek Commission of the A. R. C. in Athens.

"He said there were five theatres on the Isle of Cyprus, four first class and two second class theatres in Alexandria and six first class and four second class theatres in Cairo. The theatres are quite modern. Italian dramas are being ousted by American and French subjects. Crude dramas and slapstick comedies go well.

"In Port Said there are three 'kinemas' and another is being put up. Detective melodramas go well in Port Said. The town is not as wild as it used to be. At Suez there are three kinemas. They like slapsticks, comedies and spectacular dramas as well as scenic and topicals. They get their films from Alexandria and Cairo. The Aegean isles nearly all have at least one picture show. They run fearfully old and 'rainy' stuff.

"Italian and German films are much cheaper than American but despite that fact the American productions are going right ahead. The exchange and Balkan coinage depreciation, however, work against heavy American importations into the Balkans. The Germans are trying to flood the Balkans with stuff they made during the war. They almost give the films way.

"Tell your friends in Hollywood that the only way to meet German competition is to send over reprints of all the old Western Indian chases, slapsticks, cowboy and athletic stuff they can. Good horsemanship lifts them out of their seats over here. Old stunt and spectacular pictures also go well.

"Say, I wonder why some American producer doesn't sign up Francesca Bertini, the Italian actress. She has Pola Negri backed off the map. She is immensely popular in Southern Europe and the Near East.

"All the girls I meet, European or native, talk incessantly of Bertini, Bertini, Bertini. I saw a most beautifully produced Italian picture recently in Athens. It was entitled 'Adieu! My Youth' and reminded me ..... Maria Jacobini played the lead.

"Maciste of Cabiria fame is still going strong. He has recently appeared in 'Maciste Medium,' 'Maciste in Love' and one other of which I have forgotten the name. I don't think they will permit D'Annunzio's play, 'Leda Without the Swan,' to play Oshkosh or Kalamazoo. The censors wouldn't do a thing to it, even though you see from the title that the 'President of Fiume' put the naughty swan in the wings.

"I understand that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation through J. C. Graham and Major Norman Holden of London have purchased the German holdings in more than 150 cinemas theatres throughout Europe. I hear that these holdings include as well the theatres of Serbia, Roumania, Turkey and other Near East points. Paramount's representative in the Near East is the Gaumont company with offices in Cairo.

"Those still pictures of a Hollywood studio set showing minarets which you sent me sure made me laugh. The builders evidently didn't know that the muezzin has to climb up inside the minaret to call to prayer. Judging from the way they tapered toward the top like a steeple not even a Moslem cat could climb up inside them.

Louis Calhern was once a newspaper reporter but now he is an actor.

Claire Windsor has a parrot that invites everyone in who knocks on Claire's door.

Paul Bern is the youngest Goldwyn Director.

Vi Dana is playing a violin these days.

James Kirkwood enjoyed a shave last week, the first time for nine weeks.

R. A. Walsh is back in town with Big Jim Marcus to make a couple of pictures.

Nazimova was in The Death Chamber for six days for Camille and she is still among the living.

Gareth Hughes has bought a tract of land in Laurel Canyon where he is going to build a home.

T. Roy Barnes was born in Lincoln. Yes, England, not Nebraska, so the P. A. says.

Metro people were honored this week by the visit of F. F. Dryden, President of Prudential Insurance Company.

The best alibi of the season is now out of date—all income tax returns are supposed to be in.

Eddy and Lee have found it necessary to use locations at Tia Juana for their coming comedy.

Buster Keaton claims he made a horse laugh the other day which means that Buster has a poor press agent.

Another of our film magnates is building himself a castle. The home of Norris Mumper will in the future be located on Los Feliz Road.

Press copy tells us Art Acord is hard at work on "The White Horseman." Just as though Art was a stone cutter or something like that.

After serving as actor for three months Jack Conway has decided to go to work again and is now directing at Ucity.

Lois Weber is back in the village and is going to bring The Queen here to work in pictures. For further announcement see advertising pages.

Since Benny Ziedman has denied the rumor that he is dead he has received pockets full of telegrams congratulating him on surviving the lull.

Wedding bells rang this week—Theodore Pierce Taylor, otherwise known as Ted, and Ruth Elizabeth Wing both said "I do."

Earl Rodney, that handsome Leading Man in Christie Comedies, was once office boy in a sewing machine factory.

Speaking of a desirable job reminds us of Roland Sturgeon autoing over 2,500 miles of Southern California pavement to find ideal Ozark Mountains.

Dave Hartford writes that he is going to get back from New York just as soon as he can. Dave has lived out here a long time and likes the place.

Maurice Tourneur is producing "The Foolish Matrons" which has absolutely nothing to do with the subject being made at Universal entitled "Foolish Wives."

Hoot Gibson is going to show how many thrills a Texas Cowboy could get in a Movie Studio in a two reeler now in the making. He named it "The Movie Trail."

We hear rumors of Jerry Storn having walked to the altar and there was no one there to direct the scene either but Bob McKim, his wife and the Minister.

Pat Dowling is charged with publication of a paper entitled The Wash Rag. The name implies it should be read in the bathroom but it can safely be read without colored glasses.

Roy Clements is authority for the statement that thirty per cent of the Directors of today were Assistant Directors before they were Directors, all of which is important to the Assistant Director.

Universal put another one over by inviting the public to come out and see their Circus used for "The Man Tamer" and the public did go and serve as atmosphere in the circus scenes and it did not cost Universal a cent for extras.

A bevy of Eastern tea hounds whiling away their moments in our sunny clime, for want of something to do rode through a scene for Ollie Morosco's "The Half Breed" in Pasadena Glen the other day and shortly we will have a new batch of screen stars.

Lucien Hubbard received a scenario with the note "If this is not up to your standard tell me, for I have other irons in the fire and will submit something else." Whereupon Hub wrote back, "Madame, please place the manuscript where the irons are," which may be termed a cruel way of answering a lady's letter.

Tod Browning has petitioned several State representatives to introduce a Bill on Censorship

AN ACT to amend the penal laws in relation to the criminal prosecution and exhibition of motion pictures:

Seciion I. Manufacture of stills. Every publicity man making a still shall be reported to the Federal authorities for prosecution under the prohibition amendment.

Section II. Larceny. Every ingenue stealing an emotional scene from a leading woman shall be reported to the police for soblifting.

Section III. Assault and battery.

1. Every cameraman shooting scene shall be arrested for assault with a deadly camera with intent to film.

2. Shooting with a battery of cameras shall be deemed assault with battery.

Section IV. Fanslaughter. Every actor whose work knocks 'em dead shall be prosecuted for fanslaughter.

Section V. Riotous assemblage. If spectators gather in manager of said theatre shall read the riot act and then call out the militia.

"New Theatres"

Many readers will vote the lobby of the Tivoli "The most beautiful of any theatre in the world"

Tivoli Theatre Is Modelled After Famous Peace Treaty Building

Chateau of Versailles Reproduced in New Theatre of Balaban & Katz

ACCLAIMED by all Chicago as the wonder theatre of the Windy City fland the most beautiful moving picture theatre of the United States, and that means the world, the fame of the Tivoli has spread from coast to coast within the brief period since its opening and it already is the Mecca for travelers tarrying for a day in Chicago as well as the thousands of native citizens who come daily from the furthest points of the city to revel in its beauties and enjoy the splendor of its presentations and wonderful music.

Balaban and Katz, already known throughout the Central West as master showmen, gain fresh laurels by giving to the public a magnificent people's palace whose dignified elegance is uplifting and entitles it to the important place it already has taken in the civic life of Chicago.

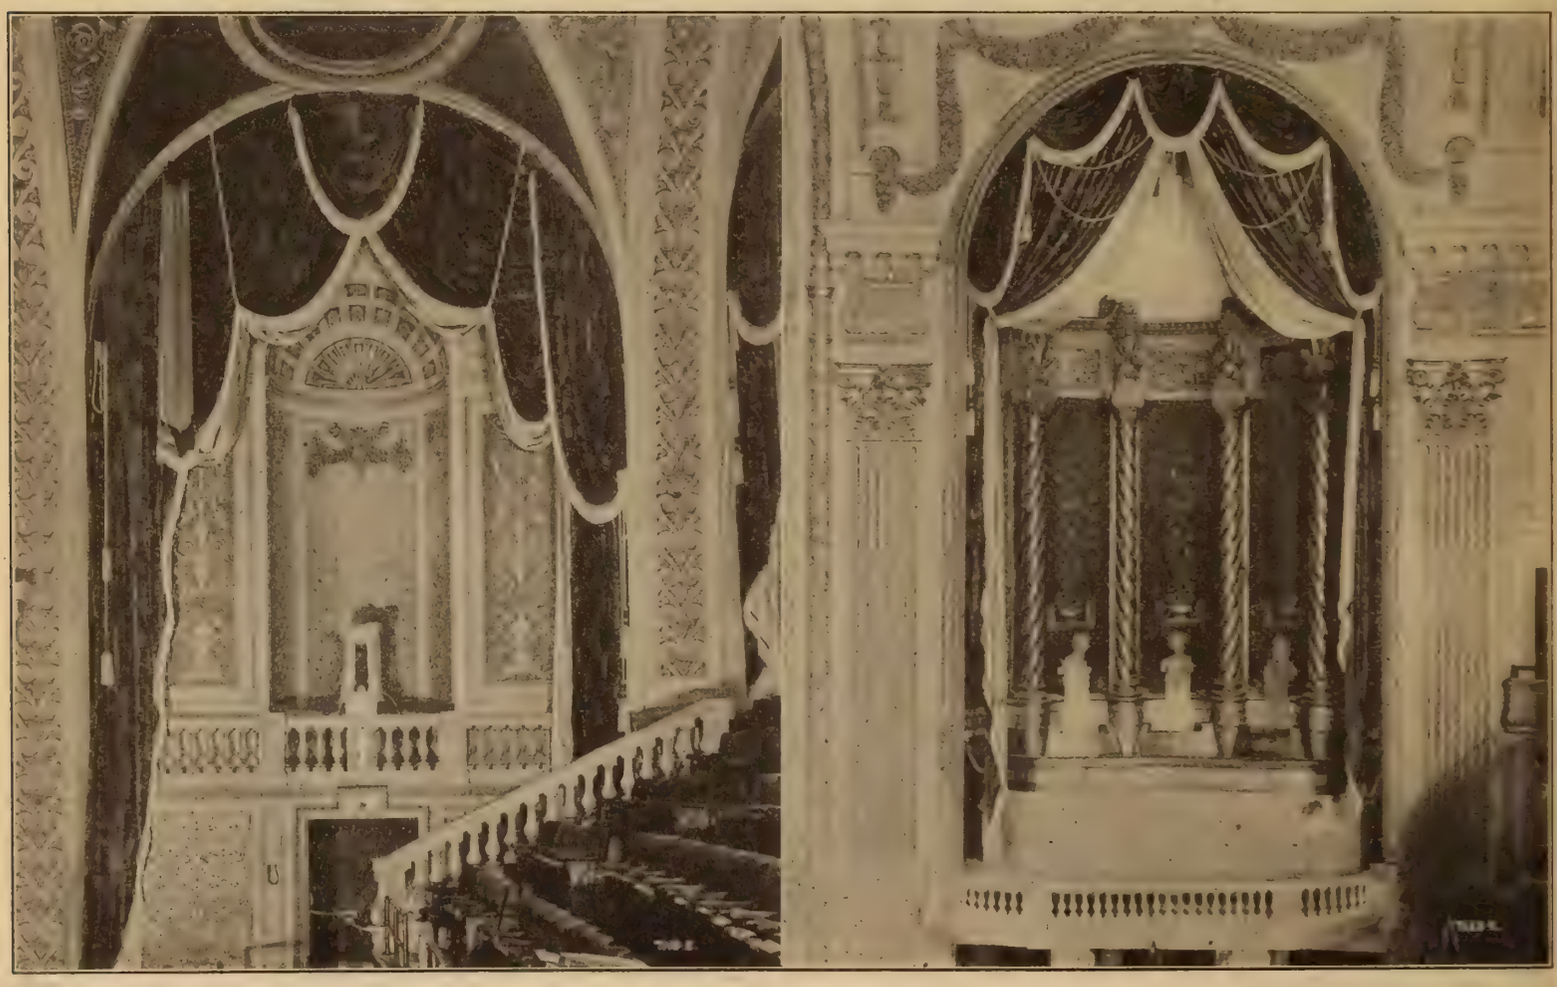
The Tivoli, located at Sixty-third street and Cottage Grove, occupies a strategic position in the center of the city's great South Side residential and business district and also is readily reached by surface and elevated cars as well as being close to the celebrated boulevard system which makes it easily accessible to motorists. It accommodates 4,500 persons and was completed after sixteen months' work at a cost of approximately $2,500,000.

Architects Rapp and Rapp modeled the entire theatre on the Chateau of Versailles, France, the historic building where the peace treaty was signed, and the great lobby of the Tivoli, which patrons pass through on their way to the auditorium, follows closely the lines of the chapel at Versailles and is a beautiful and impressive introduction to the theatre proper.

This lobby which stretches away 125 feet from the entrance to the first step of the grand staircase and in which 1,500 patrons waiting admission to the theatre may stand, towers six stories to the ornate dome which crowns it. Huge Corinthian columns support the frescoed ceiling and four dazzling chandeliers, which are said to have cost $6,000 each, in addition to large clusters of side lights made to resemble candles, furnish the illumination. Opposite the entrance and occupying the place of the altar in the Versailles chapel is the grand staircase which leads to the mezzanine promenade and higher levels, through all of which access to the theatre may be gained.

On entering the auditorium one is surprised to find that despite its great size the perfection of its design has prevented this from being the dominating feaure and that there is a real atmosphere of coziness. This result has been attained through the use of a triple ceiling which breaks the vast sweep of the auditorium into smaller units. Above the balcony is a sunburst dome, 65 feet in diameter which is silver lined to throw back golden tints from the amber lights. Below this is the mezzanine floor with its stepped horseshoe of boxes topped by a dirigible dome with an edge of hand decorated frieze. The forward unit of the ceiling is also domed, offset on each side by splendid rosettes which top the design leading into the jeweled and pillared organ settings.

Next comes the vast sweep of the proscenium arch and the stage which is 125 feet wide, 30 feet deep and in four units. The stage itself is of the revolving type, making possible rapid changes of scene.



These illustrations give a good idea how the two and one quarter millions were expended in the construction of the Tivol

TYPHOON COOLING SYSTEM

For over ten years

the Typhoon Fan Company has been specializing in the manufacture of Cooling and Ventilating Systems for Moving Picture Theatres, large and small.

To-day you will find in all parts of the country hundreds of Typhoon cooled theatres the owners of which will tell you that their success is due in no small measure to their Typhoon equipment.

There are many reasons why the Typhoon Cooling System is acknowledged to be the best for theatre use. It is so thoroughly constructed that it will outlive the average theatre. It supplies a greater volume of air at less cost for power than other systems.

Typhoons force the air into the theatre from above, through openings in the roof and ceiling. This is a decided improvement over the old method of introducing the air through small vents underneath the seats.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN.

Throughout the theatre the finest of silk and velvet hangings and draperies are extensively used and a collection of magnificent oil paintings, valued at over $40,000, adorn the walls of the mezzanine, corridors, etc.

The projection room is located at the rear of the balcony and is 189 feet from the screen. The room measures 18 feet deep by 30 wide and the mechanical equipment is in keeping with the importance of the theatre. The projectors installed are Simplexes fitted with type S lamp houses, speed indicators, footage registers, etc. Peerless Automatic Arc Controls, manufactured by the J. E. McAuley Manufacturing Company of Chicago, feed the projector arc lamps and assure a constant volume of illumination on the screen. An automatic stop and start rewind, the first of its type to be installed in any theatre, was furnished by the Chicago Cinema Equipment Company, which also designed the electrical switchboard for the operating room. In a separate room adjoining the operating room are installed two special 250-ampere multiple type General Electric motors, one kept in reserve for emergencies.

The wonderful stage lighting effects for which the Tivoli already has become famous are made possible through the installation of the Major Pre-Selective System of Lighting Control which gives great flexibility as well as remarkable rapidity whenever needed and also makes the artistic blending of different colors easy.

A Minusa Gold Fibre screen is used, 26 feet in width and 21 feet in height.

The Exhibitors' Supply Company of Chicago had an important part in the projection room equipment, supplying the projectors, Peerless Arc Controls, Snaplite lenses and many other articles.

L. J. Hoffman, the aggressive exhibitor and the owner of the new Capitol theatre at Ansonia, Conn., has made his brother showmen in that section wake up and hear the birdies sing. His new theatre, designed by the E. C. Horn Sons, Theatre Architects, of New York City, is the talk of the New England show world.

Seating approximately two thousand, it has been doing excellent business, and the success is due in no small way to its owner. He left no stone unturned in his endeavor to give to Ansonians a playhouse in which they might take great pride. Designed in the Adam period; tastefully decorated, comfortably furnished and completely equipped, it stands for as one of the finest theatres in that section, and even in the immediate Metropolitan District.

Being a business man, Mr. Hoffman knew that good acoustics, excellent sight lines, comfortable seats, and a first-class entertainment were things his patrons had a right to demand, but he also realized that a theatre, warm in winter, and cool in summer, as well as perfectly ventilated all the year 'round was, to the audiences, an assurance of comfort.

That is why the Capitol theatre boasts of an excellent cooling and ventilating system as designed, furnished and installed by the Monsoon Cooling System, Inc., of New York City.

A No. 9 Duplex Set of "Monsoons" in the attic over the proscenium arch draw cool, fresh, clean air through an opening in the roof and blow it downward, through an opening in the ceiling while a No. 7 Duplex Set of "Monsoons" above the main ceiling (shown on page 2490) bring in an additional supply of pure air which is blown through a second ornamental grille in the ceiling center.

This abundant supply of pure air is circulated gently throughout the auditorium and exhausted at the floor line causing an even distribution of fresh air at all times, thus assuring perfect ventilation and cooling breezes in hottest summer weather. During the cold weather, when the theatre is artificially heated, the action of the "Monsoons" is reversed; fresh air is possible at will, and the impure air is drawn out.

"This Peerless Automatic Arc Control has proved a very good investment"

That's the opinion of every user of PEERLESS ARC CONTROLS—and most of America's finest theatres have them installed.

DEFECTIVE PROJECTION IS COSTLY

The PEERLESS AUTOMATIC ARC CONTROL insures to YOUR audience faultless screen illumination ALL THE TIME.

Those annoying colored lights—your screen in semi-darkness—an unavoidable condition with a hand fed arc, are completely eliminated where the PEERLESS ARC CONTROL is on the job.

Chicago's finest theatres, the SENATE, Balaban & Katz RIVERIA, and the new two million dollar

TIVOLI THEATRE

Theatre Construction Reports from Many Cities

Buffalo

The old Sun theatre on Broadway, Buffalo, has been reopened under the name of the Lyric theatre by L. Wicks, formerly an operator at the Empire theatre. Pictures and vaudeville will be the policy.

Al. Sherry who has managed several big houses in Buffalo will on March 14 take over the Abbott theatre in Buffalo's South Park district. The theatre will be redecorated and renovated.

To forward the campaign for the elimination of alleged indecencies from motion pictures and the stage, which the National Catholic Welfare Council is conducting, all the Catholic parishes in Buffalo has organized. Each parish will supervise theatres in its own neighborhood. Charles A. McMahon, 464 Potomac avenue, is director of the Council, with headquarters in Washington. The Council disclaims intent to advocate or encourage "blue laws" or to seek prohibition of moving pictures or other legitimate entertainment on Sundays and no legal censorship of screen or stage will be urged, unless producers, distributors and exhibitors refuse to co-operate with the organization to "clean house."

Frank B. Smith, manager of the wholesale department of the Rialto Theatre Supply Company of Minneapolis, has been in Buffalo for the past few weeks rearranging things at the local branch of the company, recently taken over from "Hub" Taylor, who has re-entered the film sales end of the business. James G. Wills is manager of the Buffalo store.

The Cataract Theatre Corporation of Niagara Falls which has been incorporated with a capital of $1,200,000, will begin to build a new theatre in Niagara Falls about April 1, according to J. A. Schuchert, of Buffalo, one of the incorporators, who is also interested in several Buffalo houses. Adam C. Hayman and Arthur Killian, of Niagara Falls, are the other incorporators. The name of the new house will be the Strand, and it will have a seating capacity of 2,500. Its design will be similar to Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, said Mr. Schuchert. The front of the building will contain six stores. There will also be offices in the building, and the third floor will be a large hall. For the past ten years the company has owned the Cataract theatre at the Falls. With the erection of the new Strand, a policy of expansion will be inaugurated by the directors. The New Strand to cost between $600,000 and $700,000 said Mr. Schuchert.

Canada

A redistribution of managers for several of the new large moving picture palaces of the Canadian West has occurred while the addition of a prominent executive from Minneapolis has also taken place. Ralph Ruffner, formerly of Seattle, who was brought to Winnipeg, Manitoba, to manage the new Capitol theatre, has been transferred to Vancouver, B. C., by the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, and now has charge of the fine Capitol theatre, which was opened there on March 12. He was succeeded at the Capitol, Winnipeg, by Charles C. Perry, of Minneapolis, a veteran showman of that place. Mr. Perry has been associated with the moving picture business for the past ten years, and six of these years were spent in Minneapolis, where he had the Strand, Lyric, and other houses.

George E. Clark, manager of the Bijou theatre in Calgary, Alberta, has been appointed manager of the new Alltn theatre in Vancouver, B. C., in succession to Oral D. Cloakey, who has been placed in charge of the new Allen theatre in Cleveland, Ohio. Mr. Clark has been acting as assistant manager of the Vancouver Allen for some weeks past. Clark's original home was in Ottawa, Ont. He is a scenic artist of note, and has arranged many clever lobby displays.

G. and R. Zakoor are building a $250,000 moving picture theatre in Chatham, Ont., on the site of the old Princess theatre, which was successfully operated for many years until the need for a large new house became urgent. The Zakoors recently entertained Mr. and Mrs. J. Kunsky, of Detroit.

Typhoon Sales on Increase

The Typhoon Fan Company of New York reports that already wide-awake exhibitors throughout the country are beginning to realize that it is now necessary to make provision for properly cooling and ventilating their theatre, so that during the summer they may be able to supply their patrons with cool and comfortable atmosphere, which will, of course, mean that they are going to have increased attendance during the warmest days of summer.

The following theatres have just ordered cooling and ventilating apparatus for spring delivery: Hayes Amusement Co., Lenior City, Tenn.; Riviera theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Rye Play House, Rye, N. Y.; Metropolitan theatre, Atlanta, Ga.; Stratford theatre, Stratford, Conn.; Rex theatre, Philadelphia, Pa.; Arrington Bros. theatre, Rocky Mt., N. C.; Wayne theatre, Wayne, Pa.; Blake theatre, Webb City, Mo.; Sheer's Amusement Enterprises, Corona, L. I., N. Y.; Loomis theatre, Peru, Ind.; Colonial theatre, Newark, N. J.; Indiana theatre, Terre Haute, Ind.; Strand theatre, Farrington, Ill.; Lyceum theatre, Terre Haute, Ind.; New Theatre, of Jos. Stern, Irvington, N. J.; Majestic theatre, Antioch, Ill.; also additional equipment for the Empress theatre, Omaha, Nebr.

The Typhoon Fan Company further reports that business conditions throughout the entire industry look very bright, and every indication points to a banner year for the exhibitor and equipment manufacturer.

Fahner Joins Columbia Printing Co.

The Columbia Printing Company of 1632-36 North Halsted street, Chicago, one of the largest manufacturers of special printed and stock tickets, has engaged Edward O. Fahner, formerly connected with the United Theatre Equipment Company and the Exhibitors Supply Company, to promote the sale of Columbia tickets.

He now is working on the installation of a new service department, which promises to be unique, and he states that dealing with the Columbia Printing Company will give one the real conception of the meaning of the word service.

The Columbia Printing Company has been engaged in the manufacture of tickets for the past ten years and their plant has a capacity of approximately twelve million tickets per week.

Further Details of Cameragraph Club Party

The Cameragraph Club of the Nicholas Power Company gave its annual theatre party and dinner Saturday night, March 26th, and the event was one of the most enjoyable of the many entertainments which have been given by this organization. Formed in 1912, the Cameragraph Club is one of the oldest organizations in the film industry. Its membership is made up of the shop heads of the Nicholas Power Company Plant with the addition of several executive heads and the chief officers of the Nicholas Power Company as honorary members.

Mr. Earl, President, and Mr. Cassard, Vice President, of the Nicholas Power Company, informally conveyed to the members their great interest in the Club and their pleasure in having an opportunity to enjoy the evening with the organization. Mr. Merkin as previously announced, has been seriously sick for several weeks and took this opportunity to rejoin his associates in the Company. His enjoyment of

While the evening was marked by its absence of formality or set speeches, the officials of the Company expressed to those present their satisfaction in seeing the progressive and optimistic spirit of the Company reflected in the activities of the Club. The success of the entertainment has already started discussion of plans to hold meetings of the Club with greater frequency and to develop the organization so that the good will it expresses shall be of the greatest possible benefit to the members and all those connected with the Nicholas Power Company.

New Condenser Proves Its Worth

It was the privilege of this department recently to examine and test the new Paramount Condenser made in France and brought to this country by Mr. M. H. Tromba, and the results were such as to prove all the claims made for it by its makers.

The Paramount Condenser differs from the ordinary lens in the quality of glass with which it is made, and also by the class of workmanship employed in its grinding and polishing. The glass is said to be the best flint glass obtainable, and, after being made up by optical scientists, the lenses are pitched polished until the surface is practically perfect.

To make the test a set of the Paramount condensers was placed in a projector using 30 amperes. Alongside of this machine was another projector equipped with the ordinary commercial condensers. This second machine was also adjusted at 30 amperes and the two beams thrown beside each other on the same screen. There was no trouble whatsoever in noticing the difference between the screen results. Although it is difficult to gauge the amount of light by the eye, it can be safely stated that the new condensers made it possible to project at least 15 per cent more light to the screen.

It is understood that the imported condensers are somewhat more costly than the ordinary makes; but inasmuch as they do not discolor, even after months of use, nor are they so liable to break under the heat of the arc, the difference in price may be considered negligible. The office of Mr. Tromba is at 2059 Fulton Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

A Study of the Reflection Characteristics of Projection Screens

By Lloyd A. Jones and Milton F. Fillius

Now it seems reasonable to demand that the ratio of the brightness on the axis to that at the extreme angle of observation shall not be greater than 4.0. This value is decided upon after consideration not only of the variation in brightness as observed from various points in the auditorium, but also from a consideration of the fact that from a given point of observation the screen may appear of unequal brightness over its area. The danger of this inequality being serious increases rapidly as the value of the above mentioned ratio in reflecting powers increases. A detailed consideration of the geometry of this problem might make this point more clear, but it is not desired to lengthen this paper to such an extent as to include a complete treatment of the subject.

In the past a Screen has been a Screen and not much else. It has taken Messrs. Jones and Fillius in their paper printed below which was delivered originally before the Society of Motion Picture Engineers to identify the absolute characteristics of motion picture screens. This paper is the most helpful that has come to our attention this year.

Assuming now that we adopt the value of 4 as the limiting value of the reflecting power ratio, it is possible from the figures in Tables 4 to 6 inclusive to choose the best screen for any one of the cases considered. For instance, assuming that the maximum angle of observation is 20 deg., it will be noted that all values in the ratio column are less than 4. Therefore from the standpoint of distribution any one of the screens in Class A will be satisfactory for use where the angle of observation does not exceed 20 deg. In order now to obtain the maximum average brightness within this angle for a minimum current consumption it is only necessary to choose that screen, or screens, which shows the highest value in the column marked R a. Now assuming a maximum angle of 30 deg. we find that the first seven screens are excluded since the ratio of normal to extreme reflecting power is greater than 4. Beginning with No. 11 we may then choose the screens showing the highest average reflecting power for the range 0 to 30 deg. When the maximum angle of 40 deg. is considered we find no screen in Class A which does not exceed the limiting value of 4 for reflecting power ratio. We therefore turn to Table 5, and there find that all values of the reflecting pow-

Motion Pictures in Industry

MUCH has been said about the advantage to industrial organization of the motion picture, as a means of education in all lines of interest to it, such as, informing salesmen about their products, and educating the workers on safety-first matters.

Their popularity among industries is well demonstrated in the recent sales of Power's Projectors and auxiliary equipment by the Pittsburgh branch of the United Theatre Equipment Corporation to many industries, among them the following:

er ratio are less than 4. We may therefore select from Class B that screen which has the highest reflecting power for the 0-40 deg. range. In case of the 50 deg. limiting angle, three of the Class B screens are automatically excluded, and it is only necessary to select from the remainder the one having the highest average reflecting power for the 0-50 deg. angle.

It should be emphasized that this method of selecting a projection screen recognizes only the reflection characteristics of the screen and further that these are considered only from the standpoint of intensity. In many cases it will be found that several screens are practically of equal value when judged by this criterion. In such cases other considerations such as color, surface texture, durability, and other physical properties may be the deciding factors in the final choice. Many of the screens examined show excellent characteristics and while the screen makers are to be congratulated on many of these screens it is to be hoped that this critical examination of screen characteristics may stimulate them to greater efforts and to the production of even better and more efficient surfaces for this purpose.

MRS. McKAY'S HOME OFFERING THEIR ASSISTANCE AND SUPPORT IN THE EFFORT—AND INCIDENTALLY WHATEVER IS DONE BY THIS NEW IMPORTANT MOVEMENT WILL SURELY CREATE A TERRIFICALLY LARGER INTEREST IN THE THEATER OFFERING GOOD MUSIC.

They were not upon a platform looking down and saying, "Thou shalt not," or, "We know it all." Quite a different attitude. They desired to find what was happening and where they could be of the greatest assistance for the good of music and the greater culture of the community.

It struck me as I was riding back from that convention, that the motion picture field has in music among ather things the biggest adjunct against censorship. . . . Let me show you what I mean. If it is true that the advocates of censorship and blue laws have a justifiable case against many of the pictures which are released—nobody could deny that the development of picture music has been toward the development of the best taste! Play upon this, enemies of censorship—use this for all it is worth. If some of the members of the industry have offended good people—others in the field are aiding the fine arts to a better place in the life of our country.

But to return for another moment to Florida. In that collection of women, not all the Tampanians were moved to action. Bertha Foster, the leading musical light of Jacksonville, the head of the Institute of Art, declared that her city would move fast. What I said about the wisdom of the Tampa movie folks in sitting at Mrs. McKay's doorstep applies to the Jacksonvillians with Miss Foster, to the Orlando theatre people with Mrs. Hirsch. This last named lady is one of the important officials in the National Federation and wants to nationalize the plans we discussed in the convention—the ideas we have brought forth in these columns of the NEWS. The national president, Mrs. Frank Sieberling, of Akron, Ohio, was present and you may be sure that the music clubs of the country know what we are all attempting in these efforts.*

But my purpose in taking the space for this little picture of the club women is to create in the minds of my readers the impression that the music clubs are worthy of cultivation. The women are in a respective state and have the time to work for you, if you are working for music—or rather using music in such a way that it is raising the national taste.

* Since these sentences were written, I am in receipt of a letter from the Ohio Teachers Association, asking me to come to the convention at Dayton this month, to "tell them about the motion picture idea as you have developed it in the News."

Concerning the Organist

The makeup man two weeks ago made a slight error in the article about the organists and disarranged the order of the matter. Refer to it, and insert the following which should have been there.

Mr. Brandt's challenge comes at the end of my article, and then after his letter are to be read those of Mr. Federlein and William Hamilton.

Mr. Brandt's letter follows:

A Challenge to Mr. Brandt

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

The theatre is going to be the great financial and artistic opportunity of the organist of the future; I have no doubt of that. But I hope you will allow me to make answer to Brandt's statements at the Music Conference, as they are again quoted in your live pages of the February 26th issue.

The two organists' associations you mention have done virtually nothing and will do nothing to prepare organists for theatre positions; how can they? The church has used organists for centuries; and though I have been a member of both these organizations for years, I have yet to see them do anything to prepare organists for church positions. That is not their business. The business of the Guild is to encourage organists to be better technical musicians; that of the Association is to make them better fellows among themselves.

Conservatories have also done the extreme minimum to fit organists for church positions; why can we expect them to fit organists for theatre positions? Schools do not fit men to be editors of magazines or presidents of banks; they merely give them the technical ground-work of the literary world or the financial world, as the case may be, and then let them dig for themselves. That is all the conservatories can do. Does the theatre want a lot of machines to grind out picture accompaniments according to conservatory training? I spent three years in the finest organ school in the world, and got not ten minutes valuable instruction in all that time to help fit me to become a church organist. The church, and the church alone, taught me that. And the theatre, and the theatre alone, will make theatre organists.

The theatre is crying to someone else to do the work that it alone can do. Perhaps a few questions may be suggestive. Has the manager time to visit his friends, visit other theatres, make up his program with ample thoroughness and leisure, hear concerts, visit the museums, live, and be a human being? His theatre does not depend upon him every minute. But has the organist a chance to do any one of these things in comfort? The fact is that the organist becomes an abject slave to his console when he takes a theatre position. And what does he get out of it? But the point is not here; I am not arguing for more money for organists till they have earned it.

Does the manager have to be a trained specialist, studying diligently for five or ten years before taking his position? And did any of us ever hear any organist worth listening to that did not work hard for at least five dull years learning his business?

Let me suggest to the theatre how to get good organists: Take a few good church organists, already trained masters of the organ, who are neither fossils nor prudes; divide the hours and the pay between six of them, not two, and let each man have one afternoon and one evening each week, with pay accordingly—any man who tries to play the organ in the theatre for money and not for the love of the game, will give something no theatre can afford to accept even as a gift, which is one of the big troubles of the theatre today. The motion picture organist must be more or less of a creator as he goes along. We can manufacture toothpicks to order, but we can't manufacture art, and when we try it by forcing an organist to work seven days a week, we rob ourselves of the full value of the salaries we pay.

Whether the pictures change once or seven times a week makes little difference with this system; it has tremendous advantages over the other, no matter how frequent the program changes. The manager will have fresh talent on tap every hour his program is running, and the organist will have an added income, and an added experience, both of which will make him all the keener for his work. It is physically and temperamentally impossible for one man to play the number of hours the two-organist system demands; visit any theatre twice in the same week and we have proof of the statement. The wonder is that the organist has stuck it out so well as he has.

So far as I know, and I have been seriously interested in the theatre organist for the past eight months, there is not one agency in America that is doing anything in a practical or professional manner to help organists train themselves for and perfect themselves in picture accompanying, excepting the work of my associates in the cooperative magazine I have the honor of editing. These men are working seriously and successfully and in a most practical way to fit organists for theatre work and help them perfect this new art. And in their behalf I make this offer to the theatre manager who is in need of an organist: If such a manager will communicate to us the exact position he wishes to find an organist for, naming the hours, the location, the salary, and the size and make of the organ we will circulate among our readers the information he thus gives, and will promise to find him an organist within one month of his request. If he wants one created over night, we cannot promise to help.

A great many of our readers want such a position; especially would they be interested in having such a position in a reputable theatre where they could work but part time, and not seven days a week—which will kill any artist.

Here is our challenge, then, to Mr. Brandt and the managers: That we can supply all the organists they can pay for. And by that we do not mean tremendous salaries, but just moderate remuneration for the work of an artist as a part-time filler for his schedule. One of the first questions, I warn the manager, that the organist will ask is "What kind of an organ have you?" If the answer is some trade make-shift that is merely a wretched trade-made box of steam whistles, no reputable musician will undertake to play it for any money the manager can offer. The manager's first consideration, then, is to buy his organ only upon the advice and specification of reputable organists.

This, then, is our challenge. Let him take us at it who will.

T. SCOTT BUHRMAN,
Editor, The American Organist.

THE NEW MUSIC FORUM

The first question of union music for official discussion comes up.

Dear Mr. I:

I have your letter of March 11th and thank you very much for the considerable amount of publicity which you have given me in the papers you mention.

I have been aware of this publicity for some time for daily I am receiving requests from all over the country for positions.

The Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce will shortly open new offices in the Roberts-Cole Bldg. and in connection thereto will establish a Music Bureau just for the purpose of supply a contact point between organists and exhibitors.

May I say that this Bureau when established will be a direct result of your recent music conference? I had no idea there were so many organists outside of New York City who were desirous of obtaining positions here. Just as soon as we are established I will ask for the lists which you have and you can rest assured they will receive proper attention.

THEATRE OWNERS CHAMBER OF COMMERCE
WILLIAM BRANDT,
President.

Reply to yours of the 14th has been delayed on account of a mix-up in the musical situation here, which I have tried to get straightened out. I have an orchestra of seven pieces as I have written you before, playing under contract with F. S. Foss, cornetist. The orchestra is not satisfactory and even people in Lawrence, not accustomed to the best of music, complain about the music. The music is not good enough for a theatre playing first runs, with prologues, and attempting a metropolitan presentation, and getting the price we do, fifty-five cents. In order that my music may be on a level with the rest of my show it should be of a much higher standard. I have no trouble over the labor scale. Personally, I think the scale is too high for poor music and not high enough for good music. We pay $45 a week of seven days for five and one-half hours' music, with a rest of one-half hour, or five hours a day. The contractor gets $56.25, and all get time and a half for holidays.

Early in the season, or before the opening of the season, there being no leader in Lawrence, I went to the office of the Musicians' Union in New York, seeing Mr. Gumbell, I believe, and told him of my trouble. He said that if I could not find a leader in Lawrence, he would see that I got one. We could not find one here, so Mr. Foss, our contractor, engaged Mr. Burns, who had formerly been a leader at the Howard, in Boston. I then went to the District Deputy or someone in Boston who recommended my choice and said he would arrange for Mr. Burns, who had a union card in the Boston local, and a traveling card, to go to Lawrence. I then went before the local union and told them that Mr. Foss had engaged Mr. Burns. They agreed to have Mr. Burns transferred to Lawrence, which was done. Mr. Burns was admitted to the local union and now has a local card. Mr. Burns is now leading my orchestra in a manner satisfactory to me. I don't like the situation because Mr. Burns merely leads the orchestra while Mr. Foss engages the musicians and picks out the music. I cannot remedy this situation this season on account of having made Mr. Foss, the contractor, which is required, I understand, by the local rules.

Recently some trouble has been started because some man in Lawrence claims to be a competent leader, being known to be the most incompetent, demands that Mr. Foss, our contractor, be censured, or fined, for bringing Mr. Burns to Lawrence. Of course, I shall stand by Mr. Burns and Mr. Foss, because they are both honest and decent.

Now, this is exactly what I would like to have done. I want Mr. Burns to remain here, as leader, and I want to get some better musicians. Certainly, my orchestra is anything but worthy of the rest of the show. It appears to be impossible to get good musicians here, so I would like you to take up the matter with Mr. Weber, and tell him that I would be very glad to go to New York, if necessary, to go over the matter with him, if it would do any good. What I want is to give a high class musical entertainment, in keeping with the balance of my show. I am willing to pay for it, and why should I not have it?

Respectfully,
LAWRENCE RIALTO THEATRE CO.
ANDREW J. COBE, Manager.
Lawrence, Mass.

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

Received your letter of the 9th.

Will consider it an honor to serve as one of the Board of Directors, and I want to thank you for offering to nominate me. It will be mighty fine to be among those that are actively engaged in making the organization the big factor that it should be.

HAROLD FRANKLIN,
Shea's Hippodrome,
Buffalo.

Wants to Start Motion Picture Department in School

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

As we do not know to whom we should write concerning the recent convention held in Astor Hotel, January, 1921, we are writing you in hopes you can give us the required information.

The Toronto Conservatory of Music is quite anxious to start a branch of moving picture playing in connection with their course, and want all the reports or literature in connection with the recent Motion Picture Musical Convention, also any reports for advertising and for our own information.

HARVEY ROBB,
Toronto Conservatory of Music,
Toronto, Ont., Canada.

Music Editor:

Please place my name among the members of the association and anything I can do out here in Detroit that will be beneficial to the interests of the organization I assure you I will be delighted to take up and work out.

Wishing success to the movement and with kindest personal regards, I am,

FRANCIS A. MANGAN.
Broadway Strand Theatre, Detroit, Mich.

Yale Theatre Supply House Issues Bulletin

A most interesting and snappy issue of the March number of the Yale Service Bulletin has just reached us. This bulletin is published monthly by the Yale Theatre Supply Company of Kansas City, Mo., Simplex Distributors for Western Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma and Northwestern Arkansas.

Mr. C. D. Strubble, president of the Yale Company is editor of this breezy little newspaper and succeeds each month in filling its pages with the livest kind of copy.

This month's issue is an eight page one and contains a well written account of the opening of the Oklahoma branch of the Yale Company in Oklahoma City on its first page, while a most interesting story of Simplex Superiority appears on the same page, this story being written in the George Ade manner is highly embellished with up-to-date phraseology which cannot fail to "Hit-the-mark."

The last page is devoted entirely to a Simplex advertisement laid out in a most attractive style and deals with the high percentage of prevailing Simplex installations.

A list of general theatre supplies and equipment all of which are profusely illustrated and generously described make up the inside page of the Yale House Organ.

Mr. Strubble is to be congratulated on his ability to get up such interesting copy and there can be no question as to the popularity of the Bulletin, for each issue represents a high run of copies.

The monthly machine reports at the Simplex factory would indicate a great activity in Mr. Strubble's district all of which spells Simplex Popularity.

Argus Cleveland Simplex Sales Increase

That the Cleveland, Ohio, branch of the Argus Enterprises is an active one in the matter of Simplex distribution, is borne out in a report received at the Simplex factory wherein a great number of recent Simplex installations in the Ohio territory are listed.

Among those who recently purchased Simplex through the Argus office at Cleveland, are included several coal companies, churches, schools, clubs and theatres, which would indicate that the Argus salesmen are indeed Argus-eyed, when it comes to spotting Simplex prospects. A few of the installations listed, include the following:

Independent Order Bnai Brith, Toledo, O.; Dixie theatre, Columbus, O.; Y. & O. Coal Company, Rayland, O.; Eastwood theatre, Toledo, O.; Schott Brothers, West Salem, O.; Bloomdale High School, Bloomdale, O.; Majestic theatre, Mansfield, O.; Bandbox theatre, Ashland, O.; Mothers and Teachers Club, Berea, O.; Euclid Public Schools, Euclid, O.; Alma theatre, Sycamore, O.; Broadway theatre, Columbus, O.; Odeon theatre, Ada, O.; Crescent theatre, Hicksville, O.; Mystic theatre, Coshocton, O.

New Theatres Building

Jamestown, N. Y.

The city of Jamestown is now undergoing a blue law agitation which includes a demand for so-called better class of motion pictures. The local exhibitors, however, have assured the members of the Better Movies Committee that they are willing to co-operate with the committee in seeing that only a good class of films are shown. The exhibitors have urged that a reviewing committee be sent to theatres at an time to look over films in advance of showing The exhibitors then would be glad to meet an suggestions made and to remedy any objectionable features. Superintendent of Publi Schools. M. J. Fletcher heads the general committee, and at the meeting on March 15 the report of a sub-committee recommending that th secretary, C. F. Strafford, secretary of the Y. M C. A. affiliate with the National Motion Pictur League, was adopted. The sub-committee als recommended the appointment of a reviewin committee of nine members to review question able pictures and the appointment of a public ity committee to keep the public informed i advance of the class of pictures to be shown.

Feature Subjects of Short Length

"Dande Lions"
(Universal)

THIS two reeler opens with plenty of action and comedy situations and doesn't let up for one moment during its projection. And there are also a number of new gags introduced, every one of which is good for a laugh.

When the comedy opens the principal comedian is seen entering in a very brisk manner and as the weather is very hot he places a cake of ice before what resembles the propeller of a huge airplane which when "propelling" creates a sort of hurricane of cold air that not only blows the papers and props about but also the actors. The scenes derived from this huge prop are full of action and comedy situations.

In the second reel the lions are introduced to keep up the action, and they certainly do, from the time they chase the principals in and out of the various sets to the big moments when the comedy fairly scintillates. How they ever train the lions to do the various stunts is amazing. Most of the really funny situations are developed as usual with the aid of the negro boys who seem to be taking a big chance with "those there lions."

An amusing incident is when the negro cook is forced to jump upon a red hot stove in a wild effort to avoid the jaws of Mr. Lion. Although the cook is between two fires and dodges about with great agility, his brother African seizes him by the trousers and drags him about in what looks like an effort to devour him, but it is all play and the lion seems to enjoy it as much as the negro. How do they do it?

In another situation Mr. Lion fairly jumps upon the back of a negro and tears the clothes from his back amid the black boy's howlings. But as usual its all for amusement and we guess the lion knows it.

This comedy has a decided amount of interest and plenty of good situations to excite the minds of the patrons.—FRANK LEONARD.

"The Jockey"
(Clyde Cook Comedy—Fox—Two Reels)

PLACE your money on Clyde Cook in "The Jockey." It is a good entry and is bound to win. The star has been galloping through to success ever since he started in the field. His unique comedy style, the clever gags rich in humor and originality, the first rate titling—these all contribute toward making his releases genuinely amusing. Cook doesn't rely on old formulas. On the contrary he is wide awake searching for novel incident. The novelty of "The Jockey" is especially noticeable in the employment of horses for gag purposes. The star is a handy man around the stable and is permitted to ride a fast stepper in the race. But the noble steed runs in the opposite direction with the result that the grotesque jockey is placed back in his old stable job again.

Evidently a performing horse has been used, for he sits down on his haunches and seemingly knows how to use a healthy kick. The stable gags are immense. There is a fine bit of comedy in the star's efforts to handle a capricious horse—one which defies any man to feed or harness him. He peeks out behind the barn in several places—a stunt used with various animals ever since they appeared in slapstick comedy. There is humor here which is certainly realized in raucous laughter. The big LAUGH comes when Cook puts on the gloves with a "roughneck" pugilist with the idea of staying four rounds and winning enough money to marry the girl. It is good burlesque, with the star indulging in his inimitable acrobatic work. He wins the fight by putting the glove on his foot and knocking his opponent for a goal, although the girl assists by blinding the "pug" with a mirror reflecting the sun.

Cook returns to the race-track a conqueror and is allowed to ride Battleship, grandfather of Man O' War. This is an old plug which might have seen service on Columbus' milk route. A wicked villain tries to destroy his chance of winning by drawing a stack of hay across the track as Battleship approaches. He does stop and sniff a moment, but resumes his stride and wins—wins by a good rough neck. The old gags are dominated by an assortment which may be called fresh and up to date. There is always a surprise. Cook plays in his serious style, accomplishing his tricks with little effort. At the New York Rialto, it furnished a bigger laugh than the comedy feature.—LAURENCE REID.

IN an interesting manner Educational gives us a short history of the ancient town of Burges in Flanders, in "The People of Old Burges."

In the opening scenes many views of the business section of the town are taken, among them being the main street with its rather quaint people strolling about in a manner that would suggest ease and quietness of mind. The old church with its time worn belfry is also brought into focus and as the bell rings a notation in the sub-titles tells us that it has performed these duties for centuries.

When the views shift to the town proper and show us the people in their native costumes, we get a real idea of what the picture is about. One of the most peculiar customs is the manner in which these rather ancient people harness their dogs to carts and make them perform laborious work. These animals are seen attached to various wagons and appear to be anxious to do their duty. As they are so very useful to the natives it would probably be very hard to find any stray ones about, for should they be observed, a job would be quickly found for them.

The town has its various waterways or canals in which rowing or canoeing may be enjoyed and is filled with ancient dwellings which are a delight for the eye to gaze upon. And then there is the old ladies' home which is one of the few in this world carrying respect and dignity to the old folks, and this is easily seen from the manner in which they perform their daily duties, and last but not least we are shown the various ways lace is made by the women folks.

Movie Chats No. 16 and Kineto Review
(Urban)

THE sixteenth issue of Charles Urban's Movie Chats takes the spectator on a pleasure jaunt along the coast of Jersey. We are skirting this picturesque strip of country on our way to France, and the English atmosphere is truly enchanting. Lighthouses situated on rocky promontorys, moated castles and walls—these lend an Old World coloring which is caught with due appreciation. The industrial side of the offering presents the making of maps of the New World since the war destroyed old boundary lines. The scientific touch is added in a microscopic close-up of human tears and the salt crystals formed from them. The conclusion offers a Canadian pony farm with various shapes and sizes of the lilliputian horses on exhibition. Some of them are no bigger than a good sized airedale dog and are easily carried in the arm. The keynote of variety is dominant in the number.

The Review deals entirely with the Nile. This river still holds an undeniable charm over the reader or spectator, due to its historical lore and the mysticism of the East. We are introduced to the Delta, given glimpses of an irrigation system which is antiquated but unique. The city of Port Said is touched upon as the gateway of the Orient. The quaint sailing craft, the air of resignation about the natives who ply up and down the river spell an enchantment. There is a shot of de Lesseps' monument—the builder of the Suez Canal.—LAURENCE REID.

"Rubbing It In"
(Universal)

IN order to offset a poor idea, the director of this one reeler has done what a good many directors are forced to do nowadays, namely, concentrate upon pretty sets and exteriors.

And in doing this he has succeeded, but when we come to the story there is little in it which would give entertainment outside of a few comedy situations which break the monotony and act as a relief to the continual enterings and exitings of the actors.

A young girl in her efforts to get "hitched" meets with many disappointments, for her daddy follows closely upon her heels and blocks her every movement.

She is also loved by the little fat comedian, who performs a few stunts in his efforts to gain the young lady's love but loses out until the final scenes, when crowded by the heroine's father the romantic lover escapes through a window and leaves the field open to the fat boy, who seizes the opportunity and wins the "gal."

Outside of a few comedy situations the reel is very ordinary and the comedian is far from being funny.—FRANK LEONARD.

"Water Trails"
(Bruce Scenic-Educational—One Reel)

ROBERT BRUCE in "Water Trails" takes the spectator on a pleasure jaunt along some picturesque rivers in Jamaica. We climb abroad a bamboo raft which is guided by natives and glide slowly along, drinking in some marvelous vistas of tropical scenery. The rivers twist about through canyons of mountains and jungle growth until the end of navigation. This is reached when waterfalls prevent the explorer from trespassing further.

These cascades tumble down in a most fascinating manner. Nature has made them really eloquent and they spell a contentment which is caught by the spectator. The reel fades out in a waterfall which being higher than the others cause it to be a "wee drop too much." "Water Trails" has Robert Bruce written all over it. —LAURENCE REID.

"THE OTHER WOMAN"
(Frothingham-Hodkinson)

Story of Dual Personality Offers Interesting Moments

HERE is a picture which may be called a polite version of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," since it relies upon the conflict of a dual personality for its dramatic foundation. The treatment of the plot and characterization is approached in a manner which places its suspensive value in a dominant position. Therefore the spectator is disarmed as to its contents. The fact that the leading character is abnormal is not brought out until well toward the climax, and this development makes the picture interesting despite the flaws in the pattern. "The Other Woman" jumps over considerable ground and needs some explanation in several of the sequence for the sake of clarity. For example, there is lack of detail in the visualization of the leading character's life—the absence of which forces one to jump at conclusions. Again, the "heavy" apparently has no motive in establishing an acquaintance in business than going about the task of breaking him.

But the author's explanation that the hero has suffered from amnesia and can't be held accountable for his conduct is sufficient for the purposes of the plot. This hero, incidentally, has been picked up, a "down-and-outer," by a man who considers him a former partner in business. He is sent to a southern locality where he is idolized to such an extent that he is nominated for mayor. At the peak of his success the friend in need swoops down and advises him to leave, forget his romance and his political ambitions, because he has information that the erstwhile tramp is an ex-convict. Here is the place for some double exposure which shows the hero's other personality emerging. He suddenly remembers that he has left a wife and child in a distant city and returns to them. The "heavy," thinking his partner dead, had paid ardent courtship to the supposed widow. Then, just as the hero has brought happiness to his family his other personality dominates again, and he leaves for the scene of his triumph.

The treatment of the characterization here is first rate and the sequences do not becloud the issue. Although the hero has left at the height of success he returns without any incident being given over to his political life or the details of his romance. He is married to the "other woman"—from whom knowledge is withheld concerning her husband's dual personality. Suddenly his mind clears and, realizing his stern responsibilities, he returns home to make amends; but his wife declares that romance is over, that she will seek a divorce, thus giving him a chance to legitimatize the new born baby and save himself from bigamy. The picture, as mentioned above, is keyed in a suspensive pitch, therefore the spectator's interest is held. The offering is adequately acted by Jerome Patrick, Jane Novak, Helen Jerome Eddy and William Conklin, and is appropriately staged. It carries enough dramatic values to intrigue the imagination.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A photoplay of a dual personality in which a husband and father leaves his home and forgets time and place and becomes a derelict, only to recover his mentality and realizing his error, is told in "The Other Woman," adapted from Norah Harris' book of the same name. The picture will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— and ———— with a cast that includes Jerome Patrick, Helen Jerome Eddy, Jane Novak and Joseph J. Dowling.

The derelict is picked up from a park bench and is sent by a good samaritan to a southern city where he becomes a responsible figure in the community. When he is on the point of emerging a successful man in the art of finance and romance a cloud enters his life. The very man who had brought him out of the gutter accuses him of being an ex-convict. The former has an ulterior motive for he wants to marry the supposed widow of the man. So the hero returns home, and explains his absence by relating his dual personality. The picture is rich in dramatic sequences all of which are charged with suspensive values. It is also well acted by Mr. Patrick and the others. Edward Sloman directed.

PROGRAM READER

He had left his wife and child owing to an attack of amnesia. He had no memory of his past life. Then into his life entered a good samaritan who offered him sanctuary in a distant city. There he made good until his benefactor showed the fangs of the rattlesnake and struck at the peak of the man's success. It suddenly dawned upon him that he had a dual personality. There he was in love with a beautiful girl, and far away lived his wife and child. What did he do? Did he return home or did he remain with the girl? Did he commit bigamy? Was he accountable for his actions? Did he find a way out of his predicament? See "The Other Woman," which comes to the ———— theatre next ————, with a cast that includes Jerome Patrick, Helen Jerome Eddy, Jane Novak and Joseph J. Dowling.

CATCH LINES

He fell in love with a beautiful girl who was innocent of the fact that he was married. Yet he was innocent of any wrong conduct himself. See "The Other Woman."

"SENTIMENTAL TOMMY"
(Paramount)

Exceptionally Artistic and Undeniably Human

THE anticipation raised in our mind of something exceptional in picture entertainment when the announcement came forth that Paramount was to produce "Sentimental Tommy," from Barrie's memorable stories, "Sentimental Tommy," and "Tommy and Grizel," has been realized. This achievement is a milestone in screen production for it proves that humanities can be brought forth without any display of dramatic properties. The Barrie of the play and novel becomes the Barrie of the photoplay for the first time. He literally stalks through every scene and subtitle with his whimsy, quaintness and charm. "Sentimental Tommy" is a high-brow offering. Its deft sketching, its subtleties, its imaginative weaving of romance and sentiment—these qualities will be appreciated best by those who are fanciful enough to glory in a make-believe world.

Coarse material action cannot be associated with Barrie. He scales the heights and takes the imaginative spectator with him. The coarse-fibred individual can turn to the elemental picture for his entertainment. John S. Robertson has approached these Barrie epics with remarkable appreciation. His sympathetic treatment, his intelligent handling of the theme and characterization are brought forth with truly human and artistic measures. Never does he get out of touch with the subject matter. His sequences are always in hand—all in harmony with the merciless sentimentality of the theme. Never does the action become picturey. He has his finger on Tommy's pulse and the pulse of the public at the same time. The quaint village of Thrums where the youthful sentimentalist conjures up his romantic and tragic fancies is reproduced with all the color that Barrie paints it. And against its quaint atmosphere Tommy's imagination soars in touches which conquer for their simplicity and truth.

The even key in which the picture is pitched may be realized when the tug at the heart brought about by Grizel's yearning for happiness is maintained through the scene as Tommy paints tragic consequences over his romantic fancies. This is a distinctive heart-throb. Every scene is in place and embellished with a quaint atmosphere. The costuming, the settings—these are enchanting. The picture is well balanced, too. The humor keeps apace with the pathos, the sentiment with the romance (typically Barrie treatment). And in the contents move the lifelike figures of Tommy, Grizel, the Painted Lady, Corp, Elspeth, Lady Alice and Dr. McQueen. A more fitting cast could not have been selected than which Mr. Robertson guides here. The transition from boyhood to youth is remarkably caught by Gareth Hughes, whose interpretation of Tommy is ideal. His portrayal is really remarkable for its deep insight, its quick responsiveness, its keenness of expression. He catches every shading, every subtlety. But not more so than May McAvoy. She also enriches this quaint and charming canvas with an intelligent and artistic grasp of Grizel's personality. Both these players are Barrie to the life. George Fawcett, Mabel Taliaferro and the others complete a cast that is unusually proficient. Since the picture is told mostly through medium shots one is better able to catch its charm and whimsicality.—Length, 8 reels.—Laurence Reid.

SUGGESTIONS

Here you have a combination of names for newspaper exploitation. The author who is well known to readers everywhere, the director, who has achieved fame with his production of "Dr. Jeykll and Mr. Hyde," and the cast of excellent players, headed by Gareth Hughes and including May McAvoy, George Fawcett and Mabel Taliaferro. After you concentrate in this direction you can stage a fitting prologue of musical acts with Scotch numbers predominating. You can play up Barrie's other plays, many of which have found their way to the screen. Emphasize the playwright's knack for incorporating his stories and plays with charm and sentiment. Use quotations of the original. Play it up big. Go after the patron who remains for something extraordinary before he will attend. Send out circular letters. Play it up as a delightful journey in the land of Make-Believe.

"THE ONE MAN TRAIL"
(Fox)

A Well Made, Entertaining Buck Jones Feature

BUILT upon a wholesome dramatic foundation, this Buck Jones picture appears to be one which will find as much favor among his followers as most of his past performances and more than some. The prescribed formula of kidnapping villain and helpless girl, so common in a feature whose main appeal is action, is varied enough to make the picture somewhat novel, without, however, neglecting the elements which are essential to every Western and which have a proven audience appeal. The story could, with a few changes of incident, be laid in any small town. It does not depend upon desert scenes or pursuing sheriffs for its plot. It should prove an agreeable and satisfactory diet to serve to an audience who exhibit a liking for the star or Westerns.

The girl who needs assistance in this picture is, for variety, the hero's sister. She is taken away and married by a gambler, who, unbeknown to the girl, has killed the father when he offered objection. Jones, the hero, starts on the trail to bring her home. Director Durning has not made him vow eternal hatred or bitter revenge—he merely sets out to rescue his sister from a disreputable character and bring a murderer to justice.

On his search he meets the heroine, played with an unusual amount of charm by Beatrice Burnham. His sister's husband, now deserting the sister, has designs on the heroine, and the picture works up to a climax which consists of an honest-to-goodness fist fight and some sensational riding by the star.

There is comedy relief in the early incidents which consists of cowboy horse-play. Pathos is strong when the young hero returns, eager and joyous, to his home, which has been plunged into mourning by the death of the father.

Beatrice Burnham may not be the most beautiful leading lady on the screen, but she manages to get away from the helpless, baby-faced type in this picture and gives a characterization which displays a personality of charm, freshness and zest. James Farley is the villain and helps to make the fight scenes realistic. Jones himself is a better actor in the lighter and romantic moments. He also puts some worthwhile thrills across in the climatic sequences.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Buck Jones in a high class Western picture, entitled, "The One Man Trail," will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. Buck Jones is the William Fox cowboy star whose previous pictures have been shown at the ———— and have won a great deal of praise.

"A One Man Trail" is not the average Western which tells the usual tale of bandits and hold-ups which were shown on the screen when the motion picture was in its infancy. It has a gripping drama, a tender romance and wholesome comedy which are certain to satisfy the most critical audience.

The story tells of Tom Merrill, who returns home after his ranch life, to find that his father has been killed by a man who at the same time stole his sister. To bring home his sister, to force the wrongdoer to justice is Tom's job and it is a "One man trail." So he sets out alone in pursuit, over the hills and across the desert until he rights the wrong and carries his sister back to her home, and at the same time finds a true bride for himself. This story is developed with action of the most thrilling sort. Jones is the kind of motion picture star who believes in realism and is not afraid to take chances. No double is used because he is afraid to engage in the fight scenes. Indeed it would be hardly possible to find a "double" who would take the chances in riding and fighting, which this star braves for the sake of thrills.

PROGRAM READER

Buck Jones, who is the star of "The One Man Trail," which will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ————, is an excellent type of young American manhood. Clean cut, daring and fearless, Jones is a worthy idol for the American boy. "The One Man Trail" is one of his best pictures. Its story laid in the West, it affords the star many opportunities to display his ability as a rider and with the lariat. The producers have aimed, however, to produce a thrilling ppicture which has as its basis a logical dramatic story. And they have succeeded admirably in "The One Man Trail." It contains a pleasing romance, a touch of comedy, and plenty of real gripping action. The story works up to a climax which will hold the audience breathless. "The One Man Trail" will be shown at the ———— theatre for ———— beginning ————.

SUGGESTIONS

It would not be well to advertise this solely as a Western thriller. Movie fans still have memories of the old pictures of Indians and bandits riding and fighting endlessly through five reels, which were called "Western thrillers." And this feature has some wholesome dramatic situations in it. "A dramatic story of the West" would be better to bill it. Your star here has worked up for himself a following which will make themselves known at the box office, and this picture is equal to most and above some of his past performances. Beatrice Burnham will be known to some fans, and the director, Bernard Durning, has been a featured player on the screen. His name should be worth mentioning.

CATCH LINES

The search for the murderer was a one man job. The trail led over desert and mountain, but the young ranchman never faltered. See Buck Jones in "The One Man Trail" at the ———— theatre.

"ROADS OF DESTINY"
(Goldwyn)

Hopeless Story Enhanced Somewhat by Star's Spendid Acting

PAULINE FREDERICK strives magnificiently but hopelessly with the material supplied in "Roads of Destiny," announced as an O. Henry story and later a play by Channing Pollock. It would appear that the working over process has not improved the original for it is hard to believe that Mr. Henry ever wrote anything so pointless and commonplace. Also that Mr. Pollock has had much to do with what appears on the screen.

"Roads of Destiny" is four stories in one. Three are dreams that John Bowers has, showing what would transpire if he attempted to escape destiny by leaving his old home. The remaining story is a drama of an "invention," the "wronged girl," "lost memory" and the lover who would give up his sweetheart for the sake of his brother, all hopelessly movie stuff and with no entertainment qualifications. The dream stories are enacted with the same principal characters including the star which makes the whole confusing and ridiculous, and kills entirely the predestination idea announced as being the theme of the production.

Miss Frederick plays four emotional roles, mistress of a gambling house proprietor in Alaska, a woman of doubtful character on the fringe of New York society, a demented "wronged girl," and in the principal story one who has "loved not wisely but too well."

It is to her great credit that she makes certain scenes of each story interesting by sheer force and sincerity of emotional acting. Aside from these scenes, however, the picture is very sad and so constructed that when John Bowers wakes up for the third time after experiencing his dreams, that an audience is liable to break into laughter. In fact a Capitol theatre audience did this very thing.

Where Miss Frederick has a following, her personal work may get the production by and without doubt, her name, an interesting title, and the fame of both O. Henry and Channing Pollock will constitute considerable of a box office magnet.

We fear, however, for the production as a whole. The idea attempted is the same as that of "Eyes of Youth" except that there is no "crystal."—Length, 4955 feet.—J. S. Dickerson.

THE CAST

Rose Merritt ..... Pauline Frederick
David Marsh ..... John Bowers
Lewis March ..... Richard Tucker
Ann Hardy ..... Jane Novak
Mr. Hardy ..... Hardee Kirkland
McPherson ..... Willard Louis
Fate ..... Maude George
Colby ..... M. B. Flynn

Adapted from a play by Channing Pollock, founded on a story by O. Henry.
Directed by Frank Lloyd.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Roads of Destiny," adapted from a play by Channing Pollock, the famous New York dramatic critic, which in turn was suggested by a short story written by O. Henry, is the photoplay attraction at the ———— theatre for a ———— days' engagement beginning ————.

In the leading role is Pauline Frederick with John Bowers, Jane Novak, Maude George and a strong cast in her support.

The picture is founded on a theme that has the predestination idea exemplified and is really four pictures in one and providing roles, all of great dramatic strength for the star. Miss Frederick plays the mistress of an Alaskan gambling house proprietor, a woman of questionable reputation in New York society, a demented discarded sweetheart of a cad and a young girl who has loved "not wisely but too well." In each part she is called upon to give portrayals which equal in every way the role of the mother in her most recent Goldwyn picture, "Madame X."

John Bowers as the homespun hero also has a fine acting part and the picture has been produced with extreme care and attention to detail. The direction is by Frank Lloyd and screens in six reels.

PROGRAM READER

Pauline Frederick, in her latest Goldwyn picture, "Roads of Destiny," will be the principal film attraction at the ———— theatre for a ———— days' showing, beginning ————.

Miss Frederick has what amounts to four roles in this adaptation of a play by Channing Pollock suggested by a story from the pen of O. Henry, all strongly dramatic and presenting opportunities for acting equal if not superior to the role of the mother in her famous "Madame X."

In support of the star are such well known players as John Bowers, playing the role of the rustic hero; Jane Novak as Bowers' sweetheart; Maude George and M. B. Flynn. The picture has a wide diversity of locale. Miss Frederick appears as the mistress of an Alaska gambling hall proprietor, a woman of doubtful character on the fringe of New York society, an unsophisticated country girl and a demented woman who has loved "not wisely but too well." Each part gives her a distinct acting opportunity and demonstrates once again her range of histrionic ability and talent.

The production was directed by Frank Lloyd, who has given extra attention to the detail, especially in the Alaskan episodes, and provided fine contrasts of character and a true dramatic tempo. The picture will please those who admire exceptional acting.

SUGGESTIONS

There are four things to bill in this picture, the star, the title, which will be judged to suggest a real picture, the fame of O. Henry as a writer of original stories, and Channing Pollock's reputation as a dramatic critic and playwright. We would not recommend the picture farther than as a vehicle for the display of Miss Frederick's talents. For a prologue the predestination idea of the story presents opportunities. This is not a picture for ballyhoo, but contests on the theme would be suitable.

Bebe Daniels Has a Lively Offering Here

THOSE who have been waiting for Bebe Daniels to show something just as good as "You Never Can Tell," that scintillating comedy which placed her in the foreground as a star to be reckoned with, have their wish realized in her newest release, "Ducks and Drakes." It is a comedy which packs a continuous laugh from the moment the colorful Miss Daniels picks telephone numbers at random to the time she capitulates in the throes of romance. There is a novel way of treating old material here which gives it a freshness and spontaneity—virtues that lift the piece into the realm of clever entertainment. The star plays one of those irrepressible sub-debs whose idea of a good time is in kicking over the traces, much to the discomfiture of a respectable aunt and an equally respectable fiance. When she is reprimanded and forbidden to go out, she picks up the telephone book and chooses numbers at random. If the voice on the opposite end is masculine and pleasant—well Bebe cultivates a flirtation.

The farcical pretentions keep apace for it happens that two of the voices are owned by her fiance's best friends. So they enter into a conspiracy to abduct her and teach her a lesson in deportment. The idea is perfectly in keeping with this type of heroine, and there is nothing far-fetched in its treatment. The girl is lugged out to a houseboat and the kidnappers indulge in a "free-for-all" to impress her with the fact that she is playing with fire by carrying on prosmiscuous flirtations. The scheme has its results for the heroine appreciates that her fiance is fully trustworthy. There is a pleasant surprise at nearly every turn of the feature. The men on the other end of the wire are taken unawares when they discover their friend to be her fiance. And he is surprised to learn that the girl could be so whimsical.

The director has kept the picture moving with snappy incident with scarcely a duplication of sequences. Much of the comedy scores because of its wealth of captivating subtitles. Not a scene is offered but which is punctuated with snappy dialogue or description. Although the story is a dead "give away" once Jack Holt is introduced, the spectator is too interested to be reminded of its obvious conclusion. "Ducks and Drakes" travels along merrily, not depending on risque touches for its humor, but on a lifelike idea which is colored with naive but delicious pranks. Miss Daniels is bedecked in a lavish wardrobe, having a different costume for every sequence. And she wears her finery in a manner which should invite "ahs and ehs" from the feminine patron. Her portrayal is natural and therefore charming. The comedy is handsomely staged. As an entertainment it will bring shekels to the exhibitor and chuckles to the patron.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

Bebe Daniels, the piquant and popular Realart star, will appear at the ———— theatre next ———— in her latest comedy romance entitled, "Ducks and Drakes." In this adaptation of Elmer Harris' stage play Miss Daniels has the role of an irrepressible young heiress, who almost drives her guardian to distraction by her naughty habit of calling random numbers on the telephone, and flirting with all the pleasant sounding masculine voices that answer her.

The young woman has a fiance, and he, too, knows about her wire flirtations. Unlike the chaperon, however, he is far from distracted about it. Being an efficient young business man, he merely applies business efficiency to the problem, and cures her of her habit by the simple expediency of enlisting the aid of some of his men friends. The picture is told in a series of very amusing complications which permit the star to score with her individual mannerisms. The role may be said to be ideal for the expression of the star's vibrant personality. In the supporting cast are such dependable players as Jack Holt, Mayme Kelso, W. E. Lawrence and Wade Boteler. Maurice Campbell directed.

PROGRAM READER

She saw no harm in promiscuous telephone flirtations with any pleasant masculine voice that her system of picking random telephone numbers brought on her wire. How could she dream that some of these men knew each other; knew that she was flirting with all of them, and were framing up a plot to punish and cure her of her wild habit? Naturally these telephone calls led to secret meetings. And first thing she knew, reckless Teddy had more excitement in her young life than she knew how to manage. This is the brief outline of Bebe Daniels' new comedy romance, "Ducks and Drakes," which will appear at the ———— theatre next ————. Some day when you feel the call of adventure you might follow her scheme. It might lead to romance or marriage or ————. Jack Holt is in the cast.

CATCH LINES

For piquant fun and exciting adventure see "Ducks and Drakes" at the ———— theatre. Bebe Daniels is the star of this pleasing entertainment.

She was flirtatious over the telephone. Where did her adventure take her? See Bebe Daniels in "Ducks and Drakes."

"THE WHISTLE"
(Hart-Paramount)

Bill Hart Puts on the Capital vs. Labor Formula With Fair Success

THERE is a foreword attached to Bill Hart's latest, "The Whistle," which states that the purposes of the picture are not to solve the age-old problem of capital versus labor, but solely to provide entertainment. This may be a far-sighted test of Bill's showmanship, but it takes more than an apologetic statement to discount the time-worn contents of such a photoplay. A dozen forewords incorporated into one could not keep the spectator from sympathizing with the labor element for which the star is its chief sponsor. "The Whistle" is melodramatic and overdrawn, which of course keeps it from approaching human attitudes.

It is Bill Hart's way to keep it moving, however, and one does not have to wait for a thrill or three. Yet not his vivid acting is sufficient to lift it out of the rut of regulation movie channels. The title finds meaning in the plentiful supply of medium shots and close-ups of the factory whistle blowing with Bill looking at it with a gleam of hatred in his eyes. He is a widower here and when his boy is caught in the belt, vengeance takes the form of a canker in his heart. He saves the capitalist's boy from a watery grave and kidnapping him, moves to a distant city where he brings him up as his own. The plot is cut and dried and it is dollars to doughnuts before the introduction is over that Bill will have a change of heart due to sentiment and other heart-throbbing ingredients. Coincidence enters when the capitalist encounters his former employe again. The former's wife is an old sweetheart of Bill's. He notices the mother love in the scenes between the woman and the youngster and after upbraiding the capitalist for his lax conduct of his factory offers to restore the child to its parents and go to prison for abduction. This is the moment for the magnate's regeneration.

The final shot discloses Bill looking at the dreadful whistle and reconciled to the fact that its shrill music means his bread and butter. There is some suspense in the scene which shows the star rescuing the capitalist's boy when the auto in which he is riding plunges through the draw-bridge. Again he puts over one of his customary brawls (rather mild this time) with a discontented employee. It is good to see him out of chaps and with his Stetson and guns dropped for the moment. But in his search for different material, it seems as if he might have picked a story with a semblance of novelty. His acting is so rugged that it emphasizes the weaknesses of the plot. The picture may be called fairly successful because he is thoroughly in character. It should make money in factory towns.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

William S. Hart is the star of the Paramount picture, "The Whistle," which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. In this offering the popular interpreter of Western roles is seen in a different characterization. He does not ride over the plains in pursuit of bad men, nor is he a bad man himself. He does not indulge in any hard riding or fast shooting. Instead he is seen as an apostle of labor in its age-old battle with capital. Mr. Hart gives a rugged portrayal as Robert Evans who endeavors to square accounts with the magnate in whose employment he works as a factory hand. He would like to find a way out of his drab existence, but the whistle blows and he realizes that work must be done—that his motherless boy may live.

One day the lad is caught in the belt of the machinery and his life is snuffed out. So Robert Evans becomes a victim of hate against the capitalistic classes. He kidnaps the magnate's boy to bring him up as his own—intending at some future time to wreak vengeance. But it so happens that the lad's mother has never recovered her erstwhile happiness. Eventually Evans appreciates that mother love is too strong to combat. So he relinquishes his claim to the youngster. The picture is packed with effective dramatic moments which offer several thrills. Mr. Hart is supported by a competent cast.

PROGRAM READER

Has it ever occurred to you that William S. Hart is versatile? Has it ever come to your notice that the popular interpreter of Western roles is talented enough to play parts identified with your life or mine? Take his newest picture, "The Whistle," for example. Here Mr. Hart is seen as an advocate of labor's principles. He plays a common working man who makes his bread and butter by obeying the factory whistle, no matter whether it irritates him or not. How he finds a way out of his difficulties—how he brings a spirit of good-fellowship to his erstwhile employer—how he finds a regeneration of soul is told in five reels of highly entertaining drama. "The Whistle" comes to the ———— theatre next ————.

SUGGESTIONS

The best way to exploit this feature is to announce that Bill Hart is coming in a different type of picture. Tell that he is out of his cowboy role—that he has taken off his sombrero, chaps and cartridge belt and puts on the mantle of the working man. Tell that Bill acts the part of an everyday type of individual—the kind of man who stops when the whistle blows and proceeds to work when it sounds. Play up the title. Link up with the labor elements if you are located in factory districts. Play special performances for them. Play up that Hart can play any kind of part—that he is as successful in the part he portrays here as when he enacts the character of a cowboy or mounted policeman.

"THE DOLLAR A YEAR MAN"
(Paramount)

Weak Humor and Hokum Make This a Poor Effort

THE difference between Fatty Arbuckle's previous picture, "Brewster's Millions," and his present offering, "The Dollar a Year Man," in point of entertainment value is as marked as that between a three ring circus and a wagon show. The rotund star certainly had a prize winner in the first mentioned production and its forerunner, "The Life of the Party," was also something to boast of in the way of enjoyable comedy. The law of averages or the law of compensation may bring forth the fact that the good must be mixed with those—well—not so good. We reiterate that once the penalty has been paid in making something extraordinary the succeeding efforts are always brought into comparison. And "The Dollar a Year Man" falters.

Even in dismissing the previous sparkling comedies from the mind, we cannot give the latest effort anything in the shape of praise. Its sole redeeming feature is the title. Yet it is meaningless. The idea strikes us that such a title could have been worked out into some semblance of a story. In fact it carries all sorts of possibilities which could have been developed seriously or humorously. As it is the author, director and star try mightily to put it over with forced effort. Arbuckle plays a boob laundryman whose boorish manners get him in bad with his fellow club members. The Prince is expected for a visit and it devolves on the boys to kidnap Fatty and keep him away until H. R. H. has departed. This is the poorest kind of hokum. And there is such an expenditure of effort to bring a laugh that it only serves in being deadly boresome.

Where there was a good spontaneity of humor in Arbuckle's previous essays, "The Dollar a Year Man" jumps from one mild incident to another. The audience wants to laugh, but Fatty does not give them much opportunity because his bag of tricks has several holes in it. The star plays an amateur detective and the hokum takes him to a haunted house and permits him to indulge in acrobatic work. A fat man taking a fall is always productive of laughter, and Fatty scores whenever he puts over a fall or tumble. The picture should have been "slapsticked" to the limit or treated differently. At the Rialto, New York, the audience did not find much enthusiasm, but surely did explode when a regular, orthodox, two-reel comedy was shown. Arbuckle never has a chance in "The Dollar a Year Man." One feels like sympathizing with him to see him in such a weak entertainment.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle will be the star at the ———— theatre next ———— in his latest comedy entitled "The Dollar a Year Man." This offering is said to be as uproariously funny as "The Life of the Party," and "Brewster's Millions," since it permits the star to flash his well known brand of humor in a story packed with original incident and action. Mr. Arbuckle plays the part of a "dollar a year man," a detective and laundryman—three parts which enable him to score with his versatility.

As Franklin Pinney, the laundryman, he believes himself a wonderful detective. The Santa Yacht Club, of which he is a member, expects the Prince for a visit. Pinney believes that he is on the same plane, so the other members decide to take advantage of his weakness for detecting plots and hatch up a kidnapping story so that the jovial Pinney would follow the scent and thus be away when the Prince arrived. How the sudden turn of events—the quick surprises spell trouble and final success, is told in this comedy which is written by Walter Woods and directed by James Cruse. In the cast are Edwin Stevens and Lila Lee.

PROGRAM READER

If you want some rollicking good fun we can't recommend anything better than a visit to the ———— theatre next ———— when you see Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle in his latest feature comedy, "The Dollar a Year Man." The rotund comedian has declared that this is his best production insofar as furnishing plenty of laughter. In "The Dollar a Year Man" Fatty has the role of a laundry owner, a former "dollar a year man," whose fellow club members decide to take advantage of his weakness for detecting plots and invent a kidnapping story when the Prince is to be their guest. The laundryman takes to the plot like a duck to water and it all ends by him actually saving the Prince in a haunted house from a band of anarchists. The story is well balanced with a love interest. Prominent in the cast is Lila Lee.

SUGGESTIONS

You can advertise this picture as a lively comedy which gives Fatty Arbuckle a chance to exploit his well known brand of humor. A teaser campaign pointing out the fact that Fatty is a "dollar a year man" here, whereas in "Brewster's Millions" he threw away money. You can tell that it carries numerous surprises and that it offers a full amount of laughs. Tell also that Lila Lee is in the cast. Your audiences should recognize her talent and beauty. Tell that the picture carries thrills—secret intrigues and a fine romance. Bring out that Arbuckle appears as an amateur detective. Play up the fact that Arbuckle is appearing in widely different stories. You can tell that Edwin Stevens is in the cast. Bill it as a hilarious, laugh-provoking comedy.

"THE FREEZE OUT"
(Universal)

Carey's Personality Its Chief Asset

HARRY CAREY offers another of his whimsical, homespun characterizations in this picture, which is lighter than some of his previous features and which will give fair entertainment chiefly because of the star's personality. For the story has the disadvantage of being one of the "reform" variety. And the sudden change of character, not only of one individual, but of an entire Western village, is spreading the sweetness on pretty thickly. It is an ending too natural, too patently artificial, to satisfy most audiences. Granting that no Western picture depicts the West as it really is, the change of the town's appetite from liquor to books, wanders far from truth.

The Carey touches are evident throughout. His bits of business, mannerisms and expressions give a charm to the character of a fearless aggressive man hiding beneath a panoply of almost boobish simplicity. There are no bloody and gory fights in this picture. The plot never gets deep enough to warrant them. It is simply the story of a stranger who comes to a small town, finds the only gambling resort to be crooked, and decides to open one of his own. But he meets the girl, who urges him to turn his attention to doing some good in the world. The stranger, apparently not influenced by her arguments, continues to build his gambling house. The "surprise" comes when the house is opened as a school and library instead of a saloon and gambling den. And the picture ends with the old saloon about to be opened as a church and the rough miners hastening to the library in search of knowledge.

There is comedy relief in the opening part in the schoolroom scenes which does not reflect any great credit upon the direction. The best incidents are those showing the efforts of the villains to drive the stranger out of town and thus prevent any danger to their monopoly on the gambling business. These keep the interest to an average pitch. However, after the library and schoolroom have been revealed, there is a decided lapse. The story might have ended here with a fade-out, but in order to make everybody in the picture virtuous the two villains are driven out and the saloon closed. This entails some gun play which stirs up the interest again and holds it to the end. The sub-titles accurately catch the atmosphere of the story. Helen Ferguson is a winsome leading woman.—Length, 4,400 feet.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Harry Carey, one of the most unique and unusual of all screen stars, plays the stellar role in "The Freeze Out," the Universal picture which will be shown as the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. Carey is a Western character actor who has the distinction of being at the same time an accomplished cowboy and an experienced actor. He has been on the screen for a number of years previous to which he was a popular stage favorite.

"The Freeze Out" is a story laid in the West in the days when the chief building in town was the saloon and gambling house. A stranger comes to town. He sees that the only gambling house in town is crooked, so he decides to open one of his own. And in the end, when he changes his plans, it is a girl, as usual, who is to blame.

Supporting Carey in this production is Helen Ferguson, an experienced and accomplished leading woman, who will be recognized by many followers of the screen. Others in the capable cast are Joe Harris, Charles LeMoyne and J. Farrel McDonald. The picture was directed by Jack Ford.

"The Freeze Out" tells a powerful story of a woman's struggle against evil, and the influence which she holds on a community. The picture was made at Universal City, Cal., and is replete with beautiful scenery.

PROGRAM READER

A stranger rode into the town of Broken Buckle one summer morning. He discovered that the only gambling house in town was crooked, so, being a good business man, he decided to open an opposition one. But he changed his plans. Why he did so forms the basis of "The Freeze Out," Harry Carey's latest Universal production, which will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ————.

Harry Carey needs no introduction to the patrons of the ————. He has the distinction of offering one of the most unique personalities of all screen stars. A sterling character actor, he also typifies the hardy manhood of the West. In this picture he is sure to please with quaint and humorous touches. The part is one which suits him perfectly. Supporting him is Helen Ferguson, one of the best known leading women in filmdom. The picture was produced under the direction of Jack Ford, while others in the capable supporting cast are Joe Harris, Charles LeMoyne, and J. Farrel McDonald. "The Freeze Out" will be shown at the ———— theatre for ———— days beginning ————.

SUGGESTIONS

Carey remains in the type of pictures which offer him an opportunity to bring out a personality which is different from most stars. In this one he should please his followers well enough. His name is the best exploitation angle which can be used. Helen Ferguson will be recognized by many followers of the movies. Do not exploit this as a "reform" story, lest the impression be given that it is of the wishy-washy type.

CATCH LINES

GETTING REAL MONEY

CHANGING lead to gold may be impossible, but through the medium of RITCHEY posters it is quite possible to transform idle curiosity into the real money that results from ticket sales. The twenty-four sheet stand for "Black Beauty," a wonderful Vitagraph production, furnishes a case in point. The box-office results for this production have been so great as to force the conclusion that most people who saw the poster saw the photoplay it advertised as well. And it was very broadly displayed at that.

"The Seventh Wonder of the Film World"

NEVER before in history was such praise given a motion picture as the New York critics gave to "Sentimental Tommy." And the public agreed with the critics—the Criterion was crowded night and day during the first week of the showing, and the second week was started off Sunday with the biggest night in the theatre's history. Here are the criticisms:

"SENTIMENTAL TOMMY is the seventh wonder of the film world, and one forgets what the other six wonders are in viewing it. In its line it is the outstanding film achievement of the year." New York Herald.

"IT is Barrie. It has the charm and the pathos, the humor, the quality which brings tears when you are smiling." New York Telegraph.

"WILL go down in the annals as one of the year's best pictures. Every exhibitor will want to secure it for an extended run." Wid's Daily.

AN IRVIN V. WILLAT PRODUCTION

A melodrama of the sea that should have no difficulty in pleasing most any type of audience.

In this production Irvin V. Willat makes another contribution to the screen that securely upholds his reputation as a director blessed with a thorough knowledge of showmanship.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS

If there is one thing that IRVIN V. WILLAT can do better than most of his contemporaries, it is his ability to stage a sea picture in a thoroughly realistic manner.

The PARTNERS OF THE TIDE — Entertaining Sea Picture—perfect atmosphere —action dominates.

HARRISON REPORTS

The one thing that stands out most in PARTNERS OF THE TIDE is Director Willat's intelligent work. He should be entitled to the fame of a director of the first rank.

SCREEN OPINIONS

Spectacular production that should prove a strong box office attraction. The right kind of exploitation should make PARTNERS OF THE TIDE swell the box office receipts. It is a spectacular melodrama. In this production the exhibitor will find a number of advertising angles. His patrons will be impressed with the settings and convincing quality of the atmosphere and its strong vein of human interest.

MORNING TELEGRAPH

Here is a picture which ought to appeal to all audiences because, in the nature of film events, there are few of them and because it is a melodrama well done. PARTNERS OF THE TIDE is a well balanced story that is well developed and has plenty of action and suspense.

EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW

IRVIN V. WILLAT scores a high water mark of directorial excellence in the making of this marine melodrama. The action never falters for an instant and the story holds its interest from start to finish. This feature should prove a welcome attraction well worth the attention of exhibitors.

WIDS

There are fewer of this type of picture on the market than any other at present, and so you should be sure to get this and give them something different. You can promise them plenty of action. The box office receipts should prove worthy of any exploitation expenses.

EXHIBITORS HERALD

A melodramatic picture that runs the gamut from humorous child stuff to thrilling fights between two deep sea divers in the hold of a sunken ship. A Cape Cod story with well developed threads of human interest and plaintive humor—offers good entertainment.

HERE comes the circus! Don't you hear the brassy blare of the band, the rumble of the big gilded wagons, the cheerful skirl of the steam calliope? And there is the Big Top going up like magic on the old ball grounds, there is Jumbo, the elephant, carrying tent poles with his trunk. There are the bareback riders, and the cowboys in sheepskin chaps, the flame swallower and the human octupus.

And everywhere are crowds—fathers and mothers, grandfathers and grandmothers, and flocks of youngsters. Hurrah! The Circus has come to Town!

VOL. XXIII APRIL 16, 1921 No. XVII

The Shock Troops of the Industry

We do not know what the convention will accomplish. We know that it will be serious and businesslike, like the Utica Convention of last year—and largely attended. It will be decidedly more serious, because, this year, New York, the most important state in the Union and in the film industry, is facing practically the certainty of a regulatory measure, if not censorship itself.

We are hoping, and whole heartedly so, that the business of the Convention will be solidly constructive—that the convened exhibitors will not go into session with a chip on their shoulders.

This is a year of attack from without the industry. It is no year for attack from within.

The situation is so bad that it transcends all internal troubles.

We are all of us, from the foremost executive to the least important employee, throughout this large industry, in the same boat; and we don't want the boat to be rocked. We don't want individual selfishness, or petty politics, or glib oratory, or specious arguments to prevail against the safety of all the passengers. That, in fact, will not be tolerated. It's a pretty big boat and the rocker is pretty sure to rock himself out.

These are serious times—and, furthermore, they have only begun. We are in the beginning only of one of those reform eras which have beset the world in its past history. Having to do with the greatest contact ever established with the human race we have to do also with the reformer who demands its regulation—not the way public opinion wants it but the way the reformer wants it. Let us realize our immense responsibility, but we've got to fight—and keep on fighting—all of us—for our rights and the public's rights.

The exhibitors are the shock troops; but they need a big reserve and above all a united and sympathetic reserve. They need every single individual in this industry; and furthermore every single individual in the industry, whose bread and butter are at stake, has got something to say about the whole matter.

It isn't a question now—it may have been in less critical times—of who does the best work, or who wins the fight, and deserves the credit, or who makes mistakes. It is not a question of the exhibitor as against the producer. It's a question of a united industry—just that and nothing less: because nothing less can win.

Every exhibitor has a right to demand this unity of action. He owes it to himself; and he furthermore owes it to all the other individuals in the industry who are dependent upon him and upon whom he also is dependent.

We have a strong Exhibitors League. We have never had so strong and effective an organization. Those who have builded it so well deserve a lot of credit. The industry welcomes this force; is proud of it; needs it. No faction and no individual wants to weaken it.

Today the best interests, the immediate best interests of the exhibitor, are the overthrow of censorship and other ultra-reform legislation. This big battle cannot —positively cannot—be achieved without the utmost cooperation of exhibitor, producer and distributor.

Does anyone doubt this; can anyone question so obvious a fact?

So we ask for construction,—and no dissension.

There are three precious days at Rochester, in which much may be done for the future welfare of the motion picture and the motion picture exhibitor.

Let every hour be constructive.

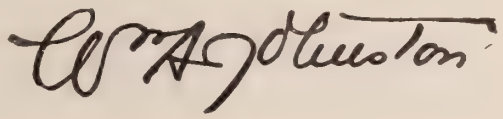
Let not a minute be wasted in wrangling.

The politician and the professional reformer will watch this convention, will scan every item of its procedure.

May they see complete unity and harmony—only this.

We claim to represent the fifth industry in size and that we can sway a national election.

Let's show this strength and dignity.



Charles Rogers Succeeds Kirkpatrick

Charles Rogers

CHARLES R. ROGERS has assumed the duties of general manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation, succeeding A. S. Kirkpatrick, resigned. Mr. Rogers' last connection was director of sales for Selznick. His rise is regarded as one of the most rapid which has ever been enjoyed by a man coming into the industry from the outside, he having only been in the film business for four years.

Mr. Rogers was special representative for a large varnish house at the time he became interested in motion pictures. His first venture was the building of one of the largest motion picture houses in Buffalo. Next he bought the production of "Three Weeks" for New York, and sold it successfully.

The attention which he won through this led him to be offered the position of Buffalo manager for Select. He filled it so well that he became New England manager for the same company. Two years ago he became director of sales for the Selznick Company.

Mr. Rogers attributes his success to his constant practice of giving a fair deal to exhibitors, and to his care in serving the interests of his employers. Throughout his period of sales management he has made it a point to be in the field a great part of the time, in personal touch with exhibitors, learning of their problems and helping them to solve them.

He was at the point of going into business for himself when he received the offer from Robertson-Cole, and it was this distributing company's prospects for the future which led him to decide in its favor.

"I have come to Robertson-Cole with the advantage of finding here a splendid organization ready to co-operate with me in placing our product to the best advantage. No changes are contemplated at the present time.

"With the great ground work of preparation which has been laid, whereby the industry has been convinced that Robertson-Cole has determined to operate only upon the principle of honesty of purpose, and to give exhibitors at all times only the best obtainable product, I know we shall operate with continued success.

"We have the equipment for production on the coast, we have the finest home office building in the world, and we have a selling organization second to none. With these functioning properly we cannot be denied a continued generous share of prosperity."

Ten Companies Are Incorporated in New York

TEN companies incorporated and filed papers at Albany, N. Y., during the past week for the purpose of engaging in the motion picture business in New York State. These companies, amount of capitalization and incorporators are:

Northland Film Company, $5,000, Albert Thompson, W. W. Hanabergh, Brooklyn; A. Le Roy Rockafeller, Ridgewood, N. J.; Art Plays, Inc., $1,000, Harry Wolfe, Estelle Krengel, D. K. Shappiro, New York; Erie Basin Amusement Company, Brooklyn, $50,000, Samuel Krauss, David Robbins, Frank Steinberg, New York; Playgoers Pictures, $1,000, Harry Wolfe, D. K. Shappiro, Estelle Krengel, New York; G. and B. Amusement Company, $15,000, Samuel Bergoffen, Joseph Goldstein, Harry Goldstein, Brooklyn; F. and S. Amusement Company, $15,000, Jacob Finestone, Abraham Fein, Morris Savitzky, New York; Chelsea Import and Export Company, $10,000, Edward Newman, R. W. Kerbs, New York, Minnie Horowitz, Brooklyn; Lythic Amusement Company, $200,000, Lawrence N. Martin, P. J. Dobson, W. J. Johnson, New Rochelle.

Educational Sales Officials Starts on Tour

Henry Ginsberg, domestic sales manager of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., left this week for Atlanta where he begins a series of visits to important branch offices. From Atlanta he goes to New Orleans and then his itinerary includes Dallas, St. Louis, Kansas City, Denver, Omaha, Des Moines, Minneapolis, Milwaukee, Chicago and Indianapolis. He only recently visited the various branches in the east.

President E. W. Hammons will also leave in a few days to visit a number of the most important offices in the Middle West.

First House of New Chain Acquired in Brooklyn

David Robbins, who has been the chief of Universal's home office projection department for the past five years, has resigned to enter the exhibiting field. With a partner, Samuel Krauss, he has formed the Erie Basin Amusement Company, and has taken over the Oriole theatre, Henry and Degraw streets, Brooklyn. This is the first of a string of theatres the new company intends to own and operate.

Brilliant Opening for the Capitol at Montreal

A brilliant gathering of social and the atrical notables attended the opening o the newCapitol theatre in Montreal la Saturday evening. A large party of sta and officials of the Famous Player Lasky Corporation also attended the oper ing performance. Cecil De Mille's Para mount release, "Forbidden Fruit," wa the feature attraction of the program.

The New York party were guests at dinner given at the St. James Club, an after the performance at the Capitol reception was held at Ciro's. S. R. Ken general manager of the Famous Players Lasky Corporation, was guest of honor a a supper given by George W. Weeks, gen eral manager of the Famous Players Lasky Film Service, Ltd., and Charles C Branham.

Exhibitors Resent Attack of Unofficial Censors

A poignant and stinging rebuke to self constituted moralists has been sent t Governor Ritchie and published broadcas by the Exhibitors' League of Maryland a the result of attacks made on a polic magistrate, the Maryland Board of Cen sors and the motion-picture industry i general. The incident grows out of al leged negligence on the part of Messrs Fuller and Levine to cut deleted parts.

Drafted by J. Louis Rome, George A McDermit and Eugene B. McCurdy, com prising a committee especially appointe for the purpose; the letter calls on th Governor to make known his opinion o his appointees to the State Censor Boar and also to request officially that the wor of the Board not be hampered by out siders.

Law to Manage Universa Winnipeg Branch

George F. Law, one of the pioneers i Canadian film circles, has been appointe as manager of the Winnipeg branch of th Canadian Universal Film Co., it is an nounced by Herman Stern, Universal' Division Sales Manager for Canada.

Mr. Law has been in the film selling business in Canada since the days of th old Dominion Film Exchange in Toronto for whom he handled most of the impor tant releases.

F.I.L.M. Club Active in Anti-Censor Fight

Two circular letters combating censor ship have been sent out this week by th F. I. L. M. Club of New York. One wa sent to all New York state exhibitors an the second to different institutions whic are being supplied with "gratis" show by the different distributors.

The F. I. L. M. Club also announce that the New York Independent Master films, Inc., has withdrawn from the club.

State Exhibitor League Reorganized by Congressional Districts

O'Reilly Probable Successor to Cohen as President of the Body

WITH the election of officers scheduled for Thursday, April 7th, the final day of the convention, the following slate seemed probable:

Charles J. O'Reilly, president, succeeding Sydney Cohen; W. H. Linton, of Utica, re-elected treasurer, and Samuel I. Berman, secretary.

The banquet held on Wednesday night, April 6, at which John I. McInerny of Rochester was toastmaster, included among the speakers J. J. Murdock, general manager of the Keith interests; Ex-Senator Henry Walter, Sydney S. Cohen, Andrew R. Hamilton, Commissioner of Public Safety of the City of Rochester, and I. E. Chadwick, President of the New York F. I. L. M. club.

From a point of national importance, the reorganization of the state league by congressional districts was the outstanding accomplishment given birth at the convention. The plan provides for twelve districts, each with a district leader; and for four main divisions, each headed by a divisional executive. The work of reorganization was actually started while the convention was in session.

It is hoped that New York, through this move, will provide a model organization form for the rest of the country.

A resolution unanimously adopted by the convention at its Wednesday session, expressed unalterable opposition to the Lusk Censorship bill, or for any such bills, and asked postponement of legislation for a year, pledging the support of the Association to the elimination of objectionable features on the screen, and to producers who are trying to produce clean pictures, at the same time withholding support from producers who do not conform to these standards. The resolution recited that censorship is "distinctly un-American, impracticable and unadvisable, and mitigates against the best interests, not alone of the picture industry, but of public interest in general."

The censorship question, as a matter of fact, came in for as much consideration as it received at the Albany hearing, the resolution finally adopted being selected from a mass of ones of similar tenor after it had been drawn up by a special committee composed of chairmen of all the committees of the convention.

It was estimated upward of 1,500 persons were in attendance at the opening of the State Exhibitors' convention. The large number of rural exhibitors who were present, was a gratifying feature to officers of the league.

David Grauman, Coast Magnate, Dead

DAVID J. GRAUMAN, half owner of the Grauman theatre interests, died suddenly on April 5 after but two days' illness at his Hollywood, Cal., home. He was sixty-eight years of age.

Funeral services were held on Thursday, April 7. Interment will be made in Indianapolis.

Mr. Grauman was born in Louisville, Ky., but had been on the coast for twenty years. He is credited with having opened the first ten-cent vaudeville house in the West, eighteen years ago in San Francisco. The success of this proposition led him and his son to open stock theatres in seven northern California theatres. A nineteen-hundred-seat house built in San Francisco was destroyed by fire, following which Mr. Grauman erected a twenty-eight-hundred-seat house.

He is survived by his wife and his son, Sidney. The latter will continue management of the theatres, which were ordered closed until after the funeral.

Aside from the resolution placing the organization as unalterably opposed to censorship, other important subjects were passed on, and the attitude of the convention made a matter of record.

The "star" problem came in for attention, the league opposing the creation of stars through flood of publicity rather than through popular demand.

A committee was appointed to investigate the complaint of any exhibitor who charged producers or exchanges with not living up to the New York state law in regard to deposits on film rentals, and the practice of charging deposits on film rentals was condemned, while at the same time was urged the adoption by other states of laws abolishing such practices. It was recommended that as many exhibitors as there are exchange men be appointed to the grievance board of film exchange men, so that fairness may be assured in all cases.

A telegram received on Wednesday from Dr. Wilbur Crafts, of the Reform Bureau at Washington, to a local newspaper, in which the reformer declared that the picture men had used partisan political pressure to obtain Sunday pictures, was the subject of vigorous discussion. Sydney Cohen denied the exhibitors had ever used partisan influence. The telegram is said to have charged that the picture men boasted they had elected a Democratic Mayor in Rochester because of the opposition of the Republicans to Sunday opening.

Tuesday, opening day of the convention, was marked by the showing of the Paramount release, "Sentimental Tommy," to delegates attending the convention.

The convention was opened early Tuesday afternoon by William Dillon of Ithaca, vice-president. Bernard J. Haggarty, secretary to Mayor Hiram H. Edgerton, made an address of welcome and presented the key of the city. The following were placed on the resolutions committee: Chairman, Jules Michaels of Buffalo; Lou Buettner of Cohoes; Fred Warren of Messina; Fred Duffie of Utica; Dave Letson of Herkimer; William Calihan of Rochester; John Walker of Schenectady; Benjamin Knoble of New York City; Morris Needles of New York City; Gus Koenigswald of Brooklyn.

Social features of the convention include a tour of the city through the courtesy of the Rochester Automobile Club, a tour of the Eastman Kodak Company plant at the invitation of George Eastman and the movie ball in the Rochester State Armory, Thursday night, as the crowning feature of the convention.

In connection with the exhibitors' convention the F. I. L. M. clubs of the Eastern states was in convention with nearly one hundred persons, of whom fifty are film exchange managers, in attendance. The F. I. L. M. headquarters was established at the Hotel Seneca. There is one woman delegate, Miss E. Wheeler of Albany, manager of a film exchange there. Delegates were present from Buffalo, Albany, New York City, New Haven and Portland, Me. I. E. Chadwick of New York City was permanent chairman of the convention.

Important Conference on Shipping Case Situation

The executive board of the Transportation Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry held a conference on March 25th, with W. S. Topping, Assistant Chief Inspector of the Bureau of Explosives, and final specifications for shipping cases, which the bureau has proscribed, were analyzed and accepted.

The specifications have been made effective on and after September 1st, and will be issued to the trade through the medium of the press and by bulletin just as soon as proofs are received from the Government Printing Office.

Kane Calls Advertising "Prime Necessity"

Would Have Industry Revert to "Principles Responsible for Its Success"

IN a statement just issued from the headquarters of the Associated Exhibitors, New York, Arthur S. Kane, chairman of the board of directors of that organization, advises a revision on the part of the film industry "to some of the principles responsible for its quick rise to popularity and success" and declares that "one of the most important of those first principles' is advertising of proper character and sufficient volume. "One thing is certain," says Mr. Kane. "Advertising never has been a luxury, is not a luxury, and is a prime necessity in the motion-picture industry."

"Hardly a single important company in the field today will fail to admit that advertising started it on the way to success, maintained it when other corporations were falling by the wayside, and is the responsible factor in keeping it in its place today," Mr. Kane said.

"The essential thing to remember in this connection is that the first principle of advertising, the very foundation on which it rests, is good product. A commodity, whether it be a motion picture or a safety razor, must have the merit of being excellent of its kind and must be something that the public desires before it can justify advertising.

"The public, and in the case of the motion picture, this means the exhibitor and his public, of course, desire and demand motion pictures. The science of advertising in this connection is the implanting in them of the desire for a particular picture or the product of a particular company. In the keen competitive early days of this business, advertising was utilized heavily for that purpose and the companies with real good product and the ability to make the public desire it, succeeded.

"Producers and distributors have discussed with some seriousness in the past year the manner in which many good pictures suffered in distribution because inferior pictures filled the market and crowded out the playing days rightfully due the good picture. The answer is found partially in the fact that the producers have failed to carry the message of their good productions to the exhibitors in ample time and with sufficient truth to take that market, that adequate number of playing days, which rightfully belongs to the pictures of merit.

"It is true, and it has been realized by the advertising men of the A. M. P. A., that exaggeration and blatant claims have injured to an extent the confidence with which all effective advertising must be met. That injury, however, is not beyond repair. The trade paper is still the medium of communication between the distributor with wares to dispose of and i exhibitor with a theatre in which he m show pictures, and the note of sincer can, and should be, restored in moti picture advertising.

"That ideal of sincerity will be fou in all Associated Exhibitors advertisi and likewise, with confidence in our p duct, the volume necessary to drive ho the truth of our productions will be u lized.

"Associated has confidence in its abil to advertise its product without exagge tion and with all respect for conservat statement because it is not involved in t expense of making a picture and in t consequent necessity of disposing of it. will select its product from the best in pendently made films, and it therefore sures itself of the quality of its prod tions before it offers it to its franch members and to the purchasing exhibit of the country.

"General business conditions are blamed for servatism in advertising at this time, but insofar this applies to the motion picture business, there some strong arguments against its being considered an influence.

"In the first place the motion picture business not suffered to the extent of any other industry. the second place, it is recognized that the time slight depression is the psychological moment for vertising. When selling is an effort and not me the filling of orders in a heavy buying market all the influences for the creation of buying stren should be utilized. Certainly advertising is the str est influence for the creation of buying strength."

Successful Convention of Kansas Exhibitor

Anti-Deposit Bill and Church Movies Discussed; M. Van Praag Elected President

THE liveliest convention ever held by exhibitors in Kansas was that by the Kansas State Exhibitors' Association at the Hotel Lasson at Wichita, Kansas, Monday and Tuesday, March 28 and 29. The biggest topic discussed at the convention was the anti-deposit bill recently passed by the Kansas legislature and signed by the Governor, which became effective March 15. The showing of moving pictures in churches and schools received considerable discussion, and was censured by the exhibitors and considered unfair competition and a menace to their interests. Further, the convention went on record as unanimously opposed to the production of a picture depicting the life story of Clara Smith Hamon or any similar case. They voted that they would not show such pictures in their theaters.

The first meeting, which was a closed session, was called at 11 o'clock Monday morning. At this session a new set of by-laws was adopted and resolutions were made and adopted. It was decided that an executive committee of five members be elected from the floor, and that the president and secretary be on the committee as ex-officio members. The committee as chosen later in the day is comprised as follows: R. G. Liggett, J. I. Saunders, H. A. McClure, Stanley Chambers and S. A. Davidson.

At the executive session called at 2 o'clock that afternoon M. Van Praag gave a detailed report of the work done by the legislative committee in which he told of their success in putting through the Kansas legislature the anti-deposit bill and of their victory in defeating several drastic bills and measures, among which was the bill recommending the removal of the Kansas State Board of Review from Kansas City, Kas., to Topeka; the bill asking that no child under the age of 12 years be admitted to picture theatres unless in the company of a parent, and the bill asking for a stricter enforcement of censorship and a better "cleanup" of the movies.

The music tax came up for a brief discussion and it was stated that that issue had "died" from fear of action taken by the Association. Sunday opening was also taken up. And after deliberate discussion a motion was passed that a campaign be prepared by the Association to advocate Sunday opening and to educate public sentiment to favor Sunday shows.

Censorship was very briefly debat The new appointment to be made by t Governor came under consideration and was resolved that the Association requ him to make no changes on the pres board and that he reappoint all of its co ponents.

Officers were elected and installed. Van Praag was unanimously chosen pre dent of the organization. The other o cers are secretary, H. H. Woody, Lincol first vice president, R. G. Liggett, retiri president, of Kansas City; second vi president, Herman L. Gees, Mulberr third vice president, R. H. Holmes, E poria, and treasurer, Wm. Meyn, Kans City.

Eight delegates were chosen to rep sent each congressional district in Kans at the National Convention of the exhil tors at Minneapolis next June. They a H. K. Rogers, Marion; H. L. Gees, M berry; R. H. Holmes, Emporia; H. Ulrich, Manhattan; H. H. Woody, Li coln; Fred Savage, Hutchinson; Stanl Chambers, Wichita, and R. R. Bioche Kansas City.

Albany Censorship Hearing Proves Unusually Lively Session

Griffth, Brady and Rex Beach Assail Clayton Bill; Big Crowd on Hand

WITH the exception of the public demonstration against the recently passed transit bill, the biggest earing during the present session of the ew York state legislature was staged in lbany last Tuesday afternoon, before a oint legislative committee when scores oiced their protest against the Clayton ate censorship bill. David Wark Griffh and William A. Brady were the shing lights at the hearing. Long before the our set for the hearing the crowds had come such that it was decided to shift it rom the Senate finance rooms to the enate chamber itself. The hearing atacted a crowd that filled the Senate hamber, extending even into the galleries. epartmental heads, legislators and polital leaders, including Samuel S. Koenig New York City, were on hand to listen the arguments.

Members of the New York State Exbitors League had met at the Hotel Ten yck earlier in the day and formulated a an of action. At this meeting there ere present Harold Franklin of Buffalo, ohn Manheimer and William Brandt of rooklyn, Leo Bracher and Sydney S. ohen, of New York, together with Atrney John J. McInerney of Rochester, ho represented the association at the earing.

Neither Sydney Cohen, nor Rev. O. R. Miller, head of the New York Civic eague, spoke, although both were pres-nt. While the hearing was in progress, Ir. Cohen sat next to Attorney McIneey, who introduced the various speakers or the opposition and who also spoke at he conclusion of the opposition.

The hearing got under way at 2:30 'clock, the Senate having continued in ession up until that hour. One and onealf hours was given to each side. Mrs. Vaterman, occupying a seat on the main oor, near John Lord O'Brian, of Buffalo, ntroduced the speakers favoring the easure.

The first speaker of the day was Mary ray Peck of Geneva, representing the ree Lance Association of Women Vriters. The speaker declared that if ensorship was designed to raise the tandard of motion picture, it was but a elusion and that it was utterly impossile to establish a standard for ten million ersons. Mayor Palmer Canfield, Jr., of Kingston, followed, briefly outlining the nvestigation along censorship lines, hich had been made two or three years go by a representative committee named y the association, of which he is at the ead. The speaker said that this investiation had convinced the mayors that ney should openly oppose the Clayton ill. Mayor Canfield is now at the head of the New York State Conference of Mayors.

Senator Clayton Lusk, who is working in the closest harmony these days with Governor Miller, asked Mayor Canfield if he thought that certain pictures which were being shown these days were entirely satisfactory from a moral standpoint. To this Mayor Canfield replied that the National Board of Review and the producers were striving for higher standards and that they would continue.

"But that does not answer my question," said Senator Lusk.

"I can only say," retorted Mayor Canfield, "that I have come to the conclusion that the National Board has been more successful in its efforts to raise pictures to a higher moral tone than any particular board."

E. A. Moree, chairman of the legislative committee of the National Board of Review, first went over various sections of the bill, and then declared that the state should create a "Board of Public Morals" to supervise all forms of public amusements. The speaker went on to tell of a certain show which is one of the attractions in New York this winter, and said that it is doing far more harm than any picture yet shown.

"Why don't you be honest, and include such in your bill?" inquired Mr. Moree.

The next speakers were John M. O'Hanlon, representing the State Federation of Labor, and Hugh Frayne who came to the hearing as the personal representative of Samuel Gompers.

"I am opposing this bill," said Mr. Frayne, "because I do not think that censorship is necessary. It is fraught with much danger. It is an open door for a legislative method that will give police power over an industry. Two or three persons, constituting a board of censors could destroy this wonderful industry in their faulty judgment of what is right or what is wrong. The great censorship board in the person of the American public must solve the problem and solve it right.

"The American public," said Mr. Frayne, "is becoming impatient with the attempts which are being made to regulate practically everything they do. The passage of this bill will be harmful to a great army of wage earners. We do not believe that it is possible to pass legislation that will club people into being good. It is possible, however, to educate them."

Rev. L. H. Caswell, pastor of the Crawford Memorial Church in Brooklyn, spoke in opposition to the bill and said that he did not agree with the proposed method of correcting bad pictures.

"We believe," said Rev. Mr. Caswell, "that the appointment of a commission of censorship is but an inroad upon the rights of American citizenship."

Rex Beach was announced by Attorney McInerney:

"We have no hesitancy as authors," declared Mr. Beach, "in going on record as being solidly opposed to state censorship as it is proposed in this bill. It is iniquitous and unjust. It has failed and always will. We do not attempt to deny that bad pictures have been made. But bad books have been written, bad pictures have been painted and bad plays acted. I have never discovered any serious signs of disintegration of the moral fibre of the American people through this fact. It does not follow that because some pictures are unhealthy that the whole brood must be destroyed.

"We are not opposed to reform in motion pictures. But we are opposed to the form of reform proposed by this measure. Censorship is the product of the narrow-minded bigot, whose ready armor is oppression. There are no three persons who can agree on what is moral and what is not. I do not believe than any $7,500 intellect is capable of censoring the morals of ten million people."

David W. Griffith was next introduced.

"We believe that the motion picture business is decent," said Mr. Griffith. "We do not say that there have not been pictures which should never have been produced. There may have been. But there have been books that should not have been written, and thoughts and words said, that should not have been, but why tear down the very fabric of free speech.

"Censorship is the weapon of autocracy. If you control the sources of information, the people do not know what is going on. I think as I think. Such is the law. Rivers of blood have flowed because the great masses did not think as one or two men dictated. Such is censorship. They say that you must think as I think, or you are wrong.

"Censorship of motion pictures was first established in Germany, next in Russia. I do not observe that censorship has led them to any great heights of civic reform. I am surprised to see that religious organizations are working for censorship. Do they not know that the Christian religion was censored? Do they not know what they suffered through opposition from denominations?"

Mr. Griffith said, in continuing, that with censorship in existence, it would be impossible to put on the story of "David Copperfield," because it is a sex play, and "Hamlet,' owing to the fact that there are five murders in it. Mr. Griffith said in conclusion that from his experience, no possible good could come from censorship.

The opposition, having claimed the time allotted through its several speakers, stated that although there were several others present, including such men as Owen Davis of the Dramatist Guild of America; J. P. McMahon, secretary of the Catholic Laymen's association; John Emerson, president of the Equity association; Walter Arndt of the Citizens Union; John Doyle of the American Federation of Labor at Buffalo, and Lee F. Hammer, director of the recreation

Illinois Exhibitors Urged to Attend Convention

PRESIDENT JOSEPH HOPP and Secretary W. D. Burford, of the Illinois Exhibitors' Alliance, are strongly urging every exhibitor in Illinois to attend the convention to be held at the Hotel Sherman, Chicago, on April 11 and 12.

In a call for the convention which has just been sent out, they say: "The 'Blue Law' fanatics are prepared to descend on the State Legislature at Springfield with bills modeled after those recently introduced in Washington, D. C., such as Sunday closing - censorship - exclusion of children under sixteen years of age, which, if they become laws, will work inconceivable injury to our business and will abridge the inalienable liberty of the citzens of Illinois.

"These people are organized. To combat them, we must present a united front.

In addition to the legislative questions which will come before the convention, an election will be held of delegates and alternates to the National Convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America at Minneapolis, and plans to abolish advance film deposits will be discussed.

Mr. Feist will take up his new duties at once, and will make a trip throughout the United States, representing Mr. Schenck. He will visit with the Exhibitors and promote new ideas of cooperation.

Citizens Appeal Decision of Kansas City Censor

The Kansas City Motion Picture Censor Board of Appeals is functioning again for what E. L. Miller, a member of the board, termed "about the first time in six months." Decisions of Harry Goldman, city censor, are supposed to be taken to the board for reconsideration.

The cause for action now is the movie serial, "Velvet Fingers," distributed by the Pathe Exchange, Inc. The picture was classed as unfit last week by twenty-two citizens who signed a protest petition and urged that the board of appeals view the picture, which, it was alleged, portrays the degenerate lives of criminals.

Mr. Goldman passed the film and several of the episodes have been shown in Kansas City. Following the protest, the board viewed the additional episodes. It is expected to render its decision soon.

What T. O. C. C. Means

IN a statement issued from the headquarters of the New York Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce, the activities of the past year are surveyed, and the beneficial results secured for theatre-owners by the organized effort of the Chamber of Commerce are pointed out. The statement refers to the "round table conference," held a year ago at the Hotel Astor, New York, which originated the present Board of Trade. At this conference were William Brandt, Hy Gainsboro, Samuel G. Bock and Chas. Goldreyer. The first informal meeting of the proposed association was held at the Hotel Astor on February 2, 1920, at which plans were laid for the definite establishment of the T. O. C. C. From an original group of a dozen theatre-owners, declares the statement, the organization has grown steadily until today its roster contains 120 well known theatre-owners, controlling in the aggregate some 500 motion picture theatres in and around Greater New York.

Among the first problems tackled by the T. O. C. C. was that involving the use of the name of Marcus Loew on advertising put out by the Metro Pictures Corporation. The T. O. C. C. felt that independent theatres could not well afford to advertise the name of "Loew" upon their screens in connection with Metro productions. The matter was called to Mr. Loew's attention, and he with great fairness summarily removed his name from all Metro advertising.

The next question acted on was that of insurance. Theatre owners had been paying a rate of insurance which was based upon conditions antedating the modern type of theatre. The growth of facilities in theatres had materially reduced accident and fire hazards. The T. O. C. C. engaged the services of a reputable brokerage concern to represent their case with the result that the insurance interests reduced the rate to almost one-half of its former amount.

Disagreements over contracts calling for certain releases arose between Famous Players-Lasky and some exhibitors. T. O. C. C. engaged the law firm of Wise and Seligsberg, to represent their interests with the result that the disputed points were satisfactorily settled without further recourse to legal measures. Similar adjustments were made, through the services of the T. O. C. C., with Goldwyn.

The deposit problem came to a head when one concern demanded payment in full at the time of the closing of the contract for a picture. A resolution adopted by T. O. C. C. recommended its members to refrain from doing business with film concerns demanding full payment in advance. Arrangements were finally affected by which the distributing concerns agreed to waive all deposits upon the guarantee of the T. O. C. C. that the contracts of its members would not be violated. A trust fund of $5,000 was created by the organization which was deposited at a local bank to be applied in the event of the violation of a contract by a member.

Another complaint lodged with the T. O. C. C. concerned increased rentals said to have been demanded by First National on Charles Ray contracts. First National, says the T. O. C. C. statement, cancelled existing contracts with the request for rentals above those provided for in the original agreements. Following objections to the cancellations by exhibitors, negotiations with First National were conducted by T. O. C. C. Finally, First National, according to the statement, withdrew its cancellation of contracts with members of the T. O. C. C. and these members received and played their pictures at the original rental.

New Officers Elected by Chamber of Commerce

The Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce held its annual meeting and election for officers last Tuesday at the Hotel Astor, New York City. The largest assemblage of its members that has ever gathered, were present to participate in elections.

Finance Committee — Samuel Sonin, Rudolph Saunders, E. H. Behrend.

The president, in his report, stated the Theatre Owners' Chambers of Commerce now has a membership of 124 exhibitors who control 531 theatres, making this the most important local exhibitors body in the country.

Many matters of interest were discussed and the Convention Committee reported that two cars had been exclusively engaged for the delegates, 70 members, from the Chamber of Commerce, who would attend the State Convention at Rochester.

The installation of newly elected members will take place at the banquet to be given on Tuesday, April 19.

Boosting Matinees

How Exhibitors of Portland, Oregon, Handle Their Most Difficult Problem

LIGHT attendance invariably suggests to the exhibitor in Portland, Ore., the matinees at the motion picture theatres. Evenings there are pretty much the same with Saturdays and Sundays having a slight advantage over the other five nights of the week, but it is the matinee business that keeps every theatre manager there on edge all the time. Getting patrons into the theatres while it is daylight outside is the problem that is ever confronting them.

Portland has six first run houses. Each of the six does a good afternoon business but the manager of each of them has his own particular method to which he can trace the business which is done at the matinees. The methods range from location, through lobby displays and newspaper advertising to special service given by the theatre to afternoon patrons which is not accorded to those attending in the evening.

Location on a busy business street is the main essential for a good afternoon business according to Frank Lacey, manager of the Majestic Theatre.

Good pictures says Gus A. Metzger, manager of the Rivoli.

Restful attitude in the theatre, and extra courtesy is the theory and practice of Ralph H. Winsor, manager of the Star Theatre, the holder of the Portland franchise in Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

Newspaper advertising backed up by honest performance is the policy of the Columbia Theatre under the management of A. C. Raleigh.

"Shopping is done chiefly in the afternoon," said Mr. Lacey in supporting his theory of location, "and it is shopping that brings out the people that are available for the afternoon business of a theatre. The number who actually attend. In other words, the proximity of a theatre to the place where they naturally go in the afternoon—the shopping district—is the one thing that will assure a regular heavy afternoon attendance. Much of the support the Majestic gets in the afternoon comes from people who haven't read the newspapers advertising—people who have a couple of hours to spare between appointments, women who finish their shopping early, transients who are in the city for but a few hours and many others who are patrons incidental to the location of the theatre."

Mr. Teufel agrees with Mr. Lacey that matinee business is dependent to a great extent upon the casual attendant, the patron who is passing by, but insists that an attractive lobby display is essential in getting them into the theatre. He took charge of the People's Theatre about six months ago and paid the greatest attention to matinee business and tried special stunts including extra musical programs, souvenirs for children, and vaudeville acts, but finally discarded them all on the theory that patrons go to a motion picture theatre for motion picture entertainment.

"A lobby display will attract them into the theatre but to keep them coming you've got to know how to put on a picture," says Mr. Teufel. "The matter of presentation is especially noticeable to women who seem to be vastly more sensitive to the artistic effective handling of a photoplay than men. As women make up the majority of available afternoon patrons, presentation is therefore obviously an important factor in a steady matinee patronage.

"Lobby displays are important for patrons get their first impression of the picture from the display outside. They form their idea of what they are to see from these first impressions and therefore a lobby display, out of tone with the picture, makes the show itself a disappointment. Something novel is the thing I strive for, but when this doesn't develop I dress the lobby in a manner to make it most attractive to women and the afternoon business looks after itself."

"There is just one answer to the question of matinee business and that is good pictures," says Mr. Metzger. "Good pictures will draw any time—morning, afternoon or evening. If you have a star like Norma Talmadge you will do good business all day. There are a great number of women who prefer afternoon shows but so many theatres have made their afternoon shows secondary to evening performances that they have gotten out of the habit of coming. Give everything in the afternoon that you do in the evening and give the bookings up to a top standard and the question of matinee business will cease to exist for you."

Special service for women is the secret of the afternoon business done by the Liberty theatre, according to Mr. Noble.

"Our aim is to provide a restful atmosphere for the theatre in the afternoon," said Mr. Noble. "We have a young woman just inside the doors whose only duty is to smile cheerfully and direct patrons to the head usher. The head usher in turn directs them to the sections where the best seats are to be obtained and the ushers themselves take pains to hurry patrons into their seats. Many of the patrons are tired shoppers. Others have babies with them and we have special service for each. The woman's retiring room has several Chinese maids in attendance. They have individual powder puffs, hair pins of all sizes, and everything else that can go to make a woman comfortable. The women's rest room is equipped with a number of rockers and plenty of easy chairs to provide opportunity for mothers to pacify restless infants."

Mr. Winsor holds similar ideas and the Star theatre makes a specialty of relieving patrons of all parcels as they come in at the door and checking them for them until after the performance.

"If mother, sister or daughter can go downtown and load up with bundles," said Mr. Winsor, "and then go to a theatre knowing that a courteous usher will relieve her of her burdens and place them carefully in a check room and escort her to a comfortable chair where she can relax and enjoy a good picture and good music, she will jump at the chance.

"The soft lighted quietude and harmonious atmosphere of a well ordered motion picture theatre is the antithesis of the hustle and bustle and crush of the busy department store."

"The Columbia theatre is not in the shopping district but about a block away from one of the main thoroughfares," said Manager Raleigh. "Therefore, it is necessary to pull people that far from their more or less intended routes to attend matinees. No attempt is made at the Columbia, at any time, to present large or elaborate lobby displays, the expense for this feature being a constant quantity. The newspapers, window cards and billboards are used exclusively. My matinee business, which is consistently good and incidentally measures up with the night business in as far as the numbers of tickets sold, is the result of a combination of 'happenstances.'

"My first efforts were directed to the restful character of the theatre, exactly the same program as at night, the absence of crowding, the invariable courtesy of each and every attendant, every rest-room is carefully looked after and, in summer, the excellent cooling system. We always have time to help an elderly lady up a stair or with her wrap or the thousand and one little courtesies which cause patrons to remark 'I certainly like the Columbia!' Of course, the picture has an effect as has the music but during matinees, every effort is made to have everything restful—even the music is differently presented.

"The tired shopper is invited to forget the agony of aching feet and headache; her bundles are checked and she is made to feel that she is a guest in a home rather than a paid patron at a theatre.

"Then, when the Columbia started on its policy of presenting the better features, the price was raised in the evening to double matinee prices. Matinee business, of course, increased, because a woman and a bargain price are affinities, until now, the house is playing capacity both afternoon and evening approximately 85% of the time. Very few concerts or other special attractions are presented—it is just picture, with other accompaniments as nearly perfect as our abilities will permit.

"The matinee business was secured at first solely through the newspaper ads. Attention was called frequently to the many little things that would appeal—just a few lines tucked away in the corner of an ad. Then, when they came, we worked overtime to make them want to come again and—they did come again and again.

"Exclusive of the picture and music, I would divide the results as follows: The theatre itself—40 per cent; courtesy (the kind with a smile) and personal attention—40 per cent, and publicity—20 per cent."

Mrs. Waterman opened in support of the bill. Among other things she said that she was protesting in the name of American womanhood to pictures which were being shown these days as characteristic of the American woman.

Ellen O'Grady, until recently a deputy Police Commissioner of New York City, spoke for several minutes during which time she told her audience of what she termed "perfectly awful pictures" which she had witnessed in New York City. Later on, William A. Brady turned to Mrs. O'Grady and asked her why she didn't have the owner of the theatre in which she had seen such "terrible" pictures, arrested.

The last speaker was John Lord O'Brian. He said that the people have been waiting for four years for the producers to straighten things out and still there had been no improvement.

William A. Brady was introduced as one of the king-pins of the opposition at six o'clock. At the outset of his talk, Mr. Brady said that he represented 90 per cent. of the motion picture producing companies of the United States. He called attention to the wonderful work that had been done by the industry in connection with the Hoover drive for the relief of the starving children of Europe.

Mr. Brady put up a proposition to the committee, which he said would work out satisfactorily all the way round, and would do away with the necessity of the state passing a censorship measure. This plan was to meet with Mrs. Waterman, Governor Miller, Senator Lusk, Canon Chase and others who are endeavoring to pass the Clayton bill, and bring with him ten or twelve executives who control and represent the bulk of the motion picture industry. These men, he said, would be perfectly willing to enter into an agreement with the Governor and the others to the end that they would not play their products in any theatre in the United States, where disreputable pictures are being shown, and furthermore that the association would do all within its power to prosecute offenders of this sort.

Republican senators, after an hour's conference on Wednesday night of this week, at Albany, decided to support the Lusk-Clayton motion-picture censorship measure now before the New York legislature. A hearing on this bill was conducted on Tuesday. Wednesday's procedure really makes the proposed bill a party measure. With Governor Nathan L. Miller openingly advocating a censorship bill, the chances appear favorable for the passage of the bill.

Certain amendments will be immediately made to the bill with a view to enhancing its passage. In the original bill it was proposed to charge ten dollars for passing on each 1,000 feet or fraction thereof of original film. An amendment will reduce this charge to three dollars and will fix the fee for each additional copy at two dollars instead of nine dollars, as was provided in the original measure.

Pictures which have been publicly exhibited in New York State prior to August 1, 1921, will be subject to a tax of two dollars for each 1,000 feet or less, instead of three dollars as was first supposed. Educational, scientific and religious pictures ought to be exempt from tax. Employers will be permitted to make and to exhibit films intended for the welfare of their employees.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 220 SO. STATE ST.

The Wabash Film Exchange now is installed in its new quarters at 804 S. Wabash and is putting its first releases on the market, which include a two reel Western Star Drama, "The Outlaw's Reformation," starring Fritzi Ridgeway and a two reel Ben Turpin comedy, "Special Delivery," one of the series of twenty which the exchange purchased from Warner Brothers. A new list of five reel features to be distributed by this exchange will be announced shortly.

Milton Simon and Arthur H. Toffler, of Selected Films, Inc., announce that they have just obtained the rights to distribute the Jane and Catherine Lee Comedies, two reelers, in this territory. According to Mr. Simon, Balaban & Katz and Lubliner & Trinz theatres already have booked these comedies.

Nate Woody, of Pinnacle productions, is back in Chicago after a trip to the west coast studios of his company and reports excellent progress in production work there. Arrangements have been completed for some splendid fiction stories which will be picturized starring Neal Hart. According to Mr. Woody, this popular star is already working on his fifth five-reel feature.

Manager Harthill, of Reelcraft, has completed plans for the removal of that company's offices from 207 S. Wabash to 810 S. Wabash, the date for the change being April 23rd. Mr. Harthill has just returned from a trip to Kansas City where he arranged for new quarters for Reelcraft's Kansas City office, it having been made necessary by the growing business to procure larger quarters. He is planning for the exploitation and marketing of the new series of two reelers and one reelers which are now being produced in New York and which Mr. Harthill believes will be the best series of comedies yet offered by Reelcraft.

George Weinberg now is covering the Illinois territory for the Empire Film Company, having resigned from Masterpiece to accept his present position. Mr. Weinberg is widely known to the trade, having been connected with various exchanges as a salesman for several years.

Helen Gardner will make personal appearances in connection with the showing of her picture, "The Devil's Angel," in Chicago and surrounding territory. Miss Gardner has arranged to fill an eight weeks' engagement, four of which will be passed in Chicago and four in the district outside of this city.

Merit Film Exchange will move from its present quarters in the Film Exchange Building to 810 S. Wabash about April 23rd, according to plans completed by Manager Pador. Masterpiece also will move to 810 S. Wabash at the same time.

Harry Spanuth, of Commonwealth Picture Corporation, visited Cleveland and Buffalo last week and then went on to New York in the interests of his concern.

Nathan, Harry and Max Ascher and Harry Rice were the representatives of Ascher Brothers at the opening of their splendid Capitol theatre in Cincinnati on the night of April 2nd. They report huge crows attended the premier performance and that the finished theatre has made good their predictions that Ascher's Cincinnati house would be one of the finest in the United States.

The Chicago Evening Journal has opened fire on a beauty contest by which some Chicago girl will be selected for a job with Christie Comedies. The Chicago Motion Picture Machine Operators Union has a publicity tie-up with the contest for the operator's ball, early in May. The operators committee wired Watterson R. Rothacker, then on the coast, asking him to find a producing company which would give a Chicago contest winner a chance in the movies and through him, Al E. Christie and Charles Christie readily consented to give one more Chicago girl an opportunity to shine in the movie constellation.

W. H. Rudolph of New York was in Chicago this week in connection with the opening of "Without Limit," the super feature being released through Metro, which has been booked into the entire chain of Ascher Brothers' theatres. Mr. Rudolph is enthusiastic over the success of this picture at the Capitol in New York and other key cities where it has been shown and predicts heavy business in Chicago.

The Bushmint Company, distributors of Synchronized Scenario Music Company's scores in the Chicago territory, has taken offices in the new Guenther Building at Tenth and Wabash avenue and expects to be established in its new and larger quarters about the end of the month.

Julius A. Alcock, recently connected with the Stoll Film Corporation's Chicago branch, has joined Superior Screen Service sales staff and will cover the north side for the latter concern. Mr. Alcock is one of the most widely known salesmen in Chicago and has been connected with the industry for many years in various capacities.

Henry Ginsberg, general salesmanager of Educational, is scheduled to arrive in Chicago shortly on his tour of the principal exchange centers. While in the Windy City he will confer with Chicago Manager I. Maynard Schwartz on the sales and exploitation plans of his orgainzation.

A. Teitel, expert in cleaning and renovating of films, and who lists among his patrons many of the largest film companies in the country, has removed his headquarters from 112 N. La Salle street, where he was located for several years, to the third floor at 804 S. Wabash avenue. Mr. Teitel has made this move in order to secure more space for his growing business and at the same time be nearer to many of his customers.

Manager Tarbell of Vitagraph, has returned from a trip over the Indiana territory where he sees signs of an early improvement in business.

Fred Aiken, of Superior Screen Service, is taking an optimistic view of the business situation, which is shared by many other exchange managers and states that exhibitors, many of whom were over sold, are getting back to normal and that a marked pick up in business already is apparent.

F. H. Fisher, of La Salle, owner of a string of theatres in Illinois, has added the Majestic Theatre, Madison, Wisconsin, to his list of houses and opened last week.

Eddy Grossman has resigned from the sales department of Paramount to become assistant to General Manager Al Lichman, of Associated Producers, and already left for New York to assume his new duties.

Dan Roche, publicity man for Famous Players-Lasky, spent last week in Milwaukee putting over "The Witching Hour" at the Butterfly Theatre, where it made a house record. One of the publicity stunts used by Mr. Roche was to put witching hour signs on all street clocks in Milwaukee.

Leo Landau, manager of the Alhambra, Milwaukee, will have charge of the theatre into which the Slitz Palm Garden is to be converted, according to reports reaching Chicago from Wisconsin City.

Publicity Director Hill, of Universal, has returned from Peoria where he aided in the exploitation and advertising of "Outside The Law," which played at the Apollo.

Jimmy Gillick will hereafter be known as the Pathe salesman de luxe, as he is now touring the country with his newly-made bride in a private car. The trip will include New Orleans, Yellowstone Park and other points of interest. Jimmy's father is general manager of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad, and loaned his son his own car for the extended honeymoon.

Manager Aschman of Pathe, and his sales force put their shoulders to the wheel in earnest during Brunet month and the result, according to Manager Aschman, was an eighty per cent increase in new business over the average month's business.

The new Madison weekly magazine, of which Ben. Serkowich, live wire publicity man for Dee Robinson in Peoria, is editor and publisher, is one of the snappiest and best turned out house organs published in the central west and is full of information and stories which the fans enjoy reading. It contains the programs of the new Madison for a week ahead and is helping Dee Robinson keep his splendid new house full to the last row every night.

"The Devil," George Arliss feature released through Pathe, is doing exceptional business at Barbee's and following its two week's engagement at this loop theatre, will be played for a week at the Bijou Dream and Boston, also in the loop.

Manager Lesserman, of Universal, predicts that "Reputation," the forthcoming release with Priscilla Dean in the leading role, will be the greatest success of any picture produced to date featuring this popular star.

A. J. Abrams, of Synchronized Scenario Music Company, will hereafter be located in New York where he has opened offices for his company at 209 West 48th street. Salesmanager Mintz of Synchronized is away on a trip closing up a few remaining territories for his company.

Music and the Picture

Enter the Music Week

By Charles D. Isaacson

I WANT to tell you something about the Music Week idea. Particularly I want to call it to the attention of all those exhibitors in New York City and land outlying the metropolitan district.

Music Week is April 17th to 24th, inclusive, and, while it only affects the particular district I mention, nevertheless, what is being done will be of interest and importance to all the field. Look at your calendar and see what you can do to tie up to the movement.

This is the second annual Music Week which New York City has attempted. Last year's was most successful, and about fifty other cities took it up and held their own special events. A volume about the idea was written by C. M. Tremaine, whose Bureau for the Advancement of Music was responsible for the plan. This book is available.

What is Music Week?

The intention of the committee is to bring good music dramatically and forcefully to the attention of all the people all the time during the seven days. To that end a widespread propaganda has been carried on involving clergy, the educators, the business people, the civic authorities, the institutions, the musical agencies, the newspapers, etc.

Whatever you can do for music and to aid in the effort to bring good music to all your people during that week is one thing.

But there is a very different reason for finding a genuine interest in the Music Week.

And that reason is plain: The combination of all the activities in focussing the minds of the public upon music can be made to work for your house.

Your house can be made to work for music, but music can be made to work for your house.

Co-operation! There's the big word in this Music Week idea. Every force which is interested in the art and every force which is interested in using the art for its own particular end; are pulling one big train, and you are on that train if your house is utilizing music as part of the entertainment for your patrons.

Indeed, I make a very important assertion. Everything which happens of a musical nature contributes to your profit, if your house stands for music.

The Music Week Committee is headed by important individuals. The honorary members are Otto H. Kahn, Charles M. Schwab and George Eastman, and on the committee proper are the following: Berthold Neuer, C. M. Tremaine, R. B. Aldcroftt, Philip Berolzheimer, Artur Bodanzky, W. C. Bradford, Dr. William C. Carl, Hollis E. Davenny, Charles H. Ditson, Julian Edwards, Thomas A. Edison, William L. Ettinger, John C. Freund, Father Finn, George H. Cartlan, Rubin Goldmark, Charles H. Green, S. Hurok, Herman Irion, Charles D. Isaacson, J. F. B. Lanier, Leonard Liebling, Richard W. Lawrence, Robert Lawrence, Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst, Anning S. Prall, Mrs. Arthur M. Reiss, Hugo Riesenfeld, S. L. Rothapfel, Rev. Dr. Joseph Silverman, Sigmund Spaeth, Frederick T. Steinway, Joseph Stransky, H. B. Tremaine, Rodman Wanamaker, Edward Ziegler.

A committee of musicians brings together the foremost artists.

The motion picture industry is represented by Samuel Rothafel and Hugo Riesenfeld, and if I mention it, by myself. Then, too, the secretary of the committee and the real figure behind the whole gigantic activity, Mr. C. M. Tremaine is intensely interested in motion pctures, and is one of the committee of five of the Association of Motion Picture Interests.

The Music Week Committee, under the special direction of Miss Lowden, sister of Governor Lowden, who was one of the leading candidates for the Presidency of the United States, has arranged some special plans for motion picture theatres. An official design which is being used on the posters, window cards and all advertising matter is also made for a cover for the theatre programs. I understand that these are all printed and can be had for less than cost. I believe that the Capitol, Rivoli, Rialto are scheduled to use them, along with many other theatres.

There have been made some excellent slides which are available for your use. (You may communicate direct with Miss Lowden, Suite 509, 105 West 40th St., New York City, for information on these specific matters.)

Then there are some special suggestions for musical activities.

On the afternoon of Sunday, April 17th, a great chorus will join along with the churches in their simultaneous playing of the chimes. You could at the same hour (three o'clock) have your organist play the chimes and announce it in your program or on the screen.

On a certain afternoon the Metropolitan Opera House will hold a special matinee—you could play a selection from that opera and announce on the screen why.

On Saturday, April 16th, the New York Globe will issue a massive music supplement in honor of the week and will carry the news of every think that is going to be done. You have the privilege of that space for your own special announcements. Get your plans down in black and white and sent it to the Music Supplement Editor, New York Globe, 73 Dey Street, New York City. I know that he will use it. The reason I know especially well is because I am that editor.

The Evening Mail will, I believe, also issue a supplement and I presume will be equally happy to co-operate with you. Possibly some of the other papers are planning to do big things—but so far have been quiet about it. Although any one who reads any paper has seen many articles, many items, encouraging reports of the publicity which is being given to the activity.

In C. M. Tremaine's book, the following facts concerning the First Music Week are significant because the Second Music Week will more than double everything here recorded:

More than 1,700 different organizations took an active part.

The public schools reached nearly 1,000,000 children, the churches between 300,000 and 400,000 adults.

Publicity of nearly 10,000 inches was given the event.

Civic, state and all other authorities aided.

Now what are we all going to do to use th Second Music Week to push forward the mu sical activities of the picture theatres.

The exhibitors within the affected district can take quick and important advantage o everything that is being done. Make the week a gala one. Plaster the musical idea all over th theatre and your publicity. Make the followin line important:

EVERY WEEK IS MUSIC WEEK
IN THE —— THEATRE,
But During
Music Week We Have
Super Music Week!

Those outside the metropolitan district cannot get any of the effect being created. But please remember that other cities are planning to make their own music week. If you want to be kept in touch with the plans of your city the moment that the first suggestion gets under way—ask Mr. Tremaine to keep you informed. He tells me that he will be happy to keep you in touch with all new musical ideas of which his bureau is cognizant. His address is 105 West 40th St., New York City.

But here's the biggest idea of all:

Why not start a music week in your city yourself. You be responsible for it. You get together the committee of all the important city and state and local authorities. You be the chairman, the sponsor, the big leader. You make the date, you lead the way.

The newspapers of your city will take it up. You will get all the publicity; so will your house, incidentally. And you will stand as the prime music mover of your community.

Certainy the time is ripe. And with the Bureau and Mr. Tremaine and the leading authorities, and your humble servant, the writer of these words, behind you to prompt, advise and aid you, there can be no failure.

A Beginning of Musical Interpretation

None of the various interests represented at the recent picture-music conference in New York has shown a greater interest in the development of better music for the films than the Boston Music Company, which has not only published a great deal of music peculiarly fitted for picture interpretation but has also brought out what is really the pioneer text book for moving picture musicians "Musical Accompaniment of Moving Pictures."

This book, written by Edith Lang and George West, is a practical hand book for picture players and while it makes highly interesting general reading, it best serves its purpose as a reference work for those engaged in playing for the movies. Miss Lang is organist at the Exeter theatre in Boston and the book, an exposition of the principles underlying the musical interpretation of moving pictures, is as authoritative, as only actual experience can make it.

EXHIBITORS' REPORTS ON NEW RELEASES

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATERS

FIRST NATIONAL

Nineteen and Phyllis—
Packed house every night. Pleasing picture. (East.)

Very poor for all week. Fair picture. (East.)

Passion—
Wonderful picture but it brought only fair patronage. (Middle West.)

Great picture, and it brought great business. (West.)

Old Swimmin' Hole—
Fine picture which drew good business. (West.)

The Great Adventure—

My Lady's Latchkey—
An average picture but poor business. (Middle West.)

Dinty—
Great picture. Large box office receipts. Certainly pleased my patrons. (East.)

The Woman in His House—
An excellent picture from every angle, and business was splendid. Went over big. Sincere, purposeful, and supremely dramatic. (East.)

Man—Woman—Marriage—
A regular woman's picture—result, big houses and box office returns that tripled as the engagement continued. Held over for second week. (Middle West.)

Trust Your Wife—
Katherine MacDonald heads the list of popular feminine stars here. All her pictures go over big. This one much better than predecessors, and business correspondingly bigger. (Middle West.)

FAMOUS PLAYERS

O'Malley of the Mounted—
Satisfactory box office returns, but not up to usual Hart receipts. (East.)

A good picture, but a weak drawing card. Only a fair house for the week. (Middle West.)

Business was good with this one. A good picture that pleased the usual Hart crowds. (East.)

The Price of Possession—
One of the poorest things Ethel Clayton has ever done. (East.)

A fair picture and fair puller. (East.)

The Faith Healer—
The picture seemed to be only fair and it had little appeal. Business was not very good. (East.)

Interest and crowds disappointing. Advertised as a second "Miracle Man," but public fed up on this type. (Middle West.)

Brewster's Millions—
Best box office returns in three months. Thoroughly pleased and people talked about it which brought increasing throngs. (Middle West.)

Tickles 'em stiff—doing big. (West.)

The Easy Road—

Nothing extraordinary in this picture, but business was fair. (West.)

Forbidden Fruit—
The name DeMille is a large drawing card and this certainly is a fine picture. Result—extra large business. (West.)

Great picture—drew splendidly. (East.)

Chickens—
Too weak even for the chickens. Wouldn't even stand on a double program as a comedy. (West.)

About the usual Douglas MacLean feature; good farce, but not up to "23½ Hours' Leave." (Middle West.)

The Gilded Lily—
Attracted capacity audiences for a seven-day run. (East.)

This picture attracted big audiences and house was packed every performance. (West.)

Beau Revel—
Clever story with many new angles which makes a very high class and interesting photoplay. Drew splendidly and we played to big business for the week. (Middle West.)

The Inside of the Cup—
A splendid feature which pleased both reviewers and audiences. Played to excellent business. (Middle West.)

The Charm School—
Delightful from start to end. Reid one of the biggest favorites of screen out here. Big business uninterrupted all week. (Middle West.)

What Every Women Knows—
High class picture that appeals to the discriminating. Well liked by those who saw it, but didn't have a universal pull with the population at large. (Middle West.)

The Bait—
No good. Nothing to it. People didn't like it. (Middle West.)

The Passionate Pilgrim—
Worst business yet. Liked by the few that saw it. (West.)

The Love Special—
A very good picture, drawing good business. (East.)

The Kentuckians—
A fair picture, but it didn't draw at all. Business was bad all week, though this house usually does well regardless of the picture it runs. (East.)

The Witching Hour—
Elliott Dexter's best yet. The title is slightly lacking as a creator of public interest, but the picture itself is a business getter. A good house throughout the week. (Middle West.)

Silk Hosiery—
Rotten picture. Attendance fair. Title a misnomer. Severely and adversely criticized. (East.)

The Ghost in the Garret—
Attendance good. Fair picture. (East.)

Frontier of the Stars—
Thomas Meighan in one of the most absurd plots seen here in a long time. Didn't go with us. (Middle West.)

UNIVERSAL

Outside the Law—
Tremendous business all week. Will hold over for another week. (West.)

Went over big. Audiences seemed well pleased with the entertainment. (West.)

Standing up well on second week. Very good production. (West.)

All Dolled Up—
A nice little picture, with no special attraction. Gladys Walton scores again, as a pert little "flapper," and is gaining quite a following. (East.)

Dandy little picture. Had more than the usual business with it. (West.)

Good business attended this feature. Picture pleasingly done. (West.)

The Nut—
Find this an average picture with the usual business. (Middle West.)

The Love Light—
An average picture and drew only fair business. (West.)

REALART

The Furnace—
A lavish production with a weak plot. Fair drawing card. The two titles given to the picture do not seem to help it any in getting across. One would be plenty. (Middle West.)

All Soul's Eve—
Very good picture. Receipts poor. (East.)

Ducks and Drakes—
Best Bebe Daniels has to her credit up to date. Business was better than it has been for several weeks. (Middle West.)

The Snob—
A good picture and business was fine during the showing of it. (West.)

SELZNICK

The Greatest Love—
A popular theme so naturally acted as to have a tremendous appeal. The cast makes this picture great which could otherwise have been tawdry and trite. Opened the new theatre. (Middle West.)

The Inner Voice—
A picture to think about. Opened to better than average, and continued to hold its own throughout the engagement. (Middle West.)

The Sin That Was His—
Fairly pleasing and drew fairly good business. (West.)

This ad for "The Kid" and "While the Devil Laughs," ten inches by four columns, is by the Terminal theatre, Newark, N. J.

STATE RIGHT

Kazan—
A rather confused mixture of melodrama and wild animal scenes. An effort is made to hook up the animal plot with the main plot, but unsuccessfully. The scenic effects are good, and the picture draws because of its novelty. (West.)

The Mask—
Good advertising campaign brought results on this. (Middle West.)

The Hidden Light—
Picture with high ideals but only of average amusement value. Did only fair business for week. (Middle West.)

GOLDWYN

Roads of Destiny—
Artistically and dramatically, very fine, but did not get the business. Miss Frederick's admirers did not like her in this. Sorry, for thought it was great, myself. (East.)

A Tale of Two Worlds—
Fair picture with which I had average business. (West.)

PATHE

The Devil to Pay—
Crackerjack mystery story, with some shivers and creepy business and plenty of thrills. Business excellent. (East.)

Now or Never—
An up-to-the-minute picture that carries a "punch" and fully satisfies the expectation of the public. A sure-fire hit. Showed in conjunction with "Blind Wives."

METRO

Body and Soul—
Showed in conjunction with Harold Lloyd in "Now or Never" and drew a good house all week. The latter picture carried the box office "punch," however. (Middle West.)

Someone in the House—
Only a mediocre picture. Business just about average. (East.)

EQUITY

Hush—
This is not Young's best. Only a fair picture with fair business. (East.)

ROBERTSON-COLE

What's a Wife Worth?
Advertised heavily, and did a business that was just fair. The story was—just not quite there, though it is hard to point out its really big faults. It just didn't register. (East.)

ASSOCIATED PRODUCERS

Lying Lips—
Excellent business. Audiences enjoyed production immensely. Held for week run. (East.)

VITAGRAPH

Black Beauty—
Business satisfactory because of the excellence of the picture and the fact that so many children come to see it. (Middle West.)

FOX

Blind Wives—
Picture is below average in entertainment value. Business fair. (West.)

Wire Briefs from the Coast

FOUR bills have been introduced into the California Assembly which are detrimental to film interests. One provides for a State Board of Reviews, under the supervision of the Educational Department, to see all films before their release and recommend which ones should be shown. Another provides for a State Board of Censorship. The third makes provision for Sunday closing of numerous businesses not including theatres, and the fourth prohibits the sale of tickets at a theatre unless there is a vacant seat.

The State Health Department has recommended a bill providing for running water and toilets in all projection booths. The theatre men have introduced a substitute for this providing such improvements shall be included in all new theatres to be built.

Abraham Lehr, W. J. Reynolds, Sol Wirtzel and others from Los Angeles and L. N. Golden and others of San Francisco, are at Sacramento combating the proposed harmful legislation.

Helen Gibson is critically ill following an operation for appendicitis.

The Affiliated Pictures Interest, the anti-censorship and blue law organization, with members numbering more than one thousand, will elect officers at a mass meeting on April 8.

The first picture of the new Hobart Bosworth company will be "The Sea Lions." Exteriors are now being made at Santa Cruz Islands and at San Francisco. Bessie Love will play the lead.

Jensen and Von Herberg Give Short Reels Attention

Jensen and von Herberg, leading exhibitors of the Northwest, are making a special drive on short subjects in their theatres in Seattle and Portland, based on the scenic and comedy pictures released through Educational Exchanges, all of which are played at their houses. Recently two columns, eleven inches, was used in the Seattle papers to announce "Out of the Past," a Chester Screenic which was being shown at the Liberty theatre.

This ad calls attention to the fact that the Liberty selects its short subjects as carefully as it does its features and then proceeds with a chatty little talk about the content of the single reel. The advertisement was carried separately from the feature announcement and occupied practically three times as much space as did the announcement of the feature picture.

In addition to this all of the Jensen and von Herberg theatres called attention to their short subjects in each display. For the first time in the organization's history a generous share of the space in the large Sunday ads is being given to the scenics and comedies.

Sachet Packets Advertise "Heliotrope"

Sachet packets, slipped in front of the seats of the theatre, provided good exploitation as outlined by Harry Swift, Paramount exploiteer for the Albany territory, in connection with the showing of "Heliotrope" at the Avon Theatre, Utica, N. Y. The packets were distributed a week before "Heliotrope" commenced its run. Adorned with cuts they offered a convincing argument and were a big factor in the large attendance the picture drew. The perfume in the packets was, of course, "Heliotrope."

The Milk Man Advertised This Picture

A new advertising medium has been put to work by Lowell Cash, Universal's exploitation man in the Ohio territory. His advertising matter goes into the homes with the milkman in the morning.

The stunt was first worked in Lima, Ohio, where "Outside the Law," was shown at the Lyric Theatre. Cash had a run of hand-bills printed, worded somewhat as follows:

For Health—The White Mountain Dairy Company.

These handbills were distributed by the milkmen on the various routes of the dairy company, and proved an innovation in advertising in the Ohio city.

Baltimore Theatre Featuring Musical Program

An innovation in the way of exploitation feats in Baltimore is in progress at the Rivoli theatre. It has to do with presenting an overture and inviting the patrons to send in suggestions for its name. To the person submitting the name that is selected the management offers a season pass for two.

Guy L. Wonders, manager of the Rivoli, thus has obtained much valuable and favorable mention of the Rivoli in the daily papers. He appointed a musical editor and a critic on one of the leading dailies as judges. The musical editor reviewed the life and compositions of the composer, Edmund Hammerbacher, a member of the Rivoli Symphony Orchestra, and described the overture at length. The critic spoke of the overture as an interesting feature.

Albany's Exploitation for "Jim the Penman"

Newspaper copy consisted of such lines as "The Forger! The Police Fear Him," "A Master Stroke. Look Out For It," "The Greatest Forger of All Time," and "Beware!! The Forger Is Coming to Town," were used effectively in display space. Postal cards with similar sentences were mailed to a selected list of Albany residents.

The fashion show was conducted in conjunction with a local department store and the Strand advertising gave the event considerable space as did the mercantile concern.

An atmospheric stage setting showing London Bridge at night was unveiled before the screening of the picture. A cut of the setting is shown on this page.

Drumbar Makes Hit with Timely Short Subject

With characteristic ingenuity that has marked his various exploitation stunts, W. E. Drumbar, manager of the Riviera theatre, Knoxville, Tenn., recently put over a neat stroke that may suggest a clever idea to other exhibitors.

Drumbar's stunt was pulled on St. Patrick's Day, and consisted of nothing more or less than the fact that he put in a two-reel feature for the one-day showing. This feature was "The Punch of the Irish."

There are all manner of good short subjects on the market that can be used to good advantage on special occasions to exploit the theatre. The cost is small and the timely interest aroused shows the public that the exhibitor is on the alert, and a live-wire. It's good business to have something appropriate for special occasions and the short-subject market is a dandy source of supply.

Plays Up Mystic Element as Exploitation Feature

When it comes to big-time showmanship in the smaller cities, Bradford Brayton, manager of the Majestic theatre, Streator, Illinois, has some mighty original ideas that deserve to be recorded.

When it came time for Mr. Brayton to dope out some method of exploiting "A Splendid Hazard," he decided he would play up the mystic element of the feature. Accordingly, he arranged to have a "mind reader act" play his theatre that week.

Auto Tag Stunts Create Comment in Fond du Lac

F. R. Smith, manager of the Bijou theatre in Fond du Lac, Wis., created no end of comment in that town with an automobile tag stunt he worked in exploiting "Outside the Law."

During the last year, the police of Fond du Lac have enforced a strict non-parking ordinance. When they find a car-owner breaking the ordinance, they "tag" the car with a red tag notifying the owner to call at the police station.

Smith had a bunch of red tags made up the same size and color of the police tags. On these tags he printed the following ad:

"You haven't been pinched. But you ought to be, if you pass up the chance to see the greatest American melodrama ever shown on the screen:

"Outside the Law," etc.

Wheats Exploitation Pulled 'Em In

Manager Seymour Wheat of the Delmonte theatre, St. Louis, recently conducted a clever bit of exploitation in connection with "Brewster's Millions," and as a result filled his three-thousand seat house for three days with a second-run production.

Having 10,000 cards printed bearing this inscription: "Come and help MONTE spend his millions at the Delmonte theatre." Wheat employed a corps of 20 school-boys to distribute them. Each card was punched and contained a string hanger. The distributors hung the cards on the door-knobs of every home within a radius of ten blocks and rang the bell. The irateness of the person who responded to the bell, only to find no one there, was eradicated by the discovery of the neat card. The boys who acted as the distributers were paid with passes to the show.

Woman Exhibitor Entertains College Students

Mrs. Caraco, manager of the New Park theatre, Roanoke, Va., is another exhibitor who realizes the value of novel exploitation.

For the showing of "Scratch My Back," Mrs. Caraco gained excellent publicity, both in the newspaper and by word of mouth advertising, was the giving of a morning invitation performance for the 300 students at a local girls' college.

Another stunt was the distribution of the cut-out black cat with a patch of sandpaper on its back with the admonition, "Scratch My Back." Mrs. Caraco also used twenty-four painted cut-outs of a young lady in evening dress with the words, "scratch my back," painted on her back. These were distributed in various places.

The lobby was tastefully decorated with stills and posters and a unique advertising campaign was carried out in the daily press.

"Miracle Man" Lobby Display Used by Gerbracht

A dignified and attractive display of insert cards, posters and stills from the production was further supplemented by two potted plants at either end of the theatre front. The Princess theatre modestly boasts one of the most attractive lobbies in the country for a town the size of Ames.

Brooklyn Mark Strand's "Ocean Waves" Stunt

How to create the effect of ocean waves in connection with a soloist's singing of a marine song, was solved at the Brooklyn Mark Strand through the use of a film showing angry sea billows.

Wendt Adds to Reproduced Telegram Stunt

The reproduced telegram ad has been used for years and is almost unfailing in catching the attention of readers. But when the real thing—a telegram is brought before you, it is sure to arouse the interest of anyone.

Knowing the above to be true, Harold F. Wendt, director of publicity and advertising of the Rivoli, Toledo, used the telegram ad in lobby display cards. He wires the star of the coming attraction for his or her opinion on the picture and then mounts this answer, together with a photo of the star on the card. Little additional copy is necessary.

Wendt Has Okay Folder Idea

Every once in the while some exhibitor writes us asking for a good plan for a folder in which to attach a bit of film for advertising purposes.

We are in receipt of such a novelty from Harold Wendt, advertising director of the Rivoli theatre, Toledo, O., which those interested in the subject will find ideal.

The front page arouses interest, and shows a frame through a "window," the inside cover makes the folder really worth while to those who have never seen a bit of film, the inside back cover puts over the message for the attraction being advertised and the back cover holds permanent advertising.

Those who want a folder of this sort should ask Mr. Wendt for sample.

Rivoli Originates Novelty Lobby Front

One of the most effective examples of lobby front dressing was offered recently in Philadelphia when "The Life of the Party" played the Rivoli theatre of the Nixon-Nirdlinger chain, according to the account furnished by Eli M. Orowitz, Paramount exploiter.

A large insert frame was used outside the theatre with an American flag in the top. Cutouts of Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle as the star of the picture were made from the six sheet and the twenty-four sheet and given a striking display in front of the lobby.

Private Showing for Ministers Proves Fine Investment

Because Leslie F. Whelan, Paramount exploiteer, arranged a private showing of "The Inside of the Cup" shortly before the picture began its run at the Temple theatre, Toledo, O., the picture gained publicity in an unusual manner. Among the invited guests at the private showing was Rev. Albert King Morris, of the First Baptist Church, of Toledo and one of the most prominent clergymen of the city.

The minister was so impressed by Winston Churchill's story as shown in the Paramount picture that he made it the subject of his Sunday night sermon. It gained additional prestige because of the fact that it marked the concluding sermon of a series of four on Present Day Parables.

The papers gave the sermon considerable space both as a news item and in the religious section. The idea of a clergyman using a motion picture as food for the pulpit is still sufficiently unique for newspaper attention and the city editors appreciated the fact. The manager of the Temple theatre stated afterwards that the sermon and its attending publicity were of material help in arousing interest in the picture.

Mickey Doing Things : Fostoria

H. E. Mickey, manager of the Majes theatre, Fostoria, O., lent his best e ploitation efforts to putting over the fi episode of "The Son of Tarzan" seri

First, he tied up with a local newspap arranging for the paper to run a story the picture serially. The book stores we next in line, displays in windows on t novel and advertising for the picture bei arranged on a co-operative basis. T leading music store featured "Tarza My Jungle King," with posters for t picture prominently displayed.

The department stores permitted cu outs to be hung in advantageous section where they would do the most good to t theatre running the serial.

Getting nearer to the theatre, an ap man attracted attention. He climbed t telegraph poles. He crawled up the sid of standing street cars. He jumped o going vehicles. He did everything he coul to gather a crowd around him. And he a ways succeeded. The ape-man carried sign on his back saying, "The Son o Tarzan," Majestic theatre.

At the theatre, more than two thousan jungle lunches were distributed. Th jungle lunch is a dainty confection, mad of nuts and sugar and dates, all wrappe up in paper similar to a caramel.

Here is the "ape" which H. E. Mickey, manager of the Majestic theatre, Fostoria, O., invented as an exploitation aid in putting over "The Son of Tarzan"

Plunkett Stages Prologue for "Man—Woman—Marriage"

Joseph L. Plunkett, managing director of the Mark Strand theatre, New York, choose a scene from the Roman episode of the picture from which his prologue for "Man-Woman-Marriage" was evolved, as is illustrated by the accompanying cut. To insure perfect understanding and to convey the idea to the audience, a program reader was employed, which read as follows: "A scene in Constantine's Court in the days of Bacchanalian revelry. It mirrors the period when Woman, who, dragged before the sinister master, refuses to obey his commands and is threatened with brutal flogging. Her faith in her Creator remains undaunted. Her spiritual height astounds them, and when lightning, thunder and rain overwhelm the earth, they waken to a sense of righteousness. Super-woman has accomplished the supernatural, becomes triumphant and a symbol of Faith for Humanity."

First the sounds of merry-making came from the outer chambers (off stage). Masculine voices were plainly heard for a few seconds; and then came the dancers, ascending to the level of the throne between the center pillars. Their number finishing as they fall before the potentate. The lights became subdued, and the dancers rose, took their places between the court attendants and soldiers and awaited the coming of the slave who was being dragged before the emperor for judgment. In pantomine he orders that the slave be flogged. The Roman centurion raises his rawhide cat-o'-nine-tails, but as it is poised for the merciless descent, there is a flash of lightning and a rumble of thunder as described in the program. The slave extends her arms in a manner resembling the Crucifix and a white cross is projected on her body. The whole court bows in realization of the Supreme power. Thus the prologue comes to a close and the feature unfolds its main title on the descending curtain.

Wilkerson's Prologue on "Boys Will Be Boys"

Purl Wilkerson, producing director of the California Theatre, Los Angeles, devised a unique prologue for the presentation of "Boys Will Be Boys."

Mr. Wilkerson divided the huge California Theatre stage into three sections. On the left side was a big barn set, in the centre a boat landing scene and on the right an old Southern home drop.

Three blackface and one white character made up a quartette which sang old plantation numbers before the barn set and the boat landing scene, while mixed a quintette headed by a well known West Coast tenor, sang a medley of old songs in front of the old Southern home drop. Mme. Louise Noe, contralto, sang: "Oh, Come to Me, Mavourneen," and a male trio sang the duel scene from "Faust."

Brown Asks Pertinent Question of Feminine Sex

This topic was suggested by Manager G. E. Brown, of the Memphis Enterprises, Inc., as the subject for a reader discussion in the columns of the Memphis Press, as part of an exploitation campaign for "Forbidden Fruit," booked for the Strand theatre. The newspaper mentioned the object of the discussion, stating that the question of a wife's allowance for clothes figured prominently in "Forbidden Fruit."

The Press was swamped with letters from readers; and they were so timely that it justified the managing editor in running the story on the first page with a three-column cut from the production and two columns of story.

Inexpensive Campaign Brings Fine Returns

Small Town Exhibitor Puts Over "Twin Beds" in City Style

NOVEL exploitation and record-breaking business, all at a monetary cost of a little less than fifteen dollars, is the record of W. G. Shaefer, Vaudette theatre, West Point, Ga., when he played "Twin Beds" for a two-day engagement recently.

Of course, the obvious tie-up was with furniture stores, and as there are three good-sized furniture stores in West Point, this was most effective. Each of the stores agreed, two weeks before the play-date, to feature twin beds in their window displays for the entire two weeks prior to, and the days of, the run of the picture. The display could be changed as often as the owner of the store liked —but the agreement stipulated that the feature of the window should be twin beds despite the change.

One of the stores was agent for a well-advertised line of brass beds, and this firm sent a representative to West Point to co-operate with Mr. Shaefer. One of the brightest bits of this representative's special advertising was a neat little circular, about two and one-half by five inches, extolling the virtues of this particular company's beds, and winding up with the announcement that the ticket was worth money. On the back of the circular was written, with a typewriter, "When properly endorsed and presented at the Vandette theatre, Thursday or Friday, good for five cents on one admission to 'Twin Beds.' Only one accepted on each ticket." Then followed a line for the signature of the patron. And when these coupons, a huge number of which were presented, had all been taken up, the names and addresses signed thereon, were added to the canny Mr. Shaefer's live mailing-list, which is one of the bulwarks of his exploitation lines.

The liberal display of twin beds in all the stores, with the accompanying stock of one-sheets, lithos, window-cards and similar advertising matter, attracted the attention of the local newspaper, and one whole page was devoted to an excellent write-up on Manager Shaefer's progressive advertising.

And while the windows and newspapers were shouting the merits of the picture, Mr. Shaefer was not resting idle. Banners, painted on white oil-cloth covered with aluminum paint to imitate a screen, with catch-lines from the picture, were fastened on the back of Mr. Shaefer's car, and attracted considerable attention.

Of course, the usual teaser slides were used, for Mr. Shaefer has a great deal of faith in his screen as an advertising medium.

One of the best windows used during the campaign was one which featured a bed-room suite in old ivory finish, with the inevitable twin beds. Reposing beneath the pale-lavender satin covers of one bed, was a very large doll, dressed to represent Carter De Haven. Seated at the tiny dressing-table, was another doll, dressed in fluffy pajamas, and a lacy negligee, representing the "lady in the case."

And the total cost of the entire campaign, so far as mere money was concerned, was less than fifteen dollars—but it was spent with ingenuity, and alertness, so every penny registered.

Decorates Lobby with Civil War Antiques

The biggest single stunt was put over in conjunction with the New Orleans Item. It was a special party for the old ladies of the Fink and the Weise homes for the aged, and also for all couples in New Orleans who had been married for fifty years or more. The party was the hugest kind of a success. The Item carried many stories on the party in advance and on the occasion of the event and the other newspapers gave it mention.

During the first part of the week a large sign was carried in the lobby of the Trianon reading: "All couples in New Orleans married fifty years or over are invited to be the guests of the Item-Trianon at 2:30 Wednesday to see 'Milestones.'" Slides were run in all the Saenger theatres, announcing the special performance for old people. Miss Darnell got a large sightseeing 'bus and called at the two homes for the aged and gathered up the old ladies. Several of them had never before seen a motion picture and their astonishment and mystification were extreme. A special musical pogram of oldtime songs had been arranged for them, taking them back in thought and feeling sixty years and more. At the conclusion of the showing they were presented with candy and flowers given by a well known florist and candymaker of New Orleans, and were taken for a drive up St. Charles Avenue and through the park on the way back to the homes. The weather was ideal and the trees and flowers were in full bloom, adding to their enjoyment. Many aged married couples accepted the invitation.

The lobby of the theatre was attractively decorated with antiques dating back to before the Civil War. Among them was a baby's cradle of old design, with teaser top, the property of an old plantation owner, an old sewing table, hall mirror, chairs, spinning wheel and a velocipede of ancient make. The two latter were borrowed from the Louisiana museum, while the other antiques were loaned by dealers. Six old silhouettes in antique frames were hung over the arches, while in the centre of the lobby were portraits of three famous Southern generals, Robert E. Lee, "Stonewall" Jackson and Albert Sydney Johnson.

The lobby display attracted crowds all day long and created any amount of interest in "Milestones," which depicts events in the lives of three generations of an English family.

Strung on wires clear across the front of the lobby were ten pieces of beaverboard, roughly shield-shaped, on each one of which was painted one letter of the word "milestones."

Newman's "Kansas City Music Week" Idea

Exhibitors who would temporarily depart from the conventional lines of exploitation and "pack" their houses for a week at virtually no expense—take heed. Frank L. Newman, owner of the Newman theatre in Kansas City, has just completed one of the most successful experiments outside the routine field of exploitation that has ever been attempted in Kansas City. A "Kansas City Music Week," featuring the works of Kansas City composers in thirty-minute concerts prior to each performance, not only filled the theatre to capacity each day for a week, but obtained more than a liberal support from the press. As a result, Mr. Newman obtained hundreds of dollars worth of free advertising as well as the everlasting moral support of scores of music lovers and musicians.

Presentation Given Attention in Small Town

Presentation, in its modern form, is beginning to be practised by live wire showmen in the smaller towns, as is proven by a prologue staged by Alba W. Root, manager of the Haven theatre, Olean, N. Y., during the engagement of "The Branded Woman." Mr. Root arranged for a trio consisting of two men and a woman to sing an appropriate number leading up to the picture. As the main action in the feature takes place between two men and a woman, the number served as a very effective prologue.

Calvert Stages Ballet Act

Oscard Dancers Play Engagement at New Capitol Theatre, St. Paul

THE Oscard Dancers are playing an engagement at the Capitol theatre, St. Paul, where, among other numbers, "Columbine and Harlequin" has been presented.

A decorated background was used in the set, with a modernized Roman cupola as the center figure on the back drop. Confetti were painted on this drop, giving it the appearance of falling from the dome of the cupola. A small balustrade separated the cut leg drop from the back drop. All cut-outs on the balustrade were diamond shaped, in keeping with the Harlequin and Columbine number.

The cut leg drop represented modernized foliage, with a hedge row effect on each side of this drop.

The back drop was illuminated with a blue and red border, full up. Three olivets were placed right stage, one blue, facing up, one magenta, facing straight on, and one light amber, facing across bottom so as to catch the balustrade. The olivets were placed about two feet apart up and down stage, allowing space for spots between them. Three spots stood right stage between the olivets, three behind and one ahead of the cut leg drop, so as to catch the dancers at all points on the stage. A similar arrangement of the spots and olivets was used left stage. A raised platform ten feet high, held two arcs, trained on the dancers, with colors corresponding to the colors of the costumes. Two hanging spots were used, one violet in the center of the set and one violet in the front of the cut leg drop.

In the Capitol theatre a permanent stage setting is used, with a large opening in the center. The side sets are changed every three weeks. In the side sets the front piece was a cut drop with an oval and foliage. Both the foliage and the balustrade are cut out. The large cut-out drop is backed by a conventional landscape drop. The cut balustrade is backed by two pieces of scenery two feet deep, with a ceiling to shield the strip lights on the floor from reflecting on the back drop. Twelve 60-watt lights in reds and blues are used in the strip light. New effects are created each week by changing the backs on the balustrade and the cut drop. A 1,000-watt olivet hanging lights the back drop.

All scenic effects used at the Capitol theatre are conceived by Lowell V. Calvert, managing director. These same sets are used the second week following, usually, at the State theatre, Minneapolis.

Which explains by Leon Bamberger, Paramount exploiteer for the Minneapolis took two colored boys and dressed them in rags and straw hats when he wanted to arouse interest in the showing of "Huckleberry Finn" at the Olympic Theatre, Melrose, Minn.

Colored people in Melrose are sufficiently scarce to attract attention. Straw hats in winter are a distinct novelty; and rags, although not unknown in Minnesota, are not the ordinary garb for citizens on the public streets.

It proved again that the small town exhibitor can exploit just as effectively and within his means, as his brother in the big cities. The "Huckleberry Finn" exploitation cost less than ten dollars and drew the crowds because every one was talking about the picture after seeing the two ballyhoo artists.

Buffalo Has "Comedy Club"

Buffalo Exhibitor Has New Idea That Makes Hit With Youngsters

ONE of the best stunts ever put over in Buffalo exhibitorial circles was the organization last week of the Regent Comedy Club by J. H. Michael, manager of the Regent theatre, one of Buffalo's leading neighborhood houses.

The Regent Comedy Club is absolutely a brand new idea and one which other exhibitors should find well worth trying out themselves. Mr. Michael has been putting on what he has been pleased to call "All-Fun Bills" at his Sunday afternoon performances, commencing at 2 o'clock. At these joy-shows, he presents nothing but comedies and educational subjects and every child in the neighborhood looks forward all week to that Sunday laugh festival.

The show's attendance has grown in leaps and bounds, but now it is almost impossible to get a seat a minute after the doors open for this blues-destroying film fest. The first "meeting" of the Regent Comedy Club was held Sunday afternoon, February 27. It was an overflow meeting. The homes in the vicinity of the Regent theatre were absolutely devoid of children.

A week in advance of the "meeting," Mr. Michael sent in an order for 5,000 classy buttons with the name, "Regent Comedy Club," encircling a clown's head. The button is in three colors. These buttons were distributed during the first meeting. The members of the club received them as they put down a dime on the box office slab. The price for the show had formerly been 15 cents.

Well, when the youthful population of Buffalo residing in the neighborhood of the Regent heard about this Regent Comedy Club idea through the slides on the Regent screen, from the mouths of their playmates or their parents or from the attractive announcements given out at the entrance of the schools, they just took to the idea like wildfire and everybody made a mental reservation that he or she was going to get a dime to attend the first "meeting," if they had to stage a hold-up.

They sure were "there" when the 2 o'clock whistle blew and the first comedy was projected on the screen. Prior to the show, Manager Michael addressed the "members" of the club and told them that they were going to elect officers. There was to be a president from each school and the duty of this president would be to keep count of the children who laughed the most. He must also stand near the box office and with club in hand keep the "members" of his school contingent in line.

Mr. Michael, in announcing the club, got out a throwaway, which read as follows: "Come on, Kids. Join the Regent Comedy Club. Wear a Button. See all the Big Comedy Shows every Sunday

Hyman Presents Interesting "Lying Lips" Prologue

The Brooklyn Mark Strand theatre is presenting a prologue for the feature picture, "Lying Lips," this week which shows a shipwreck at sea with electrical effects, under the title of "The Storm."

A half-screen is used to project motion pictures of a terrific storm at sea. Placed at the skyline, a scenic set of heavy clouds, is a miniature ship with lights glowing from portholes. The blue spark of wireless apparatus is visible and flashing throughout the effect, which is that of a boat buffeting huge waves. The necessary lighting, crash of thunder and lightning streaks are used. The swish of the waves can even be heard as the ship moves across the stage.

ST. LOUIS

Ruth Roland, the serial star, appeared in person at the Grand Opera House recently. Miss Roland arranged to stop off in St. Louis for a personal appearance and is en route to Los Angeles. The first episode of her latest serial, "The Avenging Arrow," was shown.

Latest development at Jefferson City concerning Sunday closing have aroused local exhibitors. A meeting will be called this week by the St. Louis Association for the discussion of further action.

"Passion" attracted record crowds at the New Grand Central recently when the top level attained during the run of Charley Chaplin's "The Kid" was shown. Everybody seems to believe that it is the greatest picture of the year. Compliments on the showing have been showered on the Skouras Brothers, operators of the string of houses which include the New Grand Central and the West End Lyric.

Rumors that the Missouri theatre, the Del Monte, the Criterion and the fourteen others in St. Louis which comprise the Famous Players Missouri group, are to be sold to Al Woods interests are afloat in this locality. Rumors of the past few weeks have not only sold the string to Woods, but to Shubert and also to Lynch of New Orleans. Director William Goldman emphatically denies the proposed sales.

Several members of the local Film Board of Trade were held up and robbed in the headquarters of the association last week after the meeting had adjourned. More than $3,000 was obtained.

SEATTLE

Universal Film Manufacturing Company has purchased the business of the Clemmer Theatre Company, operated at 1412 Second avenue, under the management of James Q. Clemmer.

It is stated that the Clemmer Theatre Company received $50,000 for the Clemmer rights and property lease, which expires in ten months. A new lease extending over a ten-year period has been made with the owners of the building at a monthly rental of $3,600, an approximate increase of $1,500 over the last ten-year lease covered by the Clemmer company.

E. Armstrong, district manager of the Universal, negotiated the deal for his company. William Cutts, theatre manager for Universal, has taken full control. Mr. Cutts stated that no change in the name of the theatre is being contemplated until the end of the current year.

SAN FRANCISCO

Admission prices are being permanently raised beginning Easter Sunday at the California theatre, largest San Francisco amusement house, which is controlled by Roth and Partington in conjunction with the Portola and Imperial theatres. The matinee balcony price is raised from 20 to 30 cents which makes an equal price all over the house in the afternoon, with the exception of course of the loges and boxes. Evening prices are advanced five and ten cents as follows: Balcony from 30 to 35 cents; lower floor from 50 to 55 cents; loges from 65 to 75 cents; boxes from 85 to 90 cents.

More than 270,000 persons in three weeks at the Tivoli where the First National Charlie Chaplin picture "The Kid" is showing. That was the estimate as the street.
the close of the three weeks' showing drew near. All house records at the Tivoli were smashed from the first day's showing when police were called by Manager I. E. Phelps to keep people from tearing down the doors.

Prevention of theft of motion picture scenarios is aimed at in a law proposed and introduced in the California legislature. The measure has passed the lower house and has an excellent chance of becoming law according to senators.

It provides a plan for filing copies of scenarios, stories, lectures and sermons with the secretary of state, such copies to be used as prima facie evidence in civil actions to recover damages.

George F. Koppin, of Detroit, owner and operator of half a dozen picture theatres and dealer in real estate, is among the guests at the Grunewald, while spending a few days in New Orleans visiting friends and enjoying a vacation.

A party of old men and women, several of whom were married more than 50 years ago, were the guests one evening last week of the Item and the Saenger Amusement Company at the Trianon theatre to see "Milestones," that delightful stage play so charmingly pictured by Goldwyn.

The old folks, under the guidance of Miss Jean Darnell, Southern representative for Goldwyn, took a long auto ride. Each guest was given a hand full of flowers and a box of candy.

CONNECTICUT

Numerous changes are to be made at the Palace theatre, leading motion picture house at Rockville, Ct., according to Thomas H. Coffey of that city, who last week bought property from the Lewis-Brown Theatre Circuit. The present capacity of about 900 will be enlarged to about 1,500.

Word has been received at New Britain, Ct., of the marriage of Ben F. Jackson, formerly manager of Fox's theatre in that city, to Miss Rose Jandorf. Although the marriage is said to have taken place a year ago, announcement of it has just been made. For the past four years Mr. Jackson has been manager of the Fox Audubon theatre, Washington Heights, New York.

SAN DIEGO

The management of the Isis theatre, San Diego, where "The Kid" was being shown for two weeks, had as special guests one night about 75 carriers of one of the local evening papers, all of whom instantly became good advertisers for the big feature.

Manager R. E. Hicks of the Cabrillo theatre, which fronts on the Plaza, in the heart of the city, surprised the habitues of that popular little park recently when he introduced a magnavox above the entrance of the house. The amplifier carried the music of the Cabrillo's symphony orchestra out over the Plaze and the traffic of Broadway, the notes being heard distinctly in the U. S. Grant hotel across the street

"Damaged Goods," the rather old health picture, has found its way into the Province of Quebec at last, having been passed by the Board of Moving Picture Censors to be presented under the direction of the Quebec Committee for Combatting Venereal Diseases. The feature was only recently passed by the Ontario censor board and was shown for two weeks at the Toronto Strand. An interesting fact regarding the presentation of the picture in Quebec is that French sub-titles have been added for the benefit of the many French residents. The picture has been booked by the New Grand theatre, one of the houses in Montreal operated by Jule and J. J. Allen.

According to new regulations imposed by the Ontario Government, details of which have been explained to all moving picture exchanges in the Province, no posters or lobby displays depicting gun play will be permitted. Posters showing the use of a gun or weapon must be changed or destroyed and it is interesting to note that the order provides that "obliterations must be carried out aesthetically." Under the new rule, weapons must be painted out effectively and artistically, or the posters cannot be used. The pasting of a handbill or date sheet over the offending weapon will not suffice, it is declared. Heavy penalties are provided for violation of these rules.

The Western hero may now hold a saloon-ful of desperadoes at bay with a pointed finger, it has been pointed out.

Film exchanges operating in the Province of Quebec are called upon to pay an annual license fee of $200 to the Provincial Government as a result of the adoption of a proposal by Hon. Mr. Mitchell, Provincial Treasurer, for new taxes by the Quebec Legislature. Practically all of the moving picture distributors of Canada have offices in Montreal, Quebec, and are affected.

The Strand theatre property, 126 Sparks street, Ottawa, Ontario, has been sold by Fred Carling, the owner of the site, for $195,000 to John Richardson, according to an announcement made on March 21. The Strand theatre was closed recently after having been operated under the direction of the Famous Players' Canadian Corporation. The latter is building a large new theatre in Ottawa to be known as the Capitol. The Strand site will be used for store building purposes, it is understood.

WESTERN NEW YORK

Jay Weaver, who it is announced by the New York Strand publicity director, had some of his work exhibited at the Hotel Chelsea during Easter Week, started in on his artistic career at the Buffalo Strand theatre during the managerial regime of the late Harold Edel. While at the Strand his work attracted considerable attention. He went to New York when Mr. Edel was appointed manager of the Gotham Strand. Mr. Weaver studied at the Albright Art Gallery in Buffalo.

Harold B. Franklin, managing director of the Shea picture houses, has taken unto himself a "Henry Built" coupe, which he is using while his Stearns-Knight roadster is being operated on in the repair shop following a mix-up with two other cars in an accident recently in Buffalo. Art Amm, manager of the Shea North Park, blossomed forth with a Ford Sedan on Easter Sunday.

M. Steinhorn, of 245 William street, Buffalo, has assumed control of the Premier theatre at Main street and Leroy avenue, and has installed a five-piece orchestra. Mr. Steinhorn recently purchased the Premier from Claude Weill. It was formerly leased by Joseph A. Schuchert and Art Schmidt.

Herman Lorence, manager of the Ellen Terry theatre, has been placed in charge of short subject booking for the General Theatres Corporation chain of houses, including the Central Park, Star, Circle, Allendale, Marlowe and Ellen Terry.

Howard F. Brink, Robertson-Cole manager in Buffalo is closing a million dollars' worth of business in Buffalo, Rochester, Jamestown and Oswego. The Palace, Buffalo, has signed up for all the big productions. Bert Gibbons is breaking records for the amount of business sent in. Fred Sliter, district manager, is expected in Buffalo this week.

DETROIT

W. D. Ward, former manager of the Universal exchange, has taken an interest in Strand Features, a state rights exchange, and will handle the office and sales for Dave Mundstock. Mr. Mundstock expects to spend most of his time in the East buying pictures for Michigan.

Codd and Angell, of the Strand theatre, Niles, have leased the Riveria theatre in the same city.

Herman Warren, of Warren and Cohen, proprietors of the Colonial and other theatres here, has just returned from a three-months' trip to California.

Settlement has been made in the fight in the Michigan courts between Harry Garson and Lewis J. Selznick over the distribution of "Pantheon" with Norma Talmadge, "The Common Law" with Clara Kimball Young and "Law of Compensation" with Norma Talmadge. The pictures were only shown at a few points in the state and were then held up. Now the Select exchange will release them locally again.

KANSAS CITY

Motion pictures of the 1921 American Legion convention committee, city central executive committee, beautification committee and several other sub-committees were taken in Kansas City last Thursday. The film will be shown the week of March 12 at the Newman theatre, Kansas City, and later in theatres of other cities to arouse interest in the American Legion convention which will be held in Kansas City next fall. "Welcome to Our City," a march composed particularly for the American Legion, will be played at each presentation of the picture.

The United States Photoplay corporation last Tuesday was placed in the hands of the receivers by Vice-Chancellor Griffin at Jefferson City, Mo. Representative Randolph Perkins, who made the motion of the creditors, said the assets of the company were the plant at Grantwood, N. J., and a film play, three-quarters finished.

"Hush" Stays Two More Weeks in Chicago

On top of a run of four consecutive weeks at the Ziegfeld Theatre, Chicago—the highest priced motion-picture house of the Windy City, "Hush," the latest Clara Kimball Young production has added two more weeks of first-run to its career. Moving out of the Ziegfeld "Hush" entered the Castle, two blocks away from the Ziegfeld, and ran for two weeks.

Florida Picture to Be Rich in Scenery

Paul Gilmore, of Tampa, Florida, announces that he is now making a picture which is arousing great interest in that state. While not an advertising film it is known as a "Florida First" picture and will show much of the beautiful scenery of that state. The story is one which admirably fits into the Florida atmosphere and allows ample opportunity to produce a film of great scenic beauty.

Herald Productions Has Four Triangle Features

An agreement has been signed between the Classical Investment Company, Inc., and Herb Hayman for Herald Productions, Inc., whereby the latter takes over the distribution of four features for the United States and Canada.

These pictures are Ellen Terry in "Her Greatest Performance"; Charles Dickens' "Dombey & Son"; Oscar Wilde's "Lady Windermere's Fan" and H. B. Irving in "The Lyon's Mail." They were originally released by Triangle.

Comedy Series for Allied

Alt-Howell Two Reelers to Be Released by Allied Distributing

THE first series of pictures to be handled by the Allis Distributing Corporation, the newly formed releasing company headed by Mr. Rosenfeld, whose product will be distributed on the state right market, will be twelve two-reel comedies starring Alexander Alt and Helen Howell. The comedies are known as the Alt-Howell Comedies and are being produced by the Union Film Co.

It is the intention of the Allied Distributing Corporation to put out twelve of these comedies this coming year, releasing them at the rate of one a month.

Under the releasing plan of the Allied, their product will be distributed on the franchise basis to the state right buyers throughout the country. The Alt-Howell Comedies will constitute one of their short subject units to be augmented by other short subjects and several series of features.

The plan as outlined by this new organization will offer to the producer a distribution of his product on the independent market to the franchise holders in the various territories. These franchise holders in turn will know what their product for the coming year will consist of, not only in short subjects, but also in features.

Mr. Rosenfeld, head of the Allied Distributing Corporation in speaking of the Alt-Howell Comedies, said. "We believe that we have a strong series of pictures in these two-reel subjects and in releasing them once a month we are not overdoing a good thing. It permits of the company making quality pictures giving them sufficient time to put into them the things that count for so much in comedy productions."

Other announcements are expected from the Allied Distributing Corporation soon telling of their feature releases for the coming year. According to statements from their office negotiations are rapidly going forward for the handling of a series of one of the well known stars.

First Gibson Film Ready

"The Wolverine," with Gibson, Released by Ass'd Photoplays

"THE WOLVERINE," the first of the Helen Gibson series produced by Spencer Productions, Inc., to be distributed by Associated Photoplays, Inc., of 25 W. 45th street, has arrived in New York and is ready for immediate release to the State Rights field.

"The Wolverine" is from the story "The Ranch at the Wolverine" by B. M. Bower, and was considered one of the best sellers among the western class of fiction. William Bertram, a director noted for his picturization of action and scenic beauty, wielded the megaphone in the making of the first of the Helen Gibson series.

With Helen Gibson as the star, supported by an all-star cast headed by Jack Connelly, including Leo Maloney, Anne Schaefer, Ivor McFadden, Martha Mattox, Doris Race, "The Wolverine" presents a class of players who have made good. Helen Van Upp, who has many noted pictures to her credit, adapted "The Wolverine" for the screen.

Victor B. Fisher, general manager of Associated Photoplays, Inc., in planning for the distribution of "The Wolverine" will give to the field the advantages of his motion picture wisdom in exploiting and advertising the Gibson feature.

"Associated Photoplays, Inc., is in the field to stay," said Mr. Fisher. "For that reason we were in no hurry to place a feature on the market not worthy of our trade mark. In 'The Wolverine' we have a picture that is bound to go and go big for it is a western thriller with dignified punch and entertainment made in the land of snow."

"The Wolverine" will be properly exploited. Mr. Fisher has brought together a staff of expert publicity and exploitation men, and a campaign in keeping with the picture will shortly be launched in the trade papers and directly with the exchangemen who purchase "The Wolverine." A special department has been installed by Mr. Fisher to take care of the needs of the exchangemen who care for a specially conducted campaign on this feature.

Plymouth Sells Rights

David Butler Finishes Irwin Story

Final filming of David Butler's newest production, "Sophie Semenoff," first of a series of features starring the youthful actor, was completed recently at the Brunton studios.

"Sophie Semenoff" is a Wallace Irwin story that gained popularity when it appeared in the Saturday Evening Post. The title, however, is merely a working one and it is expected that Mr. Irwin will retitle it for the screen version.

Irving M. Lesser, through his Western Pictures Exploitation Company, will have charge of the picture's release. Titling and editing will consume but a short time and an early showing is planned.

Eighth Hallroom Comedy Is Ready

"In Bad Again," the eighth Hallroom Boys' comedy on the new 1921 series, which closes the number of these comedies to be released by the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, following which, starting with the ninth comedy, titled "False Roomers," they will be distributed through Federated Film Exchanges, is ready for release.

In this latest issue, Percy and Ferdie Hallroom try their luck as automobile salesmen—and, as usual, all their luck turns out to be very bad. Sid Smith is featured as Percy, Harry McCoy is Ferdie, and Herman C. Raymaker directed the American Reissues Are Proving Popular

State rights exchanges report that they are doing a big business on a series of reconstructed American Film Company features. Because of their former popularity the producers considered these features worthy of up-to-the-minute 1921 improvements, and they are in reality new prints, re-edited with new titles, new art work and new music cues.

This series of twelve pictures include the cream of the William Russell action dramas; those in which Mary Miles Minter first made her hit with the public when she was a very young enthusiast, and the J. P. McGowan Signals in which Helen Holmes blazed a new trial in quick action and suspense.

"Madonnas and Men" in Los Angeles

Herman F. Jans reports from Los Angeles under date of March 31st that the Garrich of Los Angeles is presenting "Madonnas and Men" for an indefinite run commencing April 8th.

Burr Adds to Staff of New York Studio

The recent announcement of the formation of Affiliated Pictures, Inc., a new producing organization of which C. C. Burr is president, coupled with the outline of the proposed scope of their activities, has indirectly furnished the reason for the recently augmented technical and producing staffs at the Fifty-fourth street studio, the producing home of the various units over which Mr. Burr presides.

Additional interest was given the matter by the news of the appointment, made a few days ago, of Jacques Kopfstein, as general manager in charge of distribution. Their first production will be "Lonely Heart," from Edgar Solwyn's story of the same name, featuring Miss Kay Laurell, the noted beauty, directed by John O'Brien and enacted by a splendid cast of players, headed by Robert Elliot. Anthony Paul Kelly, author of "Three Faces East" and other hits and the adaptor of Griffith's "'Way Down East," did the scenario and Captain Caldwell, of the Hillicker Writers, did the titles. Distributing arrangements and territorial rights will be negotiated within a few weeks.

"Welcome Children" to Be Released in April

Hunter Bennett, vice-president and general manager of the National Exchanges, Inc., announces that his company will release through the exchanges of their organization the feature production "Welcome Children" about April 15th.

This picture was produced by Drascena Producing Co. of Los Angeles, under the direction of Harry C. Matthews.

Mr. Bennett also advises that his company has just contracted for a series of two-reel comedies produced by the Paul Gerson Picture Productions of San Francisco, California, under the supervision of W. A. Howell. The National Exchanges, Inc., will also release a series of one-reel King Cole comedies featuring Milburn Moranti.

"Pirates of the West" Is Hatton Thriller

"Pirates of the West" is the title that has been given by the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation to the first of the new two-reel Western pictures which C. Edward Hatton has contracted to make for release by this company. This is the first of a series of twenty-six short thrillers which this young Western player is to produce for release by C. B. C.

Tucker Bros. Road Show a Big Success

Tucker Bros., of Oklahoma City, who control "The House Without Children" for Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, have seven road shows touring their territory and report big success everywhere. "The House Without Children" is the first production that Tucker Bros. have exploited outside of Oklahoma.

THE following sales on the independent market were reported during the week:

"Dollars and Destiny" (Joe Horwitz productions) to the Trump Film Co., for Greater New York and Northern New Jersey.

"Dollars and Destiny" to Mr. Harvey for Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas.

Star Ranch Westerns (C. B. C. Film Sales) to the Lightning Photoplays Corp., of Boston for the New England States.

"Witches Lure" (Capital Film Co., of Chicago) to the Aywon Film Corp., for Greater New York and Northern New Jersey.

Ancient Jerusalem Filmed

Kineto's "The Holy City" Excludes All Views of the Modern City

"THE HOLY CITY" as photographed and titled by Charles Urban contains wealth of historical background.

"Jerusalem was not an easy subject to handle," state Kineto. "The very abundance of material was a drawback. Others have attempted to place in appropriate setting this magnificent old jewel of the orient, but have lost themselves in the effort: In trying to embrace all phases of the subject, they have secured a miscellany of pictures, unrelated and lacking continuity. In a picture of the Jerusalem of history, modern Jerusalem has no place, and those who have attempted to cover both have sacrificed artistic values and confused their audiences."

In producing the Kineto Review, "The Holy City," Mr. Urban took as his theme the Jerusalem of Bible times. To be consistent, and secure the effect desired, he carefully excluded all evidences of modernity and restricted himself to those sections of the city that date back to the days when it was the pride of a nation and a power in the Asiatic world.

Thus "The Holy City" as viewed in this Kineto Review, is full of the touches that link it with antiquity: the narrow, cobbled streets, teeming with oriental life; the old "wailing wall" where the devout still bring their supplications; the dark-robed priests; the women drawing water; the market-places filled with keen-faced traders from the four corners of the world; hoary old fathers in Israel asking only a place in the sun.

To complete the effect of antiquity, Mr. Urban has chosen his titles entirely from the Bible. Jerusalem is the topic of many a page in the Holy Writ, and from many parts of the book, Mr. Urban has gathered titles that are gems of literature to match the beauty of his picture.

To Exploit "Hush" in N. Y.

Crandall, of Equity, Planning Big Campaign for Capitol Showing

MILTON CRANDALL, exploitation director of Equity Pictures will handle the publicity campaign on "Hush," the latest Clara Kimball Young release which has been booked at the Capitol, New York, for the week beginning April 24th.

Mr. Crandall, who ranks as one of the oldest and ablest exploitation men in the motion-picture field, has developed a campaign that is city-wide in scope and constitutes one of the most widespread and effective publicity tie-ups ever planned. It was Crandall who secured record-breaking publicity for Clara Kimball Young in the Southwest recently when the Equity star made a series of personal appearances.

Mr. Crandall has spent most of his activity in the field outside New York. His connection with Equity has afforded him an opportunity of promoting his first extensive campaign in the metropolis. While he holds records for publicizing pictures in other cities, he has rarely invaded New York.

The campaign on "Hush," the details of which are already in operation, will be the most sweeping and most direct tie-up any picture has yet secured, Equity claimed. Crandall is now in Rochester at the Exhibitors' convention, representing Equity, and exploiting Clara Kimball Young in her absence from the convention.

Dominant Pictures, Inc., Resumes Activities

An announcement of interest to exhibitors is found in the resume of the distributing activities of Dominant Pictures, Inc., of which Jacques Kopfstein is general manager.

Scheduled for early release in the independent market is their big production, "Aching Hearts," featuring Catherine Calvert, supported by Frank Mills and other players of note. It is directed by Madame Blache.

"Dollars and Destiny" Arouses Interest

Joe Horwitz, of Joe Horwitz Productions, announces that his super-sporting drama, "Dollars and Destiny," has created a sensation among independent exchanges and is arousing attention throughout the country. Recent sales on this picture are reported in another column, while several others are reported to be pending.

Mr. Horwitz states that it his company's intention to release a series of eight pictures a year on a basis that will assure the independent exchanges a large profit. Associated with Mr. Horwitz as sales manager is Jack Withers.

Work Starts on First Louise Dresser Picture

Louise Dresser and Jack Gardner have fallen into the silent drama—Jack as the Producer. Louise as a Star on her own. Mr. Gardner has agreed to provide a series of twelve two-reel intimate comedies in one year and Irving M. Lesser has agreed to distribute the pictures and extensive space has been rented in the Brunton Hollywood studios.

"The Fat Fighters" is the working title of the first comedy and work on this will commence April 15th. Miss Dresser is Mrs. Jack Gardner in private life.

Special Musical Score for "Peck's Bad Boy"

Not satisfied with Jackie Coogan's name as star of "Peck's Bad Boy" nor that of Irvin S. Cobb, as title writer, Irving M. Lesser, distributor of the Peck film, will have a special musical score arranged to accompany the feature on its journey throughout the nation.

Full orchestrations will be made and a complete set of same will be attached to every print of the Peck film. According to Mr. Lesser, the initial showing of "Peck's Bad Boy" will take place in the very near future.

"County Fair" Bought by S. and T. Company

Announcements in the trade journals to the effect that Samuel Harding of Kansas City has purchased the rights of "The County Fair" for Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska and Iowa, are incorrect, according to Harry Taylor, of the S. and T. Film Company of Kansas City.

Mr. Taylor states that Mr. Harding merely reviewed the picture and later acted as agent for the S. and T. Company, which will handle the feature in their territory.

Lubin Sells Foreign Rights of Pictures

Bert Lubin announces that he has disposed of a block of foreign territory on "Honeymoon Ranch" to Sydney Garrettt, who purchased the rights for Argentina, Chile, Uruguay and Paraguay.

Douglas and Scheuer Producing Pictures

Douglas & Scheuer, Inc., of New York, who have hitherto confined their activities to state right selling of feature pictures, announce their entry into the producing field, having just completed a five-reel comedy drama, "Easy to Get." The story is by Frank Beresford, who has scenarioized many successes for Famous Players, Triangle and United Pictures.

This feature is the first of a series of twelve which will be handled in the United States and Canada by a wellknown distributing organization. Foreign rights will be retained by Douglas & Scheuer, Inc.

The story and continuity for the second feature of this series, also written by Mr. Beresford, have been accepted by Mr. Douglas, and as soon as the cast has been selected, production will be started.

Reelcraft Announces Three New Series

President R. C. Cropper of the Reelcraft Picture Corporation has announced the addition of three new series of Short Subjects to be added to the program of this company. The first will be a series of twenty-six two-reel farce comedies featuring Tweedy, the well known Comedian of France. Tweedy has a world-wide fame, having been one of the first real pioneers in the picture industry and for many years the continental favorite of Europe.

The second unit of production will be a series of fifty-two single reel comedies in which little Bud Duncan is the star. This is the second series of Bud Comedies to be marketed by Reelcraft. The new series will be under the personal direction of Hamilton Smith.

The third producing unit will be an all star aggregation, in a series of twenty-six two-reel comedies, with no featured star, but to be marketed under the brand name of "Humdinger" Comedies.

Beginning with the early methods of making fire—the fire stick and the bow-drill, the film goes on to show that fire can be started with a lens made of ice. The innocent waterbottle as a sun-burner and consequently a source of danger, is exposed. Some modern chemical experiments are also tried.

Grace Cunard Featured In Two Reel Western

Grace Cunard is again the star of the newest Star Ranch Western, seventh release of the series of two-reel Western thrillers that are being distributed to the State Right market by the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation.

Equity of Canada Is Formed

New Company to Distribute Young Pictures in Dominion

ANNOUNCEMENT has been made at the offices of the Equity Pictures Corp. that arrangements have been completed this week for the distribution of all of the Clara Kimball Young productions in the Dominion of Canada. The new distributing organization will be known as the Equity Pictures Corp., Ltd., and will have its headquarters at Montreal, with branch offices in the principal cities of Canada's provinces. Sam Arnovitz is president of the new corporation; Morris M. Davis is vice-president and general manager, and Irving Stuart is the treasurer and secretary.

The Equity distributors of Montreal will maintain one of the largest exchanges of the Dominion it is said. The product they will handle has been estimated to total approximately $100,000 in value. The officers mentioned above are veterans in Canadian film distribution and have been active in the industry since the early stages of the Dominion's film history. Morris M. Davis has been identified with some of the most successful motion-picture enterprises negotiated in Canada. His experience in the field is not limited to distribution. He has earned a reputation as an energetic, enterprising showman and as an infallible judge of box-office successes.

The Equity Pictures Corp., Ltd., of Canada, will not limit itself to the sale of its Clara Kimball Young production to exhibitors. It will also provide publicity and exploitation service to assist them. In Montreal there is an extensive publicity and exploitation department that will see to it that the exhibitor draws 100 per cent return on every picture he books. The promotion of the presentation of Equity pictures will be one of the main features of the new organization. It will be the ambition of Equity's Canadian distributors to be the pioneers in fostering the most advanced and effective methods of exploitation that the Dominion has yet seen. As the field of publicity and picture promotion in Canada is not as highly developed as in the United States, Equity will have plenty of room to improve exploitation methods there, it is said.

The officers of Equity, Ltd., have been in the market for some time for the most suitable product for distribution in Canada. The series of Clara Kimball Young productions was chosen as the strongest box-office attractions for that territory. Since her very first Equity release, "The Eyes of Youth," Miss Young has been a Canadian favorite. That production marked a new stage in exhibition. Previously Canada was the victim of many inferior pictures, and those productions of real merit that were shown were sometimes harmed by insufficient exploitation. It will be the aim of Equity of Canada to put its shoulders to the wheel behind every Clara Kimball Young picture and to boost it to the limit.

While in New York, where the deal for the distribution was closed, the officers of the new corporation were present at a private screening of "Hush," the latest Clara Kimgall Young release. The excellence of this picture was somewhat responsible for swinging their decision to the side of the Equity star. Some of the former Young productions were also screen and elicited the keenest enthusiasm from the Canadian distributors.

Milton Crandall, exploitation director of Equity, and Nat Rothstein, advertising manager, provided Davis with some introductory material which has been used successfully before and which the Equity of Canada will employ to full advantage for the benefit of their exhibitors. Equity, Davis stated, has won local prestige by the effectiveness of its publicity.

In addition to the Clara Kimball Young productions, Equity of Canada will distribute "She Played and Paid," the five-reel feature starring Fannie Ward, now being disposed of by the Joan Film Sales Co. to the state-right field. Davis bought this feature to accommodate the demand for state-right releases among his exhibitors.

As a fitting introduction of the new Clara Kimball Young series in the Dominion, it is planned to have Miss Young make personal appearances in the principal cities of the provinces, at Canada's largest theatres. Davis declared that his exhibitors were anxious to have the Equity star visit them in person to satisfy the curiosity of her many admirers.

Sameth Has Salient Product

Ostriche Series to Be Released by Forward Films

MAX F. C. GROSMANN, president of the Salient Films, Inc., announces that the Forward Film Distributors, Inc., will release a series of ten super-productions featuring Miss Muriel Ostriche. This announcement was made following a conference between J. Joseph Sameth, president of the Forward Film Distributors, Inc.; Mr. Grosmann and J. Charles Davis, 2nd, who personally wrote and directed "The Shadow," the first of the series which is ready for distribution. This is said to be one of the largest financial deals consummated in the independent market in many months.

"After a survey of the field," said Mr. Grosmann, "Mr. Davis and I were perfectly satisfied that Miss Ostriche had established herself as a star of known box office attraction. After this was known we started to make a series of pictures, getting the very best results that money and brains could produce. In 'The Shadow' I know the independent organization will see a new Muriel Ostriche, for at last she is given a story and setting especially adapted for her dramatic ability.

"It is true that more than five of the biggest men in the state right field were after the Ostriche series. But we made no move until we received assurance that these features would be handled in a manner in keeping with the class of the production. After Mr. Sameth and his organization looked over the first production and realized its worth, it took us very little time to close the deal."

At the head, directing the business affairs of Salient Films, Inc., is F. C. Grosmann, well known in the film world. He has been specializing in motion pictures for several years and is thoroughly familiar with the marketing of motion pictures and all the business connected therewith. He has been with some of the largest companies in an executive capacity and resigned from the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation to assume his present responsible position. His work there and prior to that with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation fits him particularly well for his present duties. He has entire charge of marketing the productions of Salient Films, Inc.

J. Charles Davis, 2nd, secretary and supervising director, brings to Salient Films, Inc., an experience covering seven years spent in the various branches of the motion-picture industry. He has been advertising manager, special writer, exchange man, assistant director, director and producer. He has been exploitation manager, acquiring a knowledge of what both the exhibitor and public want. He was connected with the Famous Players-Lasky Corp. and Arrow Film Corp., which organization he left to take charge of production for Salient. He has full authority in this end from the selection of the stories to the completion of the pictures.

Mr. Sameth is making elaborate plans for the immediate release of "The Shadow." "I can't say much at this time, for since signing the contract we have been busy day and night perfecting arrangements to handle this film in a manner that I know will insure success both to the production and those who purchase it for their territory.

"I am more than pleased with the distributing arrangements made with Mr. Sameth and his organization," said Miss Ostriche. "I am confident that the film is what Mr. Goosmann and Mr. Davis claim it to be, and, knowing that the release is in good hands, we shall turn our efforts to the making of the second of the series."

New Jungle Picture from Selig

Federated to Release Spectacular Animal Production

"MIRACLES of the Jungle," a spectacular Warner Brothers' animal production, regarded as the finest and costliest wild animal picture ever made, has just been completed at the Selig Studios, according to an announcement issued by the Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., which has acquired the film.

The production is featured by daring use of wild animals, pretentious settings of unusual character, real jungle atmosphere and artistic photography. It is in thirty-one reels, and one of the unique features of the production is the fact that it can be divided up and run in any length of unit desired by the exhibitor. This production novelty is made possible by ingenious construction of the plot.

A band of thirty-five lions of the Selig Zoo, said to be the largest single collection of lions in captivity, was enlisted in the production, together with elephants, tigers, leopards, gorillas and other jungle folk.

The human cast, equally large and diversified, included several hundred African tribesmen, and a number of pygmies from the African interior, who play in support of the leading actors.

It took several months to construct one of the sets in the production, showing an entire ancient African city. Although thousands of dollars were spent on the set, it was blown up and demolished after it had served its brief but realistic purpose—to achieve a powerful moment in a single scene—state Selig.

Another unparalleled scene shows a terrific jungle fight between a tiger and an elephant, who was guarding a little child from attack. A battle between a handful of men and a large band of lions furnishes one of the numerous other hair-raising thrills.

The story concerns the adventures of two United States Secret Service men sent to Africa to bring back a man wanted for murder. How they strike his trail, are beset by perils of man and beast, and what comes of it when they finally catch up to him, furnishes a rare tale of adventure, in which a charming love story is included. "Miracles of the Jungle" was written and directed by E. A. Martin and is to be released shortly through the Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc.

New Production Manager for C. C. Burr

Announcement was made this week by C. C. Burr, president of Master Films, Inc., producers of the "Torchy Comedies," released through Educational, of the permanent appointment of "Demmie" Lamson to the post of production manager. Mr. Lamson was similarly occupied with several other producers before joining Master Films.

New Selig-Rork Pictures

First Feature to Be "The Rosary," with Lewis Stone; Others Follow

WILLIAM E. SELIG and Sam E. Rork announce that work will be started immediately under their supervision on a five-reel production of the famous story classic, "The Rosary." It will have an all-star cast headed by Lewis S. Stone. Other special five-reel productions will follow "The Rosary."

While Selig has been one of the quiet figures in the cinema life for the past few years he has a surprising amount of fine screen material which he has been accumulating. Among the authors and dramatists represented are James Oliver Curwood, Sir Gilbert Parker, Hallie Erminie Rives, E. Phillips Oppenheim, Winston Churchill, Randall Parrish, Gen. Charles King, Ella Wheeler Wilcox, Salisbury Field, Robert Hichens and Harold MacGrath.

Plans for the production of a series of five special pictures a year starring the famous Australian sportsman, Reg. L. (Snowy) Baker are also complete. The first of these stories has been selected and will present the athlete in a drama of tremendous heart interest and gripping situations. Mr. Baker has brought his favorite horse "Boomerang" all the way from the Antipodes, accompanied by a trainer, for use in his productions.

Scoop Conlon has been engaged as director of publicity and advertising.

Selig and Rork will also produce a new series of two reel comedy dramas and dramas and single-reel animal series.

Pacific Film Studio to Be Ready Soon

With foundations laid for carpenter and paint shops and film vault, building operations are being rushed at the studios of the Pacific Film Co. on the Coast, and it begins to look as if the production of five-reel feature pictures could be started with the opening of the summer season.

With Vernon Dent and his "boob" comedians finishing their weekly single reel comedy Saturday, the George Ovey company took possession of the stages of the Pacific Film Co. last Monday and spent the week in producing a shabby-genteel comedy of the White Cap brand. Dent and Ovey are alternating each week, the former supported by Violet Joy, with Arby Arly again leading for Ovey.

Richard Kipling Will Tour Key Cities

A new arrival in New York is Mrs. Richard Kipling, wife of Richard Kipling, head of the Kipling Enterprises, 516 5th Avenue, New York.

Mr. Kipling is planning a tour of the key cities throughout the United States, establishing Kipling Exchanges in larger cities. Mrs. Kipling, who takes an active interest in her husband's productions, will accompany him on this tour.

Ziegfeld Sells Foreign Rights to Picture

Announcement is made by W. K. Ziegfeld, president of the Ziegfeld Cinema Corporation, that the exclusive foreign rights to "The Black Panther's Club" have been sold to Jacobo Glucksman.

From the earliest days of the industry, Mr. Glucksman has been intimately connected with the fundamental workings of its machinery, for he has been associated with his brother, Max, in his extensive activities in the Argentine.

WHAT THE MAKERS SAY ABOUT PICTURES

"Sentimental Tommy" Smashes Records

"Sentimental Tommy," the screen version of Sir James M. Barrie's book, which John S. Robertson made for Paramount, broke all records last week at the Criterion theatre in New York, where it had its premiere under the direction of Hugo Riesenfeld.

The picture got off with a normal start Sunday, March 27. The newspaper reviews Monday morning were uniformly commendatory and brought about a sharp pick-up in attendance Monday. Tuesday's crowd broke all records of the theatre for week-day attendance, "Sentimental Tommy" playing to 2,406 persons,—a capacity house for each performance at the Criterion which seats but 600.

The capacity business of last Tuesday has been duplicated every day since. Last Sunday evening all Sunday night attendance records were smashed with 1,185 persons witnessing the 7:30 and 9:30 performances.

Studio Leased by Globe Productions Corp.

The Forty-fourth Street Studio in New York City has been leased for a period of one year by The Globe Productions Corporation, and it is announced that the four productions in which Mae Murray will appear and which will be released through Associated Exhibitors will be made there. The final selection of the first picture to be made with Miss Murray will be made this week, and work will be commenced immediately, with Robert Z. Leonard directing.

"Proxies" Billed for Rivoli, April 10

"PROXIES," the latest Cosmopolitan Production, will have its first showing at the Rivoli theatre, New York, Sunday, April 10th. "Proxies" is a Frank R. Adams story which appeared in the Cosmoplitan Magazine. George D. Baker, who directed the picture, also wrote the scenario. The leading parts are played by Norman Kerry, who played opposite Marion Davies in "Buried Treasure," a recent Cosmopolitan production; and Zena Keefe. Others in the cast are William H. Tooker, Raye Dean, Jack Crosby, and Paul Everton. After its run at the Rivoli in New York, "Proxies" will be released through all the Paramount exchanges.

New Series for Educational

Selig and Rork to Make Two-Reel Dramas and Single-Reel Comedies

EDUCATIONAL FILM EXCHANGES, INC., announces that it has signed a contract with William N. Selig and Samuel Rork to distribute a series of twelve two-reel super-dramas and twelve one-reel animal comedies. These contracts were signed by President E. W. Hammons on his recent trip to Los Angeles. Production has been started on both series, but the first releases will not be announced for some time, pending the completion of some other plans of Educational.

Both of these series are promised as distinct novelties and are in line with Educational's recent announcement that its plans for its second year centred around the increase in the variety of its product and a further expansion of its policy to supply "everything for the program except the feature." Each series will supply a monthly release, probably starting in the late summer.

The two-reel de luxe dramas are based on the famous Selig Library of noted novels by such authors as James Oliver Curwood, Sir Gilbert Parker, E. Phillips Oppenheim, Charles Eckert Goodman, Randall Parrish, Salisbury Field, General Charles King and a number of others equally well known. In brief, the story will be made one of the dominant things in these pictures, and it is promised that there will be as much action compressed into the two reels as there is found in the average feature. It is expected that the reputation of the authors will add greatly to the box office values of the pictures.

The casts are promised as being actual all-star creations with noted actors appearing in all the roles and including such people as Wallace Beery, Lewis Stone, William Desmond, Mary MacLaren, Ann Forrest and a large number of others. The productions, too, will be along lines that are equally impressive. The facilities of the Selig studio in Los Angeles will be used in making the new films, and a large staff has been gathered there to work on these productions.

"No Substitutes Accepted" by Realart

Realart points out that in the filming of Alice Brady's new starring vehicle, "Out of the Chorus," a Star Franchise picture, ten girls of the Ziegfeld Follies Chorus appeared before the camera. The scene called for a musical extravaganza with real chorus girls, and with the purpose in mind of supplying "the real thing" and accepting "no substitute" the Ziegfeld girls were engaged for the scene.

In its search for "the real," photographs of the district-attorney's chambers were taken and sketches of the grand jury rooms, so that the reproduction of the court scenes in the picture might be made with greatest accuracy, declares the statement from Realart.

New Monster "Blimp" in International

The first motion pictures ever taken of the "Roma," the world's largest blimp-type airship, and which has been purchased from the Italian Government by the United States, are contained in International News reel No. 26, which has just been released through Universal exchanges.

Other interesting air pictures contained in International News No. 26, show Army aviators at Langley Field, demonstrating how they can drive dreadnoughts from the sea with bombing squadrons of huge airships. The war-birds are shown in battle maneuvres, launching their bombs and scoring hits on targets made to represent battleships.

Strong Supporting Cast for Louise Glaum

Associated Producers reports an unusually strong supporting cast for Louise Glaum in her new J. Parker Read, Jr., production, titled "I Am Guilty," which is based on a story written by Bradley King. Mahlon Hamilton heads the supporting cast which includes Joseph Kilgour, Ruth Stonehouse and Claire Du Brey. Other members of the cast are Mickey Moore (in a child role), May Hopkins, George Cooper and Frederick de Kovert. Jack Nelson directed. "I Am Guilty" will be released May 1st.

Pathe Announces Four April 17 Releases

PATHE EXCHANGE, INC., announces four releases for April 17th, including "By Air and Sea," the thirteenth episode of "Double Adventure," starring Charles Hutchinson; and "The Midnight Attack," episode sixth of "The Avenging Arrow," starring Ruth Roland. On the same date will be released "The Sage-Brush Musketeers," starring Tom Santschi. This Western is said to present some interiors typical of the old West and exteriors of unusual scenic beauty. The supporting cast includes Violet Schram, Tom Lingham, Fred Gambel, Frank Rice and Earl Duive.

Eddie Boland is featured in "Hobgoblins," a Rolin comedy, also set for April 17th. The story concerns a soriority initiation held in a haunted house. Boland plays the part of a fake medicine doctor.

"Over the Hill" Road Companies Started

William Fox declares that approximately one million persons have witnessed "Over the Hill" since its premiere at the Astor theatre, New York, on September 17. The picture is now nearing its eighth month as a Broadway presentation. It is at present at the Broadhurst theatre, where the attendance remains undiminished, according to a statement from the Fox headquarters. Mr. Fox also announces that "Over the Hill" road companies are now being launched. These, it is declared, will eventually present the picture from Coast to Coast.

Tom Moore Starts on Next

Casting Complete for "The Grim Comedian;" New Films Announced

TOM MOORE, back from his honeymoon in Honolulu, this week began work at the Goldwyn studios here on his next photoplay, "Beating the Game," which has a new type of characterization for him. The scenario is an original by Charles Kenyon, author of "Kindling." It is being directed by Victor Schertzinger. The leading feminine role will be played by Helene Chadwick, who played opposite Mr. Moore in his previous picture, "Made in Heaven." Others in the cast are DeWitt C. Jennings, famous on the speaking stage as an actor of police roles; Dick Rosson and Lydia Knott.

The cast for Rita Weiman's original photoplay, "The Grim Comedian," which Frank Lloyd is directing, has been completed with the addition of Eric Snowden, formerly stage manager for the late Sir Herbert Tree; Claude Payton, a brother of Corse Payton; John Harron, a brother of the late "Bobby" Harron, and Joseph Dowling.

Richard Dix has been selected to act the leading male role in Mary Roberts Rinehart's original scenario, "The Glorious Fool," which will soon go into production under the direction of E. Mason Hopper. Dr. Henry A. Conway, of the California Hospital, has been employed as a technical adviser to the director as the story deals with a romance which springs up in a hospital.

Reginald Barker's next production will be the new Gouverneur Morris original, "Who Shall Judge?" formerly called "The Hangman." Mr. Barker is now supervising the editing of his latest production, "The Old Nest," which Rupert Hughes prepared for the screen from his novel of the same name.

Director Clarence Badger is busily engaged teaching fifty extra people the old-fashioned minuet for the Capulet masked ball scene for "Doubling For Romeo," starring Will Rogers. The company will later go to Arizona for the round-up scenes.

Wallace Worsley is guiding Leatrice Joy, Lon Chaney and John Bowers through the stirring incidents and tense emotions of "Ace of Hearts," a Gouverneur Morris original, which is rapidly taking shape for the screen.

"Inside of the Cup" Is Scoring Everywhere

"The Inside of the Cup," the Cosmopolitan production of Winston Churchill's novel, has been crowding motion picture houses throughout the country since its release, declares a statement from Cosmopolitan. When "The Inside of the Cup" was published serially in Hearst's Magazine and later issued in book form, it caused national discussion and argument.

New Priscilla Dean Picture

MANAGER CARROLL, of the Standard Theatre, in Cleveland, Ohio, is quoted as saying that Priscilla Dean's great popularity is due to the fact that "she gives the film fans action and plenty of it in all of her pictures." Miss Dean never disappoints them," says Carroll; "in a fight she is a delight to the eye and she has more styles of it than Heinz has pickles. Most picture play patrons have muscles that are alive and they want them tickled with snappy action. Priscilla Dean gives them action,"—hence her popularity. In "Reputation," her new Universal-Jewel production, that is now on its way from the Coast, Priscilla Dean beats all her own speed records for action, according to reports from Universal headquarters in New York, and in addition, it is stated, she has given the screen a story that is entirely new in treatment and twists. It will rival "Outside the Law" in intensity of theme, states Universal, and in its staging efforts were directed toward making it elaborately artistic.

The story itself is a conflict of woman against woman, with one of them a mother, the other her daughter. In the struggle the mother sinks in defeat and oblivion, and her name, reputation and place in the world as a great international actress, is usurped by the daughter.

To give a happy ending, logical in its conclusion to such an unusual narrative, is believed to be a decided achievement in story construction and in transferring it to the screen, delicate blending of characterization and the exercise of great directorial skill were needed to retain all of the force of the written story, declares Universal.

For the filming of the theatre sequence, a mammoth set representing the interior of a big London theatre was constructed, with a full stage back and front and all of the trappings and scenery used for an actual production. In fact this scene as a play within a play is actually produced as an episode in the picture, and is the central point about which the story of "Reputation" revolves.

Priscilla Dean in "Reputation," a new Universal-Jewel production

It is during the action of this episode, while the big theatre is packed with an enthusiastic audience, that the heroine, disheveled and a wreck of her former self, appears on the stage and accuses her daughter of having robbed her of her name and fame.

To show this, Priscilla Dean, playing both parts, is called upon to perform widely different characterization and a display of artistry that is reported as her greatest dramatic triumph. Director Stuart Paton is also given high praise for the skill he has exhibited in showing Miss Dean in both characters in a manner that produces a high strain of suspense and perfect illusion.

In "Reputation" Director Stuart Paton comes back to Miss Dean whom he directed in her first Universal picture. It will be remembered that Stuart Paton directed Miss Dean in "Beloved Jim" her first starring vehicle on the Big U program. And according to advance information the renewal of professional relations has resulted in a remarkably fine production.

It will also be remembered that Stuart Paton directed such pronounced successes for Universal as "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" and the serials, "The Gray Ghost" and "The Voice on the Wire."

"Reputation" will be in the hands of the exchanges some time this month and Universal is looking forward to a big "clean-up" as soon as it reaches the screen.

Serials Proving Remunerative

PATHE declares that figures collected from theatres in all sections of the country show conclusively in terms of dollars and cents that exhibitors are finding "the better class of serials" most remunerative. These figures have been collected by Elmer Pearson, Pathe's director of exchanges, through the thirty-two branch exchanges of this distributing organization, which are in constant touch with every exhibitor in the country. In analyzing the figures collected showing receipts for the different classes of subjects covering a definite period, Mr. Pearson finds that serials constitute the backbone of several programmes per week at 60 per cent of America's theatres. He gives this interesting explanation of the growth of the serial's value in the estimation of exhibitors:

"After losing money for months on a given day of their week, many exhibitors have converted that day into their most profitable one by booking serials for it year in and year out. When hot or cold weather keeps people away on other days of the week, the old, reliable Pathe Serial day goes right on grinding out splendid profits. You can't tell that exhibitor there is anything wrong with serials. Many is the exhibitor who has frankly stated that serials have saved his business existence not once but several times."

Mr. Pearson also has made studious inquiry into the causes which have advanced the serial picture to this exalted position. Following are some of Mr. Pearson's most striking observations on the subject:

"There is every reason why the history of the screened serial should follow the course of the triumphant printed serial story, with its time-honored motto, 'Continued in our next.' They are equally subject to the law of popular demand. The orally delivered and printed serial story, whose Oriental origin is best illustrated in 'The Thousand and One Nights' tales, never has lost its hold on the public. The greatest fiction writers of modern times in all countries have conformed to, in a general way, and improved on those models. Those magazine publishers who, in recent times, sought to supplant their long-standing serial feature with short stories and novelettes complete in a given issue, saw their circulations go down with a bump. They were deluged with protests from their readers. Serious loss, danger of financial shipwreck, compelled them to restore the weekly, or monthly instalment of a 'continued story.' As a result of this unfortunate experiment, the serial novel has become intrenched again, not only in the magazines but in most of the important newspapers, either in their daily morning or evening or their Sunday editions.

"Human life itself is a continued story, lived in daily instalments, and containing in perfection those most gripping elements of fiction—mystery and suspense.

Tie-Up for Zane Grey Pictures

Prominent Publishing Houses to Help in Great Campaign

THREE prominent publishing organizations have combined to nationally exploit and advertise "Zane Grey Week," according to a statement just issued from the W. W. Hodkinson headquarters. They have presented their plan to the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, who are distributors of the Benjamin B. Hampton-Zane Grey Productions, and it has been approved by the Hodkinson officials, who believe that the project will greatly boom the Zane Grey pictures.

The plan involves the outlay of hundreds of thousands of dollars, declare Hodkinson officials, and will require the co-operation of every bookseller and every newsdealer in the United States, a co-operation which will be freely given. All the employees of the three organizations named, as well as the advertising department and the field force of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation will bend every effort to make "Zane Grey Week" a success, declares the Hodkinson announcement.

One of the features of "Zane Grey Week" will be the appearance of the first instalment of "To the Last Man," a new Zane Grey serial, which is to be published in The Country Gentleman. Simultaneously with the appearance of this installment, the Saturday Evening Post and the Ladies' Home Journal will carry a striking four-page advertising insert, the purpose of which will be to advertise "Zane Grey Week," and in this "ad" will be embodied the first installment of his newest story, it is explained.

"Taking into consideration the combined circulations of the three media above mentioned, this fact alone will insure the name of Zane Grey being brought before twenty-five millions of people—one-fifth of the total population of the United States, asserts the statement issued from the Hodkinson home office in New York City.

W. W. Hodkinson, T. Hayes Hunter and Clara Horton, who played in "The Light in the Clearing," which Mr. Hunter directed

The Curtis Publishing Company, Harper & Brothers and Grosset & Dunlap are going to circularize their entire mailing list, it is stated, and are preparing numberless accessories for the book sellers and newsdealers of the United States. Included in these accessories are said to be brightly colored posters, autographed pictures of Zane Grey, various streamers which will tie up Zane Grey books with the Zane Grey productions and an unlimited number of smaller window cards. Advertising experts are declared to be busily engaged in arranging special window displays which will be photographed. These photographs, it is stated, will be carried by all of the field force of the three publishing houses and the Hodkinson Corporation, who will use them to assist the booksellers in preparing interesting and attractive displays.

"A conservative estimate places the number of people who will be reached by the combined national publicity given 'Zane Grey Week' at fifty millions," declares the Hodkinson statement. "It is a foregone conclusion that interest in Zane Grey will be aroused to a high pitch, and in the ultimate analysis it is the showmen of America who will reap the reward. Zane Grey's pictures have already proved box-office attractions. Now, with this campaign behind them, it is expected they will double and treble any results heretofore achieved."

"Buried Treasure" in Demand

Booked for Indefinite Run at Randolph in Chicago

"BURIED TREASURE" with Marion Davies, the latest Cosmopolitan Production in which Miss Davies has been seen, after running for four weeks at the Criterion theatre, New York, and after playing to capacity houses in B. S. Moss's Broadway theatre, New York, as well as in all the Keith-Moss-Proctor houses in that city, has been booked for an indefinite run at the Randolph theatre in Chicago.

"Buried Treasure" is a story of reincarnation by F. Britton Austen, which appeared in Hearst's Magazine. George D. Baker directed Miss Davies' picture and also wrote the scenario for it. Mr. Baker directed "Heliotrope," "The Cinema Murder" and "Proxies" for Cosmopolitan Productions. In "Buried Treasure" Miss Davies plays a dual role. She is the daughter of a wealthy Wall street magnate and lives in the reincarnation of the daughter of a Spanish pirate captain. How she finds wealth for her true lover, Dr. Grant (played by Norman Kerry) in spite of the efforts of her father and a designing duke makes a thrilling story. Anders Randolf plays the father and John Charles the Duc de Chavannes. Edith Shayne plays Mrs. Vandermuellen, the heroine's mother, and Earl Schenck and Thomas Findlay are also in the cast.

The pirate ship scenes have been declared by motion picture exhibitors to be among the most magnificent settings ever seen in motion pictures. Joseph Urban, the famous artist did all the settings for "Buried Treasure" some Moorish scenes which are considered works of art equal to anything he has ever done for the screen or the stage. He and George D. Baker converted a California woodland site into a Spanish seventeenth century castle scene. Many of the Spanish settings were taken in Topango Canyon, Cal., which Mr. Urban adapted to the needs of "Buried Treasure" by means of Morrish arches and a balustrade.

"Buried Treasure" offers ample opportunity for the display of Marion Davies' beauty and charm. There is a masquerade ball with magnificent interior settings of the Vandermullen mansion in New York. The scenes on the water were taken on the yacht of John D. Spreckels, California's multi-millionaire.

This Cosmopolitan Production which Paramount releases has won great popularity for the star and the producer. Its bookings indicate that it will excel the popularity of "Humoresque" and other great Cosmopolitan Productions, declares the statement from the Cosmopolitan headquarters.

Directors' Ball Acclaimed a Success

The Third Annual M. P. D. Ball, annual event looked forw to from one year to the next, which was held on April 2nd, w without doubt, both a financial social success. Despite the that many screen celebrities w out of the city, and for that rea unable to be present, there w numerous producers, stars, di tors and players as well as re sentatives of every branch of tion pictures, present.

The music, as usual, was fu ished by Orlando, which speaks itself. The entertainment, int spersing the dancing was of quality heretofore unknown a similar function. Doraldina, w out whose dance interpretation Directors' Ball would seem inc plete, appeared in two differ characteristic numbers, which, her wonderful skill as a dancer, lightful personality and ackno edged artistry, earned the g rounds of applause which gree her.

Thalia Zanou, whose dancing been delighting the attendance Broadway picture houses this s son, repeated a dance in which scored at the Directors' Ball year, and with Alexander Oum ski, also presented a "doll" man in which both artists scored. Ev Burrowes Fontaine delivered an teresting, classical dance interpr tion. Other entertainers who peared were Johnny Hines, Pe and Cortez and Will Morrisey.

Dora Mills Adams, an actress international reputation, for m years a screen favorite, and l identified with Famous Players p ductions, devoted her evening to curing signatures of the gu present. This is the third Ball which Mrs. Adams has so kin given her services. The pa broke up long after the wee, sm hours had submerged into dayli with everybody present reporting enjoyable time.

Gowns Feature of 'Camille'

Nazimova to Appear in Gorgeous Array of Costumes, Says Metro

THE costumes and gowns worn by Nazimova in her screen version of "Camille" are declared by Metro to be a feature of the production. The fifteen costumes worn during the different stages of the production are said to be "unique in their originality." "They are typically Nazimova gowns," adds the Metro statement, "each portraying the fascinating personality of the great Russian artiste."

For the opera scene, Nazimova will wear an opera gown of gold metallic cloth. Fashioned of one straight piece of the material, it is wound about the body and caught over each shoulder with a narrow strap. With this gown is worn a striking opera cloak of black and silver cloth, studded with heavy silver camellias.

For a Parisian street scene, Nazimova wears a black velvet costume embroidered in silver. The one-piece dress with its short, full skirt, resembles a Russian Cossack outfit. With this is worn a high fur hat of silver beaver and an elaborate Venetian cloak trimmed with black and silver fur.

In the gambling scenes, Nazimova wears a stunning gown of black velvet having a solid jet bodice. A large camellia in cut steel beads, worn in front, is the only ornament to the costume. For the garden party, light summery frocks will be worn. One is of taupe colored chiffon, embroidered in vari-colored beads. A large garden hat profusely decorated with gay flowers is worn with this gown. Another frock worn during this phase of the story is of pink Georgette with which is worn a rose-colored coat.

"Wild Goose" Is Due Soon

Made by Cosmopolitan for Issue by Paramount; Capellani Directed

"THE WILD GOOSE," a drama of domestic relations, which Cosmopolitan Productions has taken, will be released in the near future by Paramount. "The Wild Goose" is a story by Gouverneur Morris and was adapted for the screen by Donnah Darrell. "The Wild Goose" appeared in the Cosmopolitan Magazine. Albert Capellani directed this picture, after he had finished his master production for Cosmopolitan, "The Inside of the Cup."

"The Wild Goose" is a story of the duty of parents to the future welfare of their children. It is described to be a gripping tale of true and false love with an unusual angle. Instead of presenting the usual social triangle "The Wild Goose" is a story of a social square. It involves two married couples, and how they solve their problems is presented in a way that does not clash with the everyday realities of life, it is declared. It is a story that comes home to each and every married couple in the opinion of Cosmopolitan officials.

The part of the child is played by Rita Rogan, who is one of the most charming little girls on the screen. Holmes E. Herbert, Mary McLaren and Norman Kerry play the leading roles. Dorothy Bernard and Joseph Smiley also play important parts. "The Wild Goose" gets its title from the symbol that the wild goose cannot live without its mate, but he is faithful to her until he dies.

The settings for "The Wild Goose" were designed by Joseph Urban. Mr. Urban has designed a nursery in "The Wild Goose" which is declared to be highly distinctive. The artist's living room in the picture is said to be another magnificent set.

Fox Names Coming Releas

Six Productions Announced by Fox for Release During April and May

IN the list of coming releases announced by the Fox Film headquarters, "The Tomboy," in which Eileen Percy appears as the featured player, is announced as the current Fox release. It is hailed by Fox officials as a picture of timely interest because its story is developed against the background of the baseball diamond. Miss Percy as the "Tomboy" appears as the star performer of a local baseball nine. The presence of a gang of bootleggers also plays a big part in the development of a "delightful romance."

On April 10th, Fox will release its special comedy production, "Skirts." Besides the Fox Sunshine comedians and beauties, Clyde Cook will be presented in this production, which, according to Fox, took nine months to make. The Singer Midgets are a feature of the picture.

April 17th has been determined upon as the release date of "His Greatest Sacrifice," starring William Farnum. The story was written by Paul H. Sloane, and the pi ture was directed by J. Gordon E wards. Alice Fleming plays opp site Mr. Farnum.

"Hearts of Youth" based on th story, "Ishmael," written by Mr D. E. N. Southworth, has been s for release on April 24th. The pr duction stars Harold Goodwi Millard Webb directed the pictur The picture is said to afford M Goodwin abundant opportunity fo dramatic and emotional action.

William Russell has a new pic ture scheduled for release by Fo on May 1. It is entitled "Colorad Pluck," is based on a story b George Goodchild, and incidentall places the star on two continent instead of confining him to hi favorite American West. Margare Livingston is his leading woman.

"Grit," of the next Buck Jone release by Fox. May 8 has bee selected as the release date. Th story is from the pen of Allan Sul livan, and the direction was in th hands of George W. Hill.

Loew Gets "Good Women"

R-C Issue Written by C. Gardner Sullivan; Gasnier Directed Film

THIRTY New York and Brooklyn theatres of the Loew circuit will play Robertson-Cole's "Good Women," written by C. Gardner Sullivan and directed by Gasnier. The contract for this booking has just been signed by Nicholas Schenck, for the Loew organization, and the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation ranks it as one of the biggest blanket contracts signed by the circuit this season. In addition to the theatres in New York and vicinity, the Loew theatres nearly all over the country will play this Robertson-Cole release, it is announced.

Robertson-Cole officials feel particularly gratified at the Loew booking because they consider that it practically amounts to a broad endorsement of the commercial value of the picture and its drawing powers. Reports from Robertson Cole branches all over the countr indicate, declares the home office that leading theatres and circuit are about to follow the lead whic has been set by the Loew circuit.

Rosemary Theby and Hamilto Revelle, who figured prominently i Gasnier's production of "Kismet," play the principal roles in "Goo Women." The general theme o the story is that a wealthy youn heiress determines to live her lif without regard to the conventions She passes through a series of lov affairs which are highly illuminat ing before she discovers that ther are certain unwritten laws of so ciety which are adamant. Mr. Sul livan, author of the original story is one of the best known of scree writers.

Stage Gala Universal Bill

April Marks Celebration of Universal's Anniversary in Australia

THE month of April is Universal's anniversary month in Australia, word comes from the Antipodes, where James V. Bryson, Universal's representative in that part of the world, is staging gala Universal programs, special bookings and other anniversary stunts in Australia and New Zealand. Bryson was sent to Australia by Mr. Carl Laemmle early in 1919. The first Universal agency was opened in Sydney, N. S. W., in April 10th of that year.

According to a recent statement by Mr. George E. Kann, Export Manager for Universal, there now are four Universal branches in Australia, and three in New Zealand, situated in the following cities: Melbourne, Adelaide, Brisbane, Wellington, Auckland, N. Z. Christchurch, N. Z., and the head office in Sydney.

When Bryson went to Australia he carried with him more than $1,500,000 worth of Universal films He since has received another $1,000,000 worth. He found little or no Universal product being shown on that continent. Universal claims that the advent of the large supply of Universal films into that field has done much to break up a combine, alleged to have been getting a strangle hold on Australian exhibitors.

Critics Pleased With "Ducks and Drakes"

Realart's release, "Ducks and Drakes," starring Bebe Daniels, won favor with the critics while showing at the Rivoli, New York. The following are submitted as typical of the reception accorded by the New York press reviewers.

The story, according to the Evening Mail's reviewer, "Is done extremely well in this film and gives Bebe Daniels the opportunity to look beautiful for five reels, so what more could one ask. And be it said for her that she does more than merely look attractive. She plays her part cleverly and displays her undeniable talent whenever opportunity offers."

Said the Journal of Commerce: "Bebe Daniels in 'Ducks and Drakes,' an original screen comedy by Elmer Harris, delighted yesterday's audiences at the Rivoli.

"Kent Week" Was Big Success

Rentals Totaled Over Three Quarters of a Million

WITH rentals reported to total more than three-quarters of a million dollars, Kent Week, which was observed last week in all the exchanges of the Famous Players-Lasky Corp., is declared to have a record as the second biggest week in the history of Paramount Pictures, according to an announcement made during the week by the Famous Players-Lasky home office in New York. The total was topped only by the receipts during the annual Paramount Week last September, it is declared, and was bigger than the receipts of any previous Paramount Week.

Last week was set aside in Paramount exchanges as Kent Week in honor of S. R. Kent, general manager of the department of distribution, and the results are particularly gratifying to Mr. Kent and other officials of the company. Although the drive was not marked by all the extensive preparations usually made to put over Paramount Week, which comes annually in September, full-page advertisements were carried in the leading newspapers in thirty of the biggest cities, and each advertisement displayed the names of theatres showing Paramount Pictures for the week. Theatres tied up with this advertising by announcing that the pictures they were showing were Paramount pictures.

"The astonishing results obtained during Kent Week," said Mr. Kent, "can be construed only as a demonstration of the good will which exhibitors bear toward Paramount Pictures. The drive was conducted at what is usually an off-period of the season, and the amazing volume of rentals is an evidence of the selling ability and exhibitor good will which are a source of great pride to every official of the corporation.

"While the thanks of myself and every other official of the company go out to every district manager, branch manager and salesman in the field, I particularly wish to call attention to the work of H. H. Buxbaum, manager of the New York exchange, and John D. Clark, manager of the Philadelphia exchange, and their associates.

Realart's Releases for April

Constance Binney and Wanda Hawley Pictures on List

"THE House That Jazz Built" and "The Magic Cup," Realart's latest Star Franchise productions with Wanda Hawley and Constance Binney, are announced for immediate release.

Adapted from a Sophie Kerr story in the Saturday Evening Post, "The House That Jazz Built" tells the story of a young couple who start out happily on the great adventure. As the husband becomes successful he urges his wife to let the servant do the work and allow herself to rest.

Candy, lack of exercise and a life of ease soon combine to rob her of her attractiveness, and she puts on weight. Their home becomes a "house of jazz," and the young husband revolts, seeking a more restful environment and a slender companion. The awakening of the wife and her actions immediately following lead to many unusual situations and eventually to a happy solution.

Penrhyn Stanlaws directed the picture. This is the second production with Miss Hawley that he is responsible for, the first being "The Outside Woman." The supporting cast includes Forrest Stanley, leading man; Gladys George, Helen Lynch, Clarence Geldart, Helen Dunbar and Robert Bolder. Douglas Bronston wrote the scenario.

Romance, adventure and the unexpected are the elements of entertainment in "The Magic Cup," an original story by E. Lloyd Sheldon, which is Constance Binney's latest picture.

John S. Robertson, who directed Miss Binney in her first starring picture, "Erstwhile Susan" and in "39 East," and whose direction of "Sentimental Tommy," with May McAvoy, is winning the praise of critics everywhere, also directed "The Magic Cup."

Miss Binney in this picture has the role of Mary Malloy, a little scullery maid in a big hotel. She has one possession, a large silver cup, left by her mother. This she calls her "magic cup" since it proves of value as an article to pawn.

Generous beyond her means, she is always doing for others, and it is on one of her excursions to the pawnshop that her precious heirloom attracts the notice of some unscrupulous men. A young newspaper man has also become interested in Mary, and, sensing a story, he follows the case.

Suddenly Mary leaves her kitchen duties in the hotel for the easier life of a wealthy young heiress. Happiness is hers and she makes the most of it—until an unexpected visitor arrives. Then follows a series of events that threaten to wreck her belief in everything, but eventually the tangled threads are straightened out and the "magic cup" brings happiness to Mary and many others.

[General Releases to be Ass'd Exhib's Policy

ARTHUR S. KANE, chairman of the board of directors of Associated Exhibitors, has announced that "The Rider of King Log," which has just been accepted for release by Associated will not be put out as a road show. In making this announcement Mr. Kane also declares that the policy of establishing pictures for long runs before the exhibitors get them will not have any place in the activities of Associated Exhibitor. Every picture will be available to franchise members and exhibitors generally, Mr. Kane declares.

Doraldina Forms Own Producing Company

Doraldina, whose latest picture, "Passion Fruit," by Carey Wilson, which John H. Ince directed for Metro, will shortly be seen on Broadway, has organized her own company, and within a few weeks will begin production on her own account, according to an announcement made by her manager, Frank Saunders, early this week.

Mme. Doraldina is now in New York seeking a suitable vehicle for her first stellar production under her own banner, while the details of her new organization are being worked out.

Vessel Used in Wreck Scenes Is Sunk

The sinking, early on the morning of April 1, in the Straits of Juan del Fuca, of the Pacific Mail steamship Governor, with a loss of several lives in a collision with the freighter West Hartland, recalled vividly at the Thomas H. Ince studios in Culver City, the making of the shipwreck scenes for Mr. Ince's super-production, "Lying Lips."

By a strange coincidence it was the Governor, the largest passenger ship in commission between Seattle and San Diego, that was used for the thrilling shipwreck scenes in this picture.

Vignola Film Is Ready for Early Release

Cosmopolitan Productions has ready for early release through Paramount, "The Woman God Changed," which Robert G. Vignola directed from a story by Donn Byrne called "Redemption Cove." Doty Robart wrote the scenario. Seena Owen takes the leading female part. Others in the cast are E. K. Lincoln, Lillian Walker, H. Cooper Cliff, Templer Saxe, Henry Sedlay, Paul Nicholson, Brian Darley and Joseph Smiley.

Many of the scenes from "The Woman God Changed" were taken in the Bahama Islands, since the story calls for tropical island settings. Robert G. Vignola and the company spent six weeks at Nassau in the British West Indies, where the island scenes were photographed.

Berman Outlines Jewel Policy

AFTER a flying trip to Universal City with which he combined a whirlwind inspection of the Universal exchanges on the way back, Harry Berman, general manager of Universal exchanges, arrived back at headquarters on Monday morning. The purpose of Mr. Berman's visit was a consultation with Mr. Laemmle and Mr. Cochrane in regard to Universal's Jewel product. This conference took a week, and during it the Jewel policy for the coming year was thoroughly discussed and settled. Mr. Berman on his return was able to make a partial report covering the Jewel program for 1921-1922, which season will start on September 1st.

The most important decision which was made was the release of Priscilla Dean's forthcoming Jewel, "Reputation," as of April 15th.

"Our Jewel program for next season has occupied a great deal of the attention of Mr. Laemmle, Mr. Cochrane and myself during this conference," Mr. Berman declares,

Coming Releases of Jewel Brand Are Announced

"and I may safely say for them that they are planning the biggest Jewel year that Universal has ever projected.

"The first, of course, will be Von Stroheim's 'Foolish Wives,' which has already cost more than $900,000, and which will require at least $200,000 more to complete. I was amazed at the wonderful detail and smashing spectacular effects which Von Stroheim has managed to create on our lot at Universal City. 'Foolish Wives' will be Jewel's biggest bet for the Fall, and I anticipate that it will be the greatest picture that has ever been produced to date.

"In addition to that, Tod Browning has just started work on Edna Ferber's story, 'Fanny Herself,' after an exhaustive, preliminary period of preparation. Harry Carey, our newest Jewel star, will do at least two pictures for the Jewel program under the direction of Jack Ford. Priscilla Dean is already working on Clarence Buddington Kelland's serial story in the Red Book, entitled 'Conflict.' I am told that the story will also appear in novelized form concurrently with our Jewel production. Stuart Paton, whose work in 'Reputation' cannot be too highly commended, is directing 'Conflict.' Two other Jewel pictures which I am at liberty to announce are Mrs. Clara Louise Burnham's wonderful novel, 'Jewel,' and the late Hal Reid's famous play, 'Human Hearts.' The stars in these two pictures have not as yet been selected.

"While the result of my trip is making a few changes in some of the exchanges, yet I found conditions so eminently satisfactory that it was almost impossible to suggest any improvements. The exchange managers themselves are working more efficiently than I have ever known them, and I feel certain that this will be Universal's best year.

"THE SKY RANGER"

The Problem of Picking the Picture

It may be just a serial or it may be a Pathe serial

THE world has worn a beaten path to the doors of the Pathe exchanges in the quest for good serials.

The reason is found in the unique record of specialization which has created serial success after serial success in Pathe product.

The mark of distinction today is the phrase "a Pathe Serial" in the presentation of episode production.

If it is not "a Pathe serial" it is just a serial and it does not have behind it the years of experience and quality production.

George B. Seitz has scored in the direction of serial after serial, among them such knockouts as "The Fatal Ring" and "The House of Hate." In "The Sky Ranger" he again maintains his reputation of being the world's greatest serial director.

Paramount's Releases Issued April 3rd

GEORGE MELFORD'S special production "The Faith Healer," and "The Dollar A Year Man," starring Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle, are the two productions offered for general release by Paramount on April 3.

"The Faith Healer" is based on William Vaughn Moody's famous stage play of a decade ago. It presents a combination of spiritual appeal and a virile love story. To interpret this theme a strong cast has been chosen, headed by Milton Sills and Ann Forrest. The other members of the cast are: Fontaine La Rue, Frederick Vroom, Loyola O'Connor, May Giraci, John Curry, Adolph Menjou, Edward Vroom, Robert Brewer and Winifred Greenwood.

Despite its title, "The Dollar A Year Man" is not a war picture. Instead it is a rollicking comedy with Roscoe Arbuckle as the star. Lila Lee plays opposite Mr. Arbuckle. The other members of the cast are: Winifred Greenwood, J. M. Dumont, Edward Sutherland, Edwin Stevens, and Henry Johnson. James Cruse directed.

Protective Equipment for "Flying A"

The American Film Company has just completed the installation of what is declared to be the most modern and effective fire protection equipment on the market. The sprinkler system, together with laboratory improvements, to the extent of about $50,000, make the plant up to date in every particular, it is asserted.

Much outside work has been coming to the American's laboratories from educational and manufacturing concerns and from independent producers. The present equipment is upheld as a satisfying guarantee to customers for the safety of their films. The "Flying A" laboratories are now handling a large proportion of the rush printing jobs in Chicago.

Leone Bracker Posters for "The Oath"

"The Oath," the R. A. Walsh production starring Miriam Cooper which was selected for inclusion in Associated First National Pictures, Inc., group of Big Five attractions will have M. Leone Bracker posters to aid the exhibitor in selling it to the motion-picture patrons of the country.

Mr. Bracker designed six posters for the new production. He based them upon six of the dramatic turns in the story. Using Miss Cooper as a model in five of them, he created drawings which, according to the critics who have viewed them, have all the appeal of his famous war posters. Anna Q. Nilsson was the model for the sixth poster.

Educational Week, May 1-7

Aims to Book 75% of Theatres in Big Drive

E. W. HAMMONS, president of Educational Films Corporation of America and its distributing subsidiary, Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., announces an Educational week from May 1 to May 7 as a preliminary to the celebration of the first anniversary of the establishment of the exchange system through the United States and Canada. The Educational Week will be a further step in the effort to place the company's product in at least seventy-five per cent of all the theatres before the complete announcements of Educational product for the second year are made.

In his letter to exchange managers Mr. Hammons calls attention to the fact that all of Educational's product is booked for its various runs in most cities, but an effort is to be made to have all theatres that have various series booked to show one or more during the week and also to place a portion of the product with all those theatres that have not played any of the pictures. Single bookings will be accepted for this one week in order that the whole motion picture public of the country may be made acquainted with the "short subject specialists." it is announced by Mr. Hammons.

While this will be the first concerted effort that has been made by Educational's branches to have its product displayed at the same time, it is pointed out that there have been numerous occasions when every important first run theatre in various cities have played its releases simultaneously and there have been a number of cases where competing theatres under the same ownership have used the same pictures at the same time. Philadelphia recently set the record of playing the same comedy in three first-run Stanley theatres during the same full week. In New York Educational has often had pictures at every Broadway theatre at the same time.

Pictures which will be especially called to the attention of all exhibitors during this week include the two-reel Mermaid, Torchy and Chester comedies which are releases of Vanity and Gayety comedies. The scenics include the Bruces Chester Outings, Screenics, a number of the World Wandering series, the Hudson's Bay Travel series, Red Cross, cartoon and various other subjects, including all the one and two-reel specials that the company has released during the past year.

Every exchange has been equipped with renewed supplies of prints, paper and other accessories. An important part of the drive will be to have all the theatres prominently announce the short subjects that they use at this time and call attention to the fact that they are Educational product. According to Educational exhibitors have shown during the past few months an astonishing desire to prominently announce the comedies and scenics, and it is estimated that the advertising of these short subjects on the part of the exhibitor has increased at least 500 per cent within a few months.

Many of the largest circuits have already reported that they intend to use the full complement of short subjects in every one of their theatres during this week. In those sections where first runs are behind the schedule this week is expected to serve the purpose of having every one "catch up." There will be no pre-release showings permitted, however, merely for the purpose of making a better showing. A total of some three hundred different subjects will be available.

To Extend "First Nat'l Week"

FOLLOWING the success of "First National Week" in the Seattle territory, when 190 theatres in Seattle, Portland, Tacoma and other cities and towns of Washington, Oregon and Idaho played a special season of First National attractions, six other territories have announced the inauguration of a "First National Week." Extensive preparations are being made to make the seven-day period in each territory a record booking campaign.

Already the Los Angeles territory, including Southern California, Arizona and New Mexico, has negotiated a successful "First National Week." During the week of March 27-April 2 "First National Week" was conducted in the Milwaukee territory. The results of the campaign are expected to exceed all estimates made in advance of probable business.

The first week in May will mark the exploitation of a "First National Week" simultaneously in four territories—St. Louis, Kansas City, Omaha (including Kansas, Iowa and Nebraska) and Eastern Canada, of which Toronto is the distributing point. Detroit will follow during the week of May 8th.

Already it has been determined that "The Passion Flower," Norma Talmadge's next release through First National, will play the Strand, Omaha, during that week, with the Rialto running Charles Ray's "The Old Swimmin' Hole," based upon James Whitcomb Riley's celebrated poem of American boyhood. Other equally interesting bookings will be made during the next two weeks.

The St. Louis office of Associated First National Pictures, in anticipation of exceptional business during the week of May 1st, has equipped itself with a special line of one-sheets, banners and cards, which will be furnished every exhibitor who is keen to "make a week of it" with First National attractions.

The Toronto office has already flooded its territory with advance notice of the celebration. One of its stunts has been the distribution of special blotters, bearing the First National trademark.

"There are no hard times coming; just soft times going. So let's talk business instead of conditions."

Michigan exhibitors will commemorate the fourth anniversary of the opening of service by the First National Exhibitors Circuit in that territory by participating in a First National week of bookings during the seven days beginning May 8th. Harry Scott, manager of Associated First National Pictures of Michigan declares that the event will be more widely participated in than any similar affair that has occurred in the territory.

New Pathe Serial in May

George B. Seitz and June Caprice to Be Starred in "The Sky Ranger"

AN important event in the field of motion picture serials will be the release by Pathe of "The Sky Ranger"—announced for May 1st. This George B. Seitz production is said to abound in highly original and startling features. It will also serve to introduce June Caprice to her admirers as a serial star, as she shares that honor in this picture with Mr. Seitz. As in several preceding Seitz productions, Harry Semels is the capable villain—with the addition of special and spectacular opportunities. The story and scenario are the work of Frank Leon Smith.

"The Sky Ranger" has for its keynote a fascinating scientific demonstration which recalls, without imitating, one or two of the immensely popular tales of Jules Verne. Two problems, in fact, are demonstrated. There is a super-airplane that travels from Buenos Ayres to New York in two hours, and a searchlight projecting rays clear to the planet Mars, and so powerful that they consume with heat any kind of material they touch. Naturally, the great decisive battle in the picture is between the super-airplane and these super-light rays, the whole story being fraught with novel perils for all the ordinary human characters involved.

It will be seen that the "locations" occupy land, sea and sky, and vast expanses of all three—for an aeroplane that travels at the rate of two thousand miles an hour, and a searchlight capable of "picking up" Mars, certainly need plenty of elbow room! It really is a contest between great war inventions.

Teaser Campaign Put Over

THE advertising department of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation working in conjunction with Bert Adler has just closed a teaser campaign in behalf of Irving Willat's production, "Partners of the Tide," which is on the Hodkinson releasing schedule. According to Campaign buttons of celluloid were mailed to exhibitors in the United States and Canada. Each button carried the cut of a boxing glove accompanied by such announcements as "Surprised—Punch Number One," "Astounded—Punch Number Five," "Bewildered—Punch Number Seven," etc. There were eight such buttons mailed out in all, and at the end of the first mailing week, the inscriptions on the buttons together with the cut of the boxing glove appeared in the trade press with no clue as to what "the eight punches" were about.

Later, illustrations of scenes in the photoplay were printed, repeating the "punch numbers" and bearing the signature of "P. T." Next imitation playing cards were mailed out, bearing the legend, "A Good Pair to Play." The successive playing cards gave the names of successful pictures—with the space opposite revealing only a change of punch number. The last playing card specifically mentioned "The Kid" as a current photoplay hit and "Partners of the Tide" as the mystery picture with eight punches. The trade press carried the same information, and "P. T." was definitely announced to stand for "Partners of the Tide."

"Small Town Idol" Scoring

Being Booked for Extended Runs in Large Cities of the Country

THE success of "A Small Town Idol," Mack Sennett's super-comedy, continues unabated, announces a statement from Associated Producers. On the heels of extended runs in other large cities, the production has been booked for a week's showing at the Rialto theatre, New York City, beginning April 10; for an indefinite engagement at Ford's theatre, Baltimore, and for the Majestic theatre, Detroit.

"A Small Town Idol," which ran four weeks at the new Mission theatre, Los Angeles, two weeks in Chicago, two weeks in Seattle and several other large cities, set a new house record for Barbee's Loop theatre, Chicago, according to E. M. Asher, personal representative of Mack Sennett. In its first week's run there, with a downpour of rain on the opening day and rain three other days of the week, the picture grossed $14,210, nearly $1,500 more than the best gross previously reported from this house.

Because of its success, "A Small Town Idol" was held over for a second week at Barbee's Loop. Its record gross in this house is regarded as the more remarkable because the theatre has only 800 seats. Following the Loop run, the Castle theatre, Chicago, arranged for a second run of two weeks, and Lubliner & Trinz, who have the picture booked in the outlying districts, extended the run in two theatres from four days to a week and doubled the time in their twelve other houses.

Enlarging the Mayer Plant

Alteration of Coast Studios Well Under Way; Will House Five Units

HOUSING of four producing units which are releasing through Associated First National Pictures, Inc., has necessitated an enlarging and alteration of the Louis B. Mayer plant in Los Angeles that will make it, when the work is completed, one of the largest and best equipped studios in the entire industry. The construction work is already well under way, and will be completed within six weeks or two months.

The rebuilding of the studio was designed to provide adequate facilities for five producing units, four of which are independent companies releasing through First National. These include the two Louis B. Mayer productions, those under the direction of John M. Stahl, and those starring Anita Stewart; the Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven productions, and the Oliver Morosco productions. G M. Anderson heads the fifth unit that will work in the studios when the extensions are completed.

When the Mayer studios were first built they assumed the position of being one of the largest and best equipped on the coast.

The mechanical equipment of the studio has been more than doubled. The demand for current for the lighting of all the stages necessitated the installation of what First National declares to be the largest motor generator ever manufactured for studio use. A new dressing room building, capable of housing wardrobes and rooms for one hundred people has been constructed. Extensions have been built on the prop room, storage building and scene dock. The film vaults have been enlarged to twice their former capacities and new buildings have been constructed.

"Caligari" an Unusual Offering

"THE CABINET OF DR. CALIGARI," presented this week at the Capitol theatre, New York, has aroused considerable interest in motion-picture and allied circles. The newspaper critics pronounce the picture to be a most unusual offering with much of the atmosphere and spirit associated with an Edgar Allan Poe tale of mystery and horror. The statement from the Goldwyn headquarters declares that the picture "brought to the Capitol theatre on its opening day the biggest Sunday in the history of the theatre." No definite announcement has been made by the Goldwyn home office as to how the picture will be handled, but it is probable that the Goldwyn organization will distribute the production throughout the country.

The Times: "The settings are the background, or rather an inseparable part, of a fantastic story of murder and madness such as Edgar Allan Poe might have written. This story is coherent, logical, a genuine and legitimate thriller, and after one has followed it through several scenes the weird settings seem to be of its substance. . . . Werner Krauss, as the Doctor, gives one of the most vivid performances recorded on the screen, and Conrad Veidt is no less the embodiment of the ghostly, ghastly sleep-walker. . . . A shocker for those who like such to revel in. It is a feast for those who want their fiction strong and straight."

The Herald: "Will give any one a first-class, guaranteed case of the creeps. It is celluloid delirium tremens. There is plenty of shivery material in the story, with the gnomelike, skulking figure of the Doctor, and the horrible, froglike make-up of his accomplice."

The World: "Outdoes for sheer audacity anything seen in a motion-picture house this season. It defies nature."

The American: "Proves distinctly a novelty. It has a cunning intelligence, a cleverness and a subtle humor that makes one wish it might have been an American director who conceived it. It is of a sort to make our film industry perk up and get a-going."

The Tribune: "The picture sets itself the task of raising your hair from your head, and it succeeds from the moment the actors appear in the prologue."

The Telegraph: "A most startling revelation of photo-dramatic art. We found that the settings of "Caligari" stirred the imagination and brought an atmosphere of weird fantasy and mystery. It is remarkable for some very fine acting."

The News: "I went to see 'The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari—' in a decidedly skeptical spirit. But I have come away believing. The cubist settings in this picture are not only interesting because they are fantastic; they are also extraordinarily impressive when the effect of horrible beauty or of terror or of imminent doom is desired."

Dear Sir:-

In the great field of motion picture production, there occasionally stands out a masterpiece so beautifully produced, so clean and wholesome in theme, story and moral, that it is at once pronounced a classic of the screen. Such a picture is "BLACK BEAUTY".

Founded, as it is, on one of the most famous literary classics - Anna Sewell's "Autobiography of a Horse" - the screen version, by Lillian and George Randolph Chester, is even more convincing and appealing than the original story.

We doubt if any story ever written has had a wider appeal than "BLACK BEAUTY", or has so inspired both young and old, with love and consideration for dumb animals. "BLACK BEAUTY" as a book, was read and loved by millions; "BLACK BEAUTY" on the screen, will be loved by a greater number of millions, not only for it's beautiful sentiment and teachings, but as a work of art as well.

In adapting the story to the screen, the Chesters have interwoven a delightful romance about those associated with Black Beauty, thus adding a dramatic touch that holds throughout the entire picture.

We consider it not only a privilege, but a duty, to bring such a picture to the attention of those interested in subjects of an educational and inspirational nature. We therefore call your attention to our presentation of "BLACK BEAUTY" at the Superba Theatre, the week of March 20 to 26.

Yours very truly,

Cincinnati Mayor Sees "Four Horsemen"

Mayor John Galvin, of Cincinnati, Ohio, while in New York recently, viewed "The Four Horsemen" at the Lyric theatre. He urged Metro officials to arrange for an early showing of the picture in Cincinnati and expressed his pleasure as follows:

"It is the greatest picture I have ever seen. Its dramatic power is something wonderful and it affected me just as much as though I were witnessing a spoken performance. It stirs the emotions and I am not ashamed to say that parts of that picture brought a lump to my throat and tears to my eyes."

Two New Metro Films Are Announced

Metro announces two new stellar vehicles. "The Woman Next Door," selected for May Allison, will be filmed under the working title of "Dated." Bayard Veiller will direct the production. Viola Dana will be presented in "Life's Darn Funny," which was written by Christine J. Slade for the Saturday Evening Post under the title of "Caretakers Within." Dallas Fitzgerald will again direct Miss Dana. Production work on "Life's Darn Funny" has just been started in Hollywood.

"Home Brewed Youth" on Goldwyn List

"Home Brewed Youth" is the latest Capitol comedy to be released by Goldwyn in a series of humorous satires on modern life. George Bunny has the leading role with Estelle Harrison opposite.

Geo. Beban in Seattle Week of April 19

George Beban's next appearance in connection with his super-special production, "One Man in a Million," which is being distributed by Robertson-Cole, will be at the Liberty Theatre, Seattle, during the week of April 19th. This engagement will mark Mr. Beban's arrival on the Coast, after a transcontinental trip which started January 8th at Newark, N. J., and which continued through the East, South, Middle-West and Far West. Everywhere exhibitors have reported to Robertson-Cole record business on "One Man in a Million," states Robertson-Cole.

Production Mgr. Cast in Important Role

Vitagraph announces that Wilfrid North, production manager of its West Coast studios, will play the role of J. Rufus Wallingford in the forthcoming production of "The Son of Wallingford," written by Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester. Tom Gallery has been engaged to play the part of the "son," Jimmy Wallingford. Mr. Chester, states Vitagraph, selected Mr. North for the role of Wallingford, Sr., because North fits admirably into the role as conceived by Mr. Chester when writing the story. Mr. Chester had interviewed fifty applicants without finding one fitted to the part.

"Dream Street" to Be "Big Four" Issue

In a statement recently issued, D. W. Griffith announces that his new production, "Dream Street," will be released through United Artists. Mr. Griffith declares that the picture will be presented first in New York City, at the Central theatre, April 7th, with special exploitation. Similar showings will possibly be given at one or two other large cities, says Griffith, but following these the picture will be delivered to the United Artists' Corporation for release on April 25th.

Breaks Precedent with "Now or Never"

Associated Exhibitors reports that Sam Harding, of Kansas City, broke all precedents by playing Harold Lloyd's "Now or Never" day and date in the Liberty and the Doric. Says Mr. Harding in his communication to Associated's home office:

"Running a comedy in two downtown houses in Kansas City at one time is an innovation. To feature a comedy in the manner in which we have done is very unusual, but apparently we use good judgment, if yesterday's and today's business is any criterion."

ABOUT PLAYERS

UNA TREVELYAN, who has been absent from the screen for several month because of illness, is shortly to appear in important roles in J. L. Frothingham productions released by Hodkinson. Miss Trevelyan will be remembered for her work in "The Devil's Passkey." She also played the feminine lead in the Lois Weber Production for Paramount which was originally titled "What Women Love." In these two productions Miss Trevelyan interpreted an entirely new screen role for a blonde, appearing in both of these productions in the part of a siren. Heretofore producers seem to have been of the opinion that all vamp or heavy parts should be taken by brunettes. The success attained in the two parts led to a long term contract which was entered into as soon as Miss Trevelyan recovered her health.

Edward Phillips, who scored an individual success as the juvenile lead in the Mary Pickford picture "The Love Light," will also be seen in "Just Round the Corner." For six months, without any intermission, Mr. Phillips has been kept busy, and was recently in the cast of the Edward Jose production for Vitagraph, starring Alice Joyce.

Cameron Coffey, famous boy diver and hailed as "the nerviest kid in America" is now in motion pictures, his latest appearance being in "The Little Clown," Realart's latest Star Franchise production with Mary Miles Minter. Coffey carries the juvenile role in support of Miss Minter.

"The Little Clown" presents Miss Minter as a child of the circus many of the scenes being laid under the "Big top." Coffey's connection with the picture is, therefore, not an unusual one, since the acrobatic stunts of circus performers are not unlike his own diving feats.

James Harrison continues to be among those working in Manhattan studios. After completing his work with Constance Talmadge, he was immediately engaged for the Justine Johnstone picture "Agatha's Aunt," in which he will be seen in his usual wholesome and acknowledged good work.

Bessie Love is engaged upon another series of "Good night" stories for children. The young actress varies her screen activity with writing and her first series of bed-time tales is now in course of publication.

Bobby Agnew who has been playing juvenile leads with Norma Talmadge in "The Passion Flower" and "The Sign on the Door" has been retained by that company for Miss Talmadge's next production "The Wonderful Thing" under the direction of Herbert Brenon. Mr. Agnew has certainly proven his versatility in the various characterizations he has been associated with and promises to more than fulfill the expectations of those who are enthusiastic in their predictions as to his attainments.

Dora Mills Adams, who remains on salary pending the resumption of the producing activities of "Determination," stepped out of the role of the English gentlewoman, for whom she was admirably cast, to become an American picture artiste, during the hours the Motion Picture Directors Ball was in progress. Mrs. Adams, for the third time officiated in taking the names of guests present in the book which is guarded as a sacred keepsake at the Association headquarters from one social event to the next, carrying off the honors in her characteristic way, which has been the means of her having been selected for many pictures as a leader of society.

Doraldina, celebrated dancer and motion picture star, whose characteristic dances delighted the guests present at the M. P. D. A. Ball

Lucy Fox, considered one of the foremost beauties on the screen, and who has last been seen in the Realart production "Something Different" under the direction of Roy Neill has just signed a year and one half contract with Pathe. Miss Fox's contract reads that she is to play the leading role in "A Chance in a Million" under the direction of George B. Seitz: In the next production she will co-star with Charles Hutchinson and following that she will be starred. This comes as very interesting news to the profession who have closely followed this dashing young brunette and who have likewise been interested to know whom Pathe has chosen as their new star.

In the first Whitman Bennett Production which will be personally directed by the producer, the principal male role in the all-star cast has been entrusted to Percy Marmont. The picture is based on Helen Ware's famous vehicle "The Price" which has won all the standbys of the American dramatic world. The filming of the production has commenced this week at Bennett's studio in Yonkers and is rapidly proceeding on a continuity that closely follows the original play. The part which is being created by Percy Marmont will not only call for the high degree of artistic performance for which this actor is noted but will also be in startling contrast to his two most recent appearances on the screen—opposite Norma Talmadge in "The Branded Woman" and as the leading male player of "Dead Men Tell No Tales."

ABOUT DIRECTORS

ALTHOUGH Colin Campbell, who directed Sessue Hayakawa in his latest Robertson-Cole production "The Swamp," is one of the pioneers in the film industry, he was long connected with the legitimate stage as a playwright and producer with headquarters in New York and Chicago. He also established stock companies in many of the larger cities throughout the country. Col. William Selig persuaded Campbell to desert the speaking stage for the silent drama. While with Selig, Campbell made "The Spoilers," "The Garden of Allah," "The Crisis," "The Still Alarm," "The Law of North 65," "Little Orphan Annie" and "The Hoosier Romance." Then years later he made "The Sea Wolf" for Selig, which was known as the greatest film made at that time.

Campbell received his first stage training when he was a student at the University of Edinburgh, Scotland. Later he joined a Scotch theatrical company that visited America, and made a tour of the States with them, remaining here permanently.

This marks Colin Campbell's tenth year in the motion picture industry during which time he has directed two hundred photoplays. Most notable amongst them have been "The Yellow Dog" and "In the Carquinez Woods" for Universal; "The Thunderbolt" for First National; "The Corsican Brothers" for United Pictures.

For the past year Sessue Hayakawa has had his exclusive services in "The First Born," "When Lights are Low," "Black Roses" and "The Swamp." Before starting as mentor for Hayakawa he made "The Beach of Dreams" with Edith Storey; "Big Happiness," starring Dustin Farnum, and "When Dawn Came" an all-star production.

Kenneth L. Eagon, late of Pinnacle Comedies, is considering an offer to write and direct "Dizzy Dumbbell" Comedies for International Photoplay Company, Chicago, and if he accepts, may endeavor to make Lake Michigan noted for its good form in bathing beauties, an integral part. Mr. Eagon is also working on a multiple-reel dramatic film story, called "Humanity."

George Terwilliger, whose last production was with Marion Davies in "The Bride of Kenmare," has been engaged by Realart to direct Alice Brady's forthcoming production "Little Italy" by Frederick and Fanny Hatton. Mr. Terwilliger is responsible for such successes as "The Sporting Duchess" with Alice Brady and "The Misleading Lady" with Bert Lytell.

"Made in Heaven" Due for Early Release

Goldwyn announces Tom Moore's new starring vehicle, "Made in Heaven," for early release. The picture was adapted from William Hurlbut's stage-comedy of the same title. Mr. Moore appears in the role of a New York fireman. Helen Chadwick plays opposite the star. Molly Malone, Renee Adoree, Kate Lester and Al Filson are also seen in the cast.

Is Elmer Clifton An Independent?

PERSISTENT rumor that Elmer Clifton, long an important factor in the David Wark Griffith organization, is about to sever his connections therewith and according to reports, will head his own producing organization, although it has also been said that he will possibly direct one or two feature productions for a distinguished star of the legitimate stage.

Mr. Clifton declines to affirm or deny reports, despite the fact that it is known he has been recipient of several interesting offers. After nine years with Mr. Griffith, during which time he was associated with the production of "The Birth of a Nation," "Intolerance," "The Girl Who Stayed Home," "The Idol Dancer," "The Love Flower" and "'Way Down East," as well as the forthcoming Griffith production, "Dream Street," Mr. Clifton personally made the nine best known and most popular Dorothy Gish comedies, "Battling Jane," "The Hope Chest," "Boots," "I'll Get Him Yet" and "Penny Polly," which all stand to his credit. Mr. Clifton is perhaps best remembered for his striking characterization of the mountain youth opposite Constance Talmadge in the Babylonian episode of "Intolerance," and as Philip Stone, opposite Lillian Gish in "The Birth of a Nation."

Mr. Clifton has had a remarkable record as a director and an actor. It was he who brought Priscilla Dean to stardom through the Universal production of "The Two-Souled Woman," which was her most important step toward fame. The story, which was adapted from Gelett Burgess' "The White Cat," cost exactly $4,600 to make, $1,000 of this going toward the purchase of the story. The picture was "shot" in eight days, established Miss Dean and was a remunerative experience for Universal.

Mr. Clifton has many interesting theories of motion picture production, which he has developed during his years with Mr. Griffith. He had radical theories as to the story and as to the physical details of production, particularly lighting. His forthcoming plans are predicted to carry a unique interest to the motion picture industry.

George Walsh to Be Directed by Brother

George Walsh is going to enjoy the opportunity so long anticipated by him, and be able to prove that he can do something besides taking long distance jumps, and excelling in athletic demonstrations. There have been those who have realized for a long time that Mr. Walsh was endowed with considerable histrionic ability, and after a long career of picture making in which college life and athletics have been featured, Mr. Walsh is to play the leading masculine role in a big feature picture, directed by R. A. Walsh, who may be depended upon to give his brother a vehicle that will show off his talent to the best advantage. There is a big demand for a story of the wilds such as this one promises, and only a man with the ability to endure, such as the popular athlete would be eligible to undertake the work the production requires.

George Walsh's following will be glad to know that he is again to appear in pictures, after a temporary absence from the screen, especially those who know what the combination of George and R. A. Walsh is able to turn out. Great development of George Walsh's talent as an actor, is expected under the skilled direction of his brother, and their combined activities are predicted to bring about a success.

Jack Holt is Loaned to Play Goldwyn Role

Jack Holt, the popular young leading man, has been loaned to Goldwyn to act the leading male role in Rita Weiman's first original photoplay, "The Grim Comedian." "The Grim Comedian" will be released as a Frank Lloyd Production.

"Characterization" Up to Director

Impressively revealing human character in action is the sum total of the motion picture director's opportunities and responsibilities, according to Robert G. Vignola, director of Vignola Productions for Cosmopolitan-Paramount.

"To succeed in actionizing human character upon the screen is to find the goal for which all the director's means are an end," said Mr. Vignola. "Stripped of all essentials and details the fact remains that the fundamental success of a motion picture depends upon the proper delineation of character. A dramatic character is one with a personality which dominates the plot, or is itself dominated by the plot or is in mutual reaction with the plot. This individuality is that something which differentiates between persons.

"The main problem in the motion picture is to give the audience sufficient knowledge of the character to become personally interested in him. Without this intimacy there can be no social emotion, no dramatic sympathy.

"It is a simple but truly effective cinematic delineation of a spiritual invisibility which distinguishes a character in a genuine dramatic situation, and it proves that they are wrong who claim that the motion picture cannot undertake to depict the inner nature of human beings or convey the drama of souls."

Bartholomae to Write Another

Having recently seen Florence Reed's picturization of his story, "The Black Panther's Cub," for W. K. Ziegfeld, Philip Bartholomae proceeded to write another original screen story. This is "The Outside Woman," on which Wanda Hawley is now engaged for her program as a Realart star. Originally one of the most successful of the younger American playwrights—his stage works include "Over Night," "Very Good Eddie," "When Dreams Come True" and "Over the Top." During the course of his film career, in addition to heading Pathe's Scenario Department, Mr. Bartholomae has written and adapted over a score of film successes.

REALART

Ewart Adamson, a Scotch writer and cartoonist, has been engaged as a continuity writer, and Aubrey St. Auffer, the manager of the Western States Liberty theatres during the war, has been engaged as reader and title writer by Elmer Harris.

Frank O'Connor, former assistant to Director William D. Taylor, will direct "Everything for Sale" by Hector Turnbull.

CHRISTIE

Renewed activities are reported in the Christie studios. Four companies directed by Al Christie, William Beaudine, Scott Sidney and Frederick Sullivan, are working. A two reel comedy has been started by Al Christie featuring Dorothy De Vore.

GOLDWYN

Reginald Barker is next to film "Who Shall Judge," by Gouverneur Morris, the original title of which was "The Hangman."

Richard Dix will play the lead in the first Mary Roberts Rinehart original screen story, "The Glorious Fool," to be directed by Mason Hopper.

Helene Chadwick will play opposite Tom Moore in "Made in Heaven." The cast includes DeWit Jennings, Dick Rosson, and Knott.

METRO

The unit system has been inaugurated with the return of Treasurer Joseph Engle from New York on last Saturday. The first unit to begin work is that of Maxwell Karger and Bert Lytell who are producing "A Trip to Paradise."

Rex Ingram begins a Balzac story next week and Veiller original story the week following.

UNIVERSAL

Messers. Laemmle, Cochran, and Abe Stern, were hosts of Universal employees numbering three thousand at Santa Sussanna Ranch recently, which has been leased by Universal for a period of years. The first annual barbacue with all the trimmings was given.

Lyons and Moran, who have played together for eight years, have dissolved their association. Lyons is leaving Universal and Moran is remaining to be featured alone in two-reel comedies.

"What Can You Expect," a magazine story, is to be the next vehicle for Gladys Walton. Harry Harris will direct.

George Larkin who plays the lead opposite Eileen Sedgwick in the serial "The Terror Trails," will be featured in a series of two-reel Mounted Police subjects until Miss Sedgwick recovers from appendicitis.

Peter B. Kyne has signed a contract to write a series of special stories for Universal to feature Harry Carey.

"Pacific Storms," a story by Fred Granville, will be the next vehicle for Frank Mayo. It is a narrative of the South Sea Islands.

VITAGRAPH

Proposed improvements now contracted for the Vitagraph studio provide for a complete new lighting plant which will cost approximately $50,000. This will give the studio direct current lighting system and overhead trunk lines. New concrete building is now being erected for new dynamos and generators which have been received at the Coast.

Complete cast for the George Randolph Chester production of "The Son of Wallingford" includes Wilfred North, Tom Gallery, George Webb, Priscilla Bonner, Antrim Short, Florence Hart, Liala Leslie, Van Dyke Brooks and others.

Vitagraph officers are very proud of the pledge made members of the National Association of Motion Picture Industry as contained in the fourteen articles of agreement respecting what should and should not go into future productions and for this reason the next serial story for William Duncan and Edith Johnston is being rewritten to conform to the agreement. For this reason it will be impossible for director-actor Duncan to begin work on his next serial for several weeks and at this time it is planned he shall produce a five-reel production.

LASKY

The cast for "The Lifted Veil," starring Ethel Clayton, under the direction of William D. Taylor, is exceptionally big and includes Charles Meredith, Earl Schenck, Fontaine La Rue, Lillian Rich, Spottiswood Aitken, Charles French, Winifred Kingston, and Herbert Fourtier.

Cecil DeMille has started filming a production with Dorothy Dalton, Mildred Harris, Conrad Nagel, Elliott Dexter in the oil fields at Huntington Beach.

HERE AND THERE

Lois Weber starts production of an original story with this week with a cast including Louis Calhern, Clair Windsor, Mona Lisa and others.

Louis Weber's "What Do Men Want" is being tried out in small northern California towns. It will be released following "Two Wise Wives," which is set for May.

Cyrus J. Williams is back in New York to see how the Tom Santschi Westerns are going.

Peggy Hyland has come back to our town and says she will never leave California again.

Oliver Morosco Organization announces there will be no "between picture" periods. Slippy McGee is the next.

Florence Lawrence has a good case against her press agent for he always refers to her as the former Biograph beauty.

Dave Griffith, Thompson Buchanan and Tod Browning are all from Kentucky, which is saying a lot for Kentucky.

The name of Bosworth Incorporated, is to come back to the screen but this time it will be Hobart Bosworth, Inc.

King Vidor liked the name Dupont so well that he engaged father and son. L. B. as Art Director and Max, son, as cameraman.

Norman Dawn wants realism so he is going to make the exteriors for "My Lady of the Island" at Catalina Island.

A spring poet named Billy Hodges has burst forth into song because it took Nazimova seven days to die for "Camille."

Since Bert Lytell received "A Message From Mars" he is going to make "A Trip to Paradise." Quick, Watson, the needle.

A lot of Los Angeles society wandered out to Universal City and took part in the Monte Carlo set. None of them lost any money.

Leo Pierson, a former actor, later an executive of Actors' Association, is now staff efficiency expert for the Willatt's at Culver City.

Clarke Irvine recently took part in a twenty-five mile race and he is reported to be on the way still or still on the way.

Now that we are informed that George Loane Tucker's "Miracle Man" has gross booking receipts of two million and one-half to date, we wonder why producers do not make more "Miracle Man" films.

Bill Lord Wright and Ford Beebe were framing a meller scene for "The White Horseman" serial when a cameraman fell through the skylight and broke their typewriter. A thriller is predicted.

Will Rogers claims "A Bashful Romeo" is the best picture he ever made because it is the shortest. "I have to wear tights," he said. "and show my legs. I was in the Follies for four years."

Because Reg. Barker did not send the troupe to lunch until 2 o'clock one day an extra girl asked him, "Do you know what happened to Mac-Swiney?" which is indeed good repartee for an extra girl.

Bill Keefe tells us that woodpeckers dulled their intellect trying to make a hole in a concrete tree George Kern had on the set which may be considered another test for realism for pictures of today.

Adam Hull Shirk wandered up the Coast with Wally Reid to Vancouver and now he claims he could never imagine anyone being so popular with so many girls at one time. They simply went mad over Wally, he told Hokum.

Bill Desmond Taylor had nothing to do but make speeches against Blue Laws, and Censorship at the rate of five a week while he is giving the final touches to Elsie Ferguson's picture, "Sacred and Profane Love," editing "Wealth," starring Ethel Clayton and watching progress on his next script from the Henry Arthur Jones play, "The Lifted Veil."

Now that Bebe Daniels has been sentenced to ten days in the Orange County Jail for driving fifty-six miles per hour it has been suggested that some girl with movie aspirations could secure an engagement at exceptional salary in doubling for Bebe for this one instance. Bebe's press agent says she never has a double no matter how hazardous the scene, which is more or less of an old line.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the last sixteen weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to December 18, 1920.

"Wallace Reid has another winner here."—M. P. News.
Exhibitors Comment.—"Fine picture, pleasing, entertaining, and brought good business." "Wallace Reid went over big in this picture. Our patrons thought it was one of the best of this popular star's productions. Played to excellent business the week preceding New Year's." "We consider this one of the best box office attractions we have ever played. Did exceptional business during its run at this house and is an excellent picture." "Very good picture, full of entertaining points. Did good business." "One of the most pleasing pictures we have ever shown. Business was very good." "Good enough for a second week holdover. Business extra good both weeks. Best Wallace Reid picture ever seen." "Certainly good. Business fine all week. Audiences well pleased." "Very good picture which held down big business for a week." "Very good. Good business for entire week." "Two days to big business. Very good."

CHEATER REFORMED, THE (FOX) WILLIAM RUSSELL.....JAN. 15
"William Russell has an entertaining crook picture here."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Played Holy Week to the usual bad business. Not a good picture and no one praised it."

CHICKENS (INCE-PARAMOUNT) DOUGLAS MACLEAN.....MAR. 26
"Forced comedy and hokum never ring the bell."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Brought average business. Fair picture." "Played this on the program with the Universal feature 'If Only Jim,' starring Harry Carey to two days of extra big business." "Not as good as previous McLean-May productions and the 'feminine half' of this combination was sadly missed. Still this picture was good and drew well."

CINDERELLA'S TWIN (METRO) VIOLA DANA.....JAN. 8
"Just misses being very commonplace."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"This little star always draws well for me, and this was not as clever as 'The Chorus Girl's Romance,' business was almost as good. Consider it a good business-getter." "Fairly entertaining and patrons were pleased. Good business." "The old Cinderella story, strictly modernized and made fairly plausible. Business only fair."

COAST OF OPPORTUNITY, THE (BRUNTON-HODKINSON) J. WARREN KERRIGAN.....DEC. 25
"Picturesque story with Kerrigan in heroic role."—M. P. News.

COLORADO (UNIVERSAL) FRANK MAYO.....FEB. 19
"Mayo's latest strong in action."—M. P. News.

CONCERT, THE (GOLDWYN) SPECIAL CAST.....MAR. 5
"Another stage vehicle adaptation which flops."—M. P. News.

CONNECTICUT YANKEE IN KING ARTHUR'S COURT, A (FOX) SPECIAL CAST.....FEB. 12
"Mark Twain modernized in an appealing picture."—M. P. News.

COUSIN KATE (VITAGRAPH) ALICE JOYCE.....FEB. 12
"Alice Joyce has strong personality in 'Cousin Kate.'"—M. P. News.

DANGEROUS BUSINESS (FIRST NATIONAL) CONSTANCE TALMADGE.....DEC. 18
"Rather frail but fairly amusing."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Fine production which seemed to please and brought fine business." "Not as good as some of Miss Talmadge's previous vehicles, but satisfying." "A good picture and brought more than usual business.' "This sure did go over big and deserved it for it's an interesting picture throughout." "Picture brought fine business. Very entertaining." "This one went over big and the box-office showed large receipts. Just seemed to bring 'em in, and they were well pleased with it." "Went over well, as is always the case with a Talmadge picture in my house. Some of the older folks thought it went a little too far in some scenes, and others frankly characterized it as 'raw.' But it got the money, and that's the acid test, I suppose." "One of Constance Talmadge's best and went over big at this house. Did splendid business for week."

"Very artistic with Arliss superb in his screen debut."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"One of the photoplay masterpieces of the age. Wonderful production. Excellent acting. But a picture that will appeal only to the discriminating." "A picture that aroused the curiosity of the public. A good house all week. An artistic production."

"De Mille scores another ten strike; a great audience picture."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Elaborately produced and entertaining production that went over for a two week run to capacity business." "Fine picture that drew enormous crowds during opening week of this theatre." "They were terribly disappointed with this. Did not think it lived up to 'Something to Think About' and 'Why Change Your Wife?'" "Broke the attendance record. Greatly talked about. Continued for a second week." "This picture drew well and brought excellent business." "Held over a second week to excellent crowd. Pleased everyone who saw it." "DeMille's pictures always draw immense crowds. This was proved interesting, but not startling. Patrons like the atmosphere of affluence which permeates these pictures. Constantly large attendance." "This one packed the house every performance. A very fine entertaining picture and patrons seemed well pleased." "A fairly good picture with business about as usual." "Drew a capacity house all week. Considered one of the best attractions that has been produced in months." "Very good. The people came the first day in response to wide advertising and they told their neighbors it was a good picture." "A very good picture. Handicapped by strong opposition."

"Play seems old-fashioned as picture."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Typical Burke picture, very pleasing, fair business due to holidays." "Just plain trash—it's a pity a good star and real money are expended on such drivel." "Average business. No new angles throughout the entire five reels. Photography and direction good, cast fair, but story weak from being overworked." "Had poor business with this one for entire week." "Very trashy and silly. Audience hardly enthused. Business only fair." "Billie Burke does not draw for me any more and this one meant nothing to me."

"Interesting story of a crook's redemption."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Good picture which brought more than usual business." "Very entertaining feature which the popularity of Thomas Meighan with our patrons helps to put over in good shape. Did excellent business." "Thomas Meighan always draws well for me and this picture was no exception. Business was fair and comments on the picture showed interest, though not the enthusiastic applause of the other pictures which I have played with this star." "Meighan is a great favorite here and will always pack a house. This vehicle is satisfactory, but a startling winner." "Picture pleased generally and drew well. Business fine." "Not up to Meighan's standard. His own work excellent, but support poor and not worthy of him. Business good, for Meighan is a great drawing card for me." "This one went over big and continued so during run. Audiences well pleased with the story." "Thomas Meighan always sure box office winner at this house and this picture, clean and wholesome throughout, was enjoyed by everyone." "This is rather an average picture. It started with big business but this decreased towards the end of the week."

"Interesting picture on a familiar theme."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Big picture, box office receipts increasing each day." "Somewhat different to the usual Young pictures, but pleased about fifty-fifty. Consider it her best, but my patrons didn't agree with me. She was not as pretty as usual, but far more interesting." "Very fine picture which should go over well wherever Clara Kimball Young is liked. Bad weather cut down our attendance below average during week's run." "We thought picture up to Clara Kimball Young's standard but played to poor business for week which we attribute to bad weather." "Uninteresting story with Clara Kimball Young as the bright spot. Business only fair." "Just an average picture. About usual business."

IF ONLY JIM (UNIVERSAL) HARRY CAREY.....MAR. 5
"Carey's latest is amusing and entertaining."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Great business with this one. Capacity houses. great deal of word-of-mouth advertising." "Played this feature on the program with the Paramount production 'Chickens,' featuring Douglas MacLean, to extra big business for two days."

Architects Give Unusual Attention to Accoustics

James Theatre Is Designed to Regulate Transmission of Sound

Columbus can now hold her head high in the motion picture world and boast of one of the most complete and magnificent cinema palaces in the county. Through the efforts of Mr. W. M. James and the architects, the people have been presented with their new home for photoplays which will prove to be a revelation to the theatregoer.

The James theatre will be lavish in decoration, rich and refined in furnishings and enormous in size and bids to rank with the best in the country. It was only a short time ago when we stood in wonderment at the enclosure which screened the building operation from the public, but today this has all been removed and the doors will soon open to the waiting citizens who have been anxious to view the completed edifice. The owners, who have made it possible to give to their city this great monument, have sensed the long felt want of the people and are proud to join with them in the formal opening of their new playhouse. For over a year the James theatre has been growing steadily, and during this time in excess of $1,000,000 has been expended on the construction work itself. The interior decorations, its rich furnishings and its modern and complete equipment of various types have added another quarter of a million to the cost of this undertaking. The elaborateness, beauty and magnitude of the theatre is surpassed by few other theatres in this country.

The main floor of the auditorium, with its seating capacity of over 1,750 people, in itself is greater than the average so-called large theatre of the bigger cities, and with the seating capacity of the balcony over the 1,100 mark, and the additional seats in the state boxes and loggias, the total seating capacity will be over 3,000. To comprehend the true size of this theatre one must visit an average large modern theatre, whose seating capacity usually ranges from 1,200 to 1,500. This will give some idea of the magnitude of the auditorium.

This structure is fireproof throughout, the entire frame being of structural steel and reinforced concrete, and is built as solid and substantial as the pyramid of Cheops. In addition to its fire proof construction, the exit facilities are fifty per cent greater than required by law, the exits and fire escapes leading directly to the street or to fireproof courts and passages which safeguard the public to the outside. The safety of the patrons is one of the greatest features of the building and has been given an unusual amount of study. Each exit from the theatre balcony and mezzanine has been provided with a separate fire escape, so that there will be no congestion or confusion whatever in case it is necessary to use same.

In respect to the arrangement of the building, in addition to the immense auditorium, the stage is one of the most complete and will be arranged so that at any future time vaudeville or road productions of any nature can be shown up on same. Fly galleries, with their pin rails, gridiron, sprinkler system and dressing rooms will be complete and perfect as is possible to make them. At the present time it is not the intention of the owner to endeavor to use this stage for anything except pictures and a limited number of entertainers. The architects have, therefore, provided a magnificent cyclorama which screens the working ends of the stage. The picture screen has been treated so that it becomes a part of the background of the cyclorama. The cyclorama is handsomely enriched with ornamental plaster panels, cornices and the ceiling is semi-elliptic in form. Responsibility for the success of the scenic effect, the cyclorama and the lighting of the same goes to Mr. Joseph Urban, America's foremost scenery painter and producer of scenic effects. Mr. Urban is the creator of all the ideas for the scenery used and the scenic effects produced for the Follies and also the complete work for the Metropolitan Opera House. Flood light galleries have been installed over the top of the cyclorama and from the cove in back of the main cornices, the entire cyclorama will be illuminated by the system of flood lighting, giving a burst of light which can be changed to produce sun light, night light, snow scenes, etc.

The stage is arranged as a terraced garden, with its beautiful balustrades, flower boxes a fountains. The interior of the auditorium artistically treated and decorated to achieve t most intimate effect. Intimacy is the paramou requirement for the success of every auditoriu The architecture of the cyclorama on the sta and that of the auditorium has been treated one. The stately fluted columns, with gorgeo ornamental caps, support a highly enriched a well proportioned entablature, which enhanc the beauty of the auditorium and binds togeth the entire composition.

Rising between the beautiful columns in t proscenium treatment and spanning its way past cornices into the enriched sounding boa is an arched opening crowned by a cartouc which in itself is a work of art and is w deserving of the prominent position that holds. At the base from where this arch opening springs is the state box, supported ornamental brackets, the face of the box bei adorned with plaster relief. The valance these arches are of velour with beautiful fe toons with border at the bottom of the san and radiating from the center, at which poi is appliqued a group of beautiful figures, s radiants of gold galloon which extend to t outer border of the arch. The entire valance covered with a silk net of old gold. The lu caded draperies below the same are artistica draped and tied back with silk cords, the colc blending themselves most harmoniously wi the decorations and the pastel tones of t auditorium. The ceiling is arched and pa elled with plaster relief in the panels and t ornamentation on the sounding board is cle erly executed by skilled artisans. The perfo ated sections in the main ceiling and in t sounding board are the speaking openings f the organ which are concealed behind the san

The ceiling over the balcony has a dor which is over 60 feet in diameter and is rich relief, as is also the frieze in the main corni below the same, which extends back to the re line of the auditorium in the balcony. Th dome is illuminated by means of concealed lighting and which gives a beautiful glow rather than a sharp light in the auditorium.

As we enter the auditorium from the lobby one is impressed by the height of the ceiling of the foyer, which in nearly all theatres is very low and uninteresting. This is obtained by constructing a well in the mezzanine just below the balcony floor. This well is semi-circular in plan and gives a full two-story effect to the foyer. A beautiful ornamental bronze balustrade is covered with velvet velour. The base of the entire auditorium, which forms the foundation for the architectural composition, is of Verde antique marble. The floor of the auditorium is carpeted with a heavy velvet Saxony carpet. The architects and decorators have skillfully selected the carpets, hangings, furnishings and tapestries, so that the character and color of the same in every way link themselves together with the beautiful pastel and polychrome shades in the decorations. The entire woodwork, ornamental and plain plaster work has been glazed down with Vandyke glaze and the gold leaf work burnished and background of same picked out with colored glass. The stairways leading from the foyer to the mezzanine are of white Italian marble with the marble skirting and curbs. The balustrades on these stairs are hand wrought iron with walnut hand rails. The detail of the rail around the edge of the mezzanine has been carried in absolute keeping with that of the stairways. At the rear of the seating of the auditorium is a handsome screen with wood columns rising from a marble base, and this rail is panelled to a height of 36 inches. The upper portion is plate glass, the top of which is cut with a graceful profile.

Following the contour of the well opening is a spacious promenade, over which is suspended a richly decorated dome, well lighted by means of concealed lighting, and from the center of the same is suspended a gorgeous crystal fixture. From this promenade we enter the balcony by means of two passageways, spacious and beautiful furnished lounges, ladies' retiring rooms and smoking rooms. These rooms are furnished with heavily upholstered divans, chairs of all sizes and types and beautiful tables. The rooms are lavish in decoration and exceedingly rich in furnishings. The floors are carpeted with the best quality carpets and are well padded. The hangings on the windows are rich in color and unusual care has been exercised in the selection of the art reproductions which adorn the walls. Toilet rooms are spacious and are wainscoted with white Italian marble and the floors are of terrazzo, with a six-inch wide border of a different shade from the body of the floor.

The comfort of the patrons has been considered in every move that was made by the owners and architects. The mezzanine will prove the most popular meeting place for friends, both before and after the performance. At the front of the balcony are built a series of boxes which can be reserved for theatre parties. This is a very novel feature and certainly will help greatly in making this theatre a success.

Every seat throughout the entire house is unusually large and comfortable and all have an unobstructed view of the entire stage. The projection room is at the rear of the balcony, and is equipped with two Type "S" Simplex machines, a spot-light and a double stereopticon. The distance of the throw from the speaking opening of the projection booth to the picture screen is 140 feet.

In the main ceiling of the auditorium are very expensive mural paintings, each one being in itself a work of art. Were they in gold frames, hanging on the walls of our art institutions, they would certainly draw an unusual amount of attention from the art lovers, as the finest men, the country has produced, have been employed for this work and have spent many hours in developing these masterpieces.

The heating and ventilating system installed in this theatre is one of the most complete and finest and effective in the country. The matter of ventilation is very often overlooked and particularly neglected in a great many theatres and should be given as much consideration as any other portion of the building. It so seems that in the erection of the majority of the theatres by the time the heating systems are installed the construction funds have been so greatly reduced that a considerable saving is necessary in order to complete the theatre, therefore for financial reasons, the ventilating is ofttimes greatly reduced, and naturally the comfort of the patrons is impaired. This, however, is not the case with the James theatre. The foremost thought in the minds of the designers was for the comfort of its patrons. Fresh air cooled and washed is driven into the theatre by large motor driven fans of sufficient capacity to change the air content of the auditorium twenty times each hour. Exhaust fans are installed for removing the vitiated air from the floors and from the ceiling at the rear balcony. Special attention has been given to the method of forcing the air into the auditorium. In order to avoid objectionable draughts this has been accomplished by using large grilles in the main ceiling, thereby thoroughly diffusing the air currents before they reach the zone occupied by the audience. An added feature is the supplying of fresh air to the lobby thereby assuring those who may be waiting for the next performance of a comfortable sojourn in this portion of the building. The toilet rooms, smoking rooms, lounges and rest rooms are thoroughly ventilated. The mechanical equipment throughout is of the best and most modern and efficient type. The electrical effects are novel and effective. Concealed colored lights have been arranged in the auditorium to synchronize with those on the cyclorama, the entire effect being operated in sympathy with the moods of the selection by the orchestra and with those suggested by the feature picture of the program. The electrical equipment throughout is of the most modern type and the installation of picture machines and equipment in the projection room is one of the best installations in the country. All wires are concealed in the constructions, making a very pleasing effect to one desirous of inspecting this, one of the most important factors in the proper projection of a motion picture. Telephone and signal systems are installed to insure proper co-operation of all departments and giving to the patrons an uninterrupted program; in fact, it has been the aim of the owner and designers to give the people of Columbus the best equipped showhouse in the country.

The acoustics and sight lines, the most important features of any auditorium, has been given an unusual amount of study. The auditorium has been designed to carry the delicate shades of modulated tone with unusual precision. Acoustics from the time of the Greek and Roman amphitheatres down to the present day, have been an unusually perplexing problem. We know not whether the ancient auditoriums are theoretically designed or not, although we know that these places of assembly were excellent from an acoustical standpoint. However, they were without roof and quite different from the problems we have to consider in this day. Models of the interior of the auditorium were made and photographs of the sound and its reflections were made and the success of the auditorium was a foregone conclusion. An abundance of sound usually prevails in any auditorium, but the regulation of the same is the problem that must be confronted, and the satisfactory solution of this has been made by the architect. Every person occupying a seat in the auditorium will have a clear and unobstructed view of the stage at all times, whether the act be played in the center of the stage, at either side or at the footlights. The decorations and furnishings, as well as the hangings, draperies and carpets have been executed, furnished and installed by William Baumgarten & Co., of New York City. The Baumgarten company are specialists in this line of work.

C. Howard Crane, architect; Elmer George Kiehler, associate, and Cyril E. Schley prepared the plans and supervised the construction of the James theatre and have made a very careful study of the interior decorations and finishings.

Allens Active In and Around Cleveland

The Allens will have their first representation in Cleveland early in the spring—not later than the beginning of April—when two new Allen houses will be opened to the public at practically the same time. This official announcement of a definite date for the opening of the big down-town as well as for the west side house was made this week by Frank Zartmann, general agent for Jules and Jay J. Allen in Cleveland.

The down-town house, to be known as the Allen, has 4,000 seats, equitably distributed on two floors, each with a tier of boxes. There are several features new to Cleveland theatre construction incorporated in the building, such as a spacious rotunda, with an adjoining tea room, where tea and light lunches will be served. Fifty tables are being provided. There will also be a special corps of waitresses to look after the wants of the hungry movie patrons. Opposite the tea room, on the other side of the rotunda, is the men's lounge, the largest of its kind in any motion picture theatre. The Allens are further adding interest to their house by the announcement of a thirty-piece orchestra as a special feature. This is double the size of any orchestra now existing in Cleveland at a photoplay house. Phil Spitalny, well known musical leader of the Metropolitan theatre, Cleveland, will direct the Allen orchestra.

The Allen theatre, according to Mr. Zartman, will follow the policy of other Allen theatres, and will present a straight picture program, although the house is supplied with a fully equipped stage. Admission prices will hover around the fifty-cent mark. Like other of the Allen chain, the Cleveland Allen theatre will be conducted on a conservative basis. The Allens do not go in for exploitation, special stage sets or prologues. They do not expect to introduce them into their Cleveland house, either, relying entirely upon newspaper publicity as their advertising medium.

Havana's Best Known Theatre

The illustrations on this page will correct the general impression that theatres outside the United States are below the local houses in their appointments. The Fausto, which is the one shown here, has the distinction of being the finest house in Havana and the appearance of the theatre front and the lobby would seem to corroborate this general claim.

Mr. A. L. Pratchett, general manager of the Caribbean Film Corp., is managing director of the Fausto. He is also the manager of a modern supply house and as such represents the Simplex machine exclusively in Cuba.

Besides the two modern Simplex machines, the Fausto equipment includes a Gardner Velvet Gold Fibre Screen, Peerless Auto Arc Controls, Westinghouse motor generator set and Snaplite lenses. The projection is said to be the equal of that found in any of the best theatres in the States.

Theatre Building Notes

Albany, N. Y.

Frank A. Empsall, former head of the largest department store in Watertown, N. Y., and a man who is heavily interested in the paper business in northern New York, bought the Avon theatre this week, paying $200,000 for the house. Mr. Empsall was in Florida when he heard that the house was on the market and wired an offer which was acceptable. The house is located in the business center of Watertown and has been owned by the Bardavon Theatre Corporation, of Poughkeepsie. The theatre is the largest and most modern in northern New York. Arthur G. Forbes will be retained as house manager. First run pictures will be featured.

Buffalo, N. Y.

James Cardino, owner of the Kensington theatre on Grider street, Buffalo, and the Glen theatre in Williamsville, N. Y., announces that he will build a new theatre at Bailey avenue and Kensington street, Buffalo, this spring.

Harrisburg, Pa.

The Arcade theatre building, in Waynesboro, Pa., was sold on March 19, to Silverman Brothers and Slutzker, a chain motion picture theatre company of Altoona, Pa., title to pass on April 1, subject to existing leases. With the building proper goes the Arcade theatre, on which the present lease expires October 1, next, when the purchasers will assume the management. The building, including offices and apartments in addition to the theatre, was erected five years ago for $200,000. The theatre has a seating capacity of 1,250 and is one of the most modern in Southern Pennsylvania. Silverman Brothers and Slutzker now have theatres in Altoona, Harrisburg, York, Lebanon, Waynesboro and other cities.

Erie, Pa.

The Herald building, Erie, Pa., has been purchased by the Columbia Amusement Company, which controls the Columbia and Majestic theatres in that city. A new theatre to seat 2,500 will be built on the site.

Max and Mitchell Fitzer plan to build a theatre and office building on West Fayette street, Syracuse, during the coming summer.

San Diego, Cal.

Recently the same interests that control the Plaza theatre have taken over the Kinema theatre, with Russell Rogers as manager for both houses. At the Kinema he is assisted by Charles Crouch, Jr. The Kinema has undergone a number of changes and improvements, including entirely new decorations on the exterior and a handsome new electric sign. The house rates are 20 cents for adults and 10 cents for children. A. F. Ahrens, formerly manager of the Kinema, has gone to Honolulu on a combined business and pleasure trip.

San Francisco

R. A. McNeil and W. G. Bailey of the New Lyceum theatre, plan to build a $100,000 theatre on Mission street, between Brazil and Persia avenues. Associated with McNeil and Bailey is R. E. Baines, merchant in the district. Property costing $20,000 has been purchased. The seating capacity of the new house will be 1,200.

Criterion Planned for Oklahoma City

FORMAL opening of the new $500,000 Cooper Criterion theatre is now planned for May 1. The new building of handsome architecture, with a 75-ft. front on Main Street, will have a large parquet, foyer, huge balcony, mezzanine floor, tea-room, rest-rooms, smoking apartment, nursery, operating room, manager's offices, and four Main Street shops or offices, with Main Street entrances. Owing to failure of materials to arrive in time, the theatre will not be completed as early as was expected.

A $24,000 pipe organ, which has already been shipped, will be installed at once, and there is a huge orchestra pit, where a 50-piece orchestra will furnish music.

The lighting arrangement is one of the most up-to-date and artistic ever seen in the city. There is a central light dome with innumerable lights. Huge art glass ceiling panels, probably measuring four by six feet, will furnish indirect light from the side ceilings. There will be ten huge ivory and gold chandeliers, casting a soft light through vari-colored art glass.

The entire color-scheme is ivory and old-gold combined with autumn shades of tan and brown. Draperies will be in shades of tan and brown, and the huge wall panels will be hand-decorated, in tan, brown and gold.

Burton Holmes Laboratory

A new and up-to-date ventilating system with intake typhoon fans will change the atmosphere of the theatre every few minutes.

Another novel feature is the suction fan, arranged at the rear of the smoking apartment, preventing any smoke from coming into the theatre proper. C. C. McCollister is to be the manager of the new theatre. —(McCARTY.)

Burton Holmes Installs Animation Dept.

THE installation of an animation depa ment marks another forward step in t steady growth of the Burton Holmes Lab atories in Chicago The staff includes such w known cartoonists and artists as Miss Kelly a Messrs. Walsh, Link, Olson and Barner, all whom have had wide experience with Bray a other animators.

The new animation department already is work on a series of cartoons for which week release is planned and other important contrac are in view.

The film developing and printing laborato located at 7610 North Paulina Street, the ne Burton Holmes Lectures, Inc., plant, was cor pleted one year ago and is one of the mo modern and best equipped laboratories in th country, particular attention having been pa in erecting it to the elimination of all fire ha ards. The walls of the building are of bric with ceiling and floors of concrete and all pa titions are tile. Automatic iron fire doors a installed throughout the building, as well as complete sprinkler system. Large and well ve tilated vaults for storage of film also are pr vided, so that the possibilities of fire damag are reduced to a minimum.

The capacity of the laboratory is 50,000 fe of film per day and facilities are being arrange for a much greater output.

The plant at present, in addition to handlin the Holmes Weeklies, is doing a large amoun of commercial work of high quality. In fac quality, not quantity, is the motto of the organ ization. Special provision for film editoria work is provided and particular attention i given to tinting and timing of films.

Oscar B. Depew, vice-president and genera manager of Burton Holmes Lectures, Inc., is i charge of the laboratories and is one of the rea veterans of the film industry, having been con nected with Mr. Holmes since 1893. Mr. Depe has been responsible for the development an printing of a Holmes thousand-foot reel once i week since 1916, and previous to that time wa in charge of shorter reels turned out. He also was in charge of the first moving picture use in connection with a Holmes Travelogue, which appeared in May, 1897, and has continued t direct the work on Holmes pictures ever since

Lewis Francis Brown, another veteran of the Holmes organization, is the New York repre sentative and takes an intense interest in the work and progress of the laboratories.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

Some Data on the Subject of Recent Projection Inventions

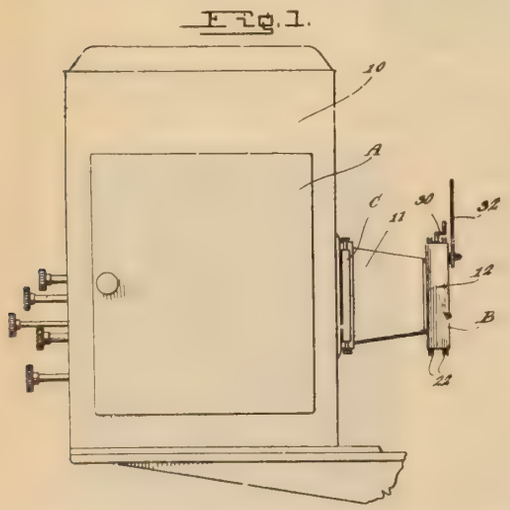
What the Inventions Are Supposed to Do and How They Do It

Scarcely an issue of the Patent Office Gazette appears without the report of one or more inventions pertaining to Motion Pictures. Very often these devices have to do with projection or with the accessories of the projection. And generally if the inventor is investigated he is found to be either a one-time projectionist or one at present, which tends to show that many projectionists are "thinkers" as well as workers.

The News is always glad to receive copies of patent papers for possible publication. Most of the men working in theatres do not have the opportunity of keeping watch of the patent office reports and thus have no way of knowing what their brother projectionists are perfecting and patenting, unless they are shown through the trade papers.

The first patent to be presented is the one by N. A. Nicholson on "An Automatic Circuit Breaker." The purpose of this invention as stated by the inventor is "For the Prevention of Fire; for examination of film and for the Cover of a White Screen." It consists essentially of an electric circuit held open normally by the film itself, but closed when the action of the film becomes otherwise. If the film breaks or stops due to broken sprocket holes, the circuit is closed and a shutter automatically drops between the light beam and the film.

Another feature of this invention is the means which are supplied to cause the operation of some sort of signal when the "loop is lost," or when the film becomes too tight from some other cause.



Lamphouse with new dissolve attached to the light cone

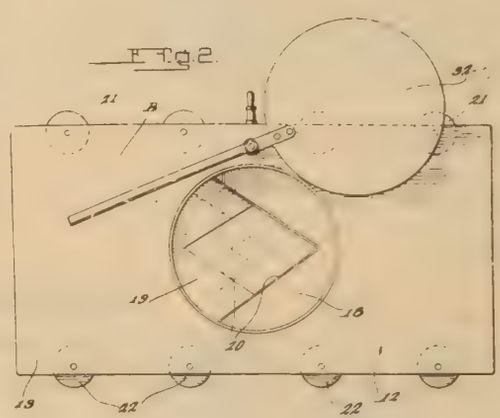


Diagram showing how the dissolve operates

Unfortunately the drawings submitted by Mr. Nicholson would not reproduce so that we are unable to show his invention in diagram form. Anyone interested may reach him by sending a letter to his home at 232 Market Street, Johnstown, Pa.

The second improvement was conceived and perfected by Alfred B. Werhan of 892 Kenyon Street, Akron, Ohio. It is called "A Fading-in-and-out Shutter for Picture Projecting Machines; a Stereopticon Dissolver."

This invention, which is illustrated herewith consists of a dissolving device to be attached to the cone on the lamp-house. By an arrangement of gears which in turn work two cut-off blades, it is possible to fade out gradually and evenly or to fade in in the same manner. A small handle visible in Fig. 2, does all the work

Which is Hotter—Arc or Mazda

G. R. S., Ohio, writes as follows:

I am a small town operator, I have been "holding down" my job for nearly 4 years. I like my work and am proud of my job. I must comment on the fact that my manager believes in modern methods and the latest one is the installation of two new Mazda adapters. These certainly do beat the arc a mile. No dust and fumes from the carbon; and quiet and economical. So far as I can figure, the only disadvantage is the intense heat. The Mazda must be at least 4 times hotter than the carbon arc—it is necessary to watch the machine all the time when running a bum print through because it would catch fire almost instantly if jammed at the aperture. I have run one bulb for nearly 7 weeks now and the filament coils are beginning to become a little bit warped. They have spread so that it seems to be impossible to distribute the light properly even by adjusting the mirror to where it will do the most good. Without the mirror in place an image something like the diagram is shown on the aperture drop. This is very annoying for it affects the focus considerably and I was wondering if you could suggest any possible remedy for such a condition.

Another thing—I know this department isn't an employment bureau, but I would be very thankful if you'd consider my situation and give me a bit of advice. Possibly I don't know a good job when I've got one, but I'd like to know if there could be any kind of a job in the way of trouble expert or service man for some equipment house or along that line. I'm rather young yet but as I said before, I like the work and my four years' experience as an operator has made me quite familiar with the projection machine (principally the Powers). I think I can say truthfully that I know the machine pretty thoroughly.

I have been reading over the N. A. M. L. Pledge and am inclosing membership blank. I don't know much about the league yet, but if it will help improve the condition of the film and the service we operators can give, then I want to join and do my part. I presume this Department takes care of this also.

There are many things I could ask, but no doubt this will be plenty, so I will close and watch for an answer through the pages of (I might say) your and our magazine.

I would like to send you a photograph of my booth, if you would be interested.

Reply: Send along that photograph of your projection room and if it is possible to reproduce it, you will find it in the News.

Your statement regarding the comparative heat from the Mazda and the arc, brings up a question that we have never seen answered satisfactorily. Because of the fact that the light rays are of slightly different characteristic, we are of the opinion that the Mazda lamp may produce a spot somewhat higher in temperature than that from the arc. But this is only a theory. Perhaps the companies manufacturing the separate products will carry out a few experiments along these lines and report on them.

If you have run your lamps for 7 weeks, assuming that you are burning each lamp 5 hours a day and 6 days a week, it is about time that they began to show signs of use. The normal average life is around 100 hours, but it would appear that you have obtained nearly 150 hours from them. It is no wonder that the filament coils are beginning to warp. Your lamps have given you "good mileage" and the only thing to do now is to replace them with new ones, rather than wait until they fail absolutely. After the filaments spread there is no way of getting an evenly illuminated field. You can't compensate for this trouble by any adjustment of the mirror.

There is nothing that we can do to help you advance yourself along the lines that interest you. This applies to the present time, particularly. But if you wish to ally yourself with one of the larger manufacturing organizations the one and only thing to do is to write an application to the company you would like to go to and see what happens.

Your N. A. M. L. application has already been passed. You will receive your membership card, button and supply of labels soon. Write in again.

Wants to Refinish Fibre Screen

C. R. S., Texas: I have kept up with your Projection Department since it started but I have never seen anything on the methods of refinishing Gold Fibre screens. We have two screens about two years old which it seems have lost their color. I am sure that you can tell me how to go about it to repaint them.

Reply: You have never seen anything on this subject because it is not practical to do it. Screens with surfaces like the Gold Fibre can only be resurfaced satisfactorily by returning to the factory where the work is done by special machinery. Some Exhibitors have tried to do it themselves but if they did not totally ruin the screen they did not improve it. As anyone will tell you, who has ever tried it, the task of resurfacing a metallic surface screen is a difficult one. No matter how careful the work is done the result is apt to be streaky and uneven. It would be better for you to make yourself a temporary screen of muslin and screen paint and use it while your gold fibre is at the factory. The white surfaced screen will gave you good results for the short time your other screen is up for refinishing.

Senate Projection Equipment

Equpiment of the Senate theatre is another triumph added to the accomplishments of the Exhibitors' Supply Company of Chicago. The complete booth and lobby equipment was furnished by this progressive company.

No detail in equipment has been overlooked. This fact is apparent by the following partial list of the installations: Three type "S" Simplex projectors; two double 100 transverters; three Peerless automatic arc controls; three Snapolite lenses; two lightning change makers; two Simplex four-unit ticket sellers and a Minusa gold fibre screen.

The fact that Lubliner & Trinz have favored the Exhibitors' Supply Company with the greater portion of their equipment business, clearly indicates that this company is able to meet every need of this discriminating organization.

Fred Cosman of the Electric theatre, St. Joseph, Mo.

The projection room is said to be one of the most complete in existence and its excellent and practical facilities are directly due to the ingenuity of the men at the head of the Exhibitors' Supply Company.

Projectors Operate 20 Hours Out of 24

According to a report from the General Supply & Repair Company of Portland, Oregon, the Julius Saxe Theatre Circuit of Portland, Oregon has purchased two of the latest model 6B Type "E" Powers projectors for use in the New Grand Theatre, which is to be managed by Mr. Samuel Saxe.

An interesting fact concerning the New Grand Theatre is the time during which it operates. For twenty hours out of the twenty-four of each day the ticket office is open for the sale of tickets. This kind of service demands projectors of rugged construction. For two weeks prior to their installation the two machines were on inspection in the lobby of the theatre where the crowd passing by might see the mechanisms that were to be the medium between the film and the screen. One of the photographs on page 2602 shows the projectors as they appeared in the lobby.

Cosman, Pioneer Projectionist, Manages Simplex Agency

The Yale Theatre Supply Company of Kansas City, Mo., Simplex Distributors, announces the opening of their new branch office at Oklahoma City, the establishing of which enables this enterprising house to render unequaled service to all theatre owners in the surrounding territory.

The new office located at No. 19 Hudson Street, which in every respect is a duplicate of the main office at Kansas City, is in charge of Mr. Fred Cosman, who comes to Oklahoma City from St. Joe, Mo. with a wealth of experience gathered through years of intimate contact with the projector division of the show business. Mr. Cosman has been made vice-president of the Yale Theatre Supply Company, and his acquisition by the company adds but another strong personality to the splendid personnel of the Yale organization which has thoroughly established itself among the leaders of the Simplex Distributors.

Mr. Cosman can truly be called a pioneer projectionist, for his entry into the projection room was made 22 years ago, when as an arc lamp assembler he went with the Lyman H. Howe organization. At this time, Mr. Howe had purchased the Pennsylvania and New York State Rights for a film showing the Empire State Express, which film was but 250 feet in length and two inches in width. At that time, the only American machines in existence was a Vitagraph then installed in the Eden Musee in New York City and a Biograph then used in B. F. Keith's 14th Street theatre. Mr. Howe had just purchased the Vitagraph machine and had advertised for a man who might know something concerning its mechanism, and Mr. Cosman was one of the very few applicants who qualified, and after his engagement, spent two weeks in assembling the machine and experimenting with it.

The first show opened at Deposit, New York, and the outfit, besides the machine, consisted of six 50 foot films and twelve phonograph records, the latter used in lieu of an orchestra. The feature of the show was "The May Irwin Kiss," which film was 30 feet long and the showing of which was invariably encored, this latter being a most simple procedure, due to the fact that the film was an endless one and did not require rewinding and re-threading.

Mr. Cosman was very proud of his machine, the mechanism of which was boxed immediately following every performance, and no one was allowed to get a "close-up" of it while it was in action. A box of old films was always carried along, as everywhere people demanded souvenirs.

In the four and one-half years Cosman was with Howe, only one engagement was cancelled and that was because the alternating arc circuit could not be used in a certain Vermont town. The power house was some distance from the theatre, and the operator was obliged to wave a handkerchief as the signal to turn on the electricity. Then it was impossible to draw an arc of sufficient brilliancy for screen use.

After being with Howe for two years, Cosman was making $5.00 a week and expenses. One day another motion picture man happened along and offered him $15.00 He placed the matter before his employer, who offered him $18.00 a week, considering, Howe said that Cosman had been a good boy. Back in New York once more the pioneer operator went into the matter of the wages of motion picture men and found that the six operators then in the country were making $100.00 a week.

With a man named Barnes as his partner, Cosman started exhibiting what were called the Cosman-Barnes pictures, and was the only exhibitor on the road besides Howe. Howe managed to buy out first Barnes and then Cosman, who went back to his old employer with whom he worked two more years. At Eagle Rock, N. J., the pictures were shown at a place directly back of the Edison motion picture factory at Orange, N. J.

At this time the three machines in the country were the Edison, Vitagraph and the Lubin. The Vitagraph had reduced its film to the standard width, and the Biograph had gone out of existence. Important discoveries and inventions were being made rapidly on the machines. The tension springs were another new discovery.

Cosman next worked with the Proctor circuit, now called the Keith-Proctor, and stayed with them four and one-half years, after which he came to St. Joseph, fourteen years ago. While with Proctors, he went to towns near New York, as Albany and Newark, N. J., instructing operators and interesting the inhabitants in the pictures. Pictures shown here fourteen years ago were called "Cosman's moving pictures."

Republic Laboratory Opens New Quarters in Heart of New York's Film District

Plant Contains the Most Advanced Methods and Appliances of Laboratory Procedure

Try as hard as one will it is a fact that his thought of a film laboratory is associated with that pungent odor of celluloid and the sight of several rooms where the liquid seems to be as much on the floor as in the tanks where it rightfully belongs. Generally although not always there is an appearance of congestion and of unkempt floors and tables.

The newer laboratories have gradually worked away from the old conditions and have placed their operation on a standing comparable with the remaining phases of the industry. For this reason a visitor to the new building of the Republic Film Laboratory expects to find a well thought out manufacturing plant but even then he is sure to be surprised at the throughness with which the owners of this laboratory have planned and executed their business.

The structure itself, which is occupied solely by the Republic Laboratory and built from their specifications, is four stories in height and located in the heart of New York's film district. As would be expected it is constructed of concrete and steel and is absolutely fireproof throughout.

Its entrance opens into a reception room from which stairs lead to the second floor containing the offices of the officials. The offices themselves are arranged and appointed as few laboratories have ever been.

On the third floor are the perforating, printing and title department. All of the room are scrupulously clean and are kept so. The space allotted to each department is ample for the work and in addition will permit of a great deal of expansion because the congestion will approach that of many other film plants. Everywhere throughout the laboratory are refuse cans and the workers have been educated to make use of them. As a result the tables and floor are at all times free of odds and ends.

Title making department at Republic Laboratory

On the fourth and top floor is the cutting. A skylight above this room floods the employees with an abundance of light. The walls are neatly painted with a gloss paint making it a simple matter to keep them clean and free from dust. All wiring in this room is enclosed. Even the drop lights are dropped in conduit. The size of this room and the general layout is clearly shown in one of the photographs below.

The developing tanks and drying drums are located on the first floor of the building. The number of these have been held to a minimum because of the automatic developing, tinting and drying machine perfected by Mr. Yates of the Republic Laboratory. At some time in the future when the installation is completed it is the intention of the News to publish a detail description of this wonderful machine with exact figures on its operation. At present it is sufficient to say that the automatic device has been given a through try-out and has proved that the theory on which it is based will work out practically as its inventor intended. Eventually a number of the automatic units will be installed until the entire output of the laboratory is handled by them. More uniform work and an entire absence of blemishes are the features of automatic operation.

At the beginning of this article mention was made of the usual celluloid odor of laboratories. At the Republic this has been entirely eiminated. A highy perfected ventilating system does the work. So great is the volume of air handled by this system that no matter in what part of the building the dust arises, it is taken immediately to the outside air.

All incoming air is filtered and washed by a water spray. It is then heated to the proper temperature and passed through the ducts to the rooms.

An automatic gas heater provides the heat for the building. This gas heater, regulated by a thermostat, maintains the desired temperature throughout the day whether the outside temperature be zero or 65°, and does it efficiently and economically. No attention whatsoever is required once the thermostat has been set and the pilot lamp lighted. Moreover the heater unit occupies an astonishingly small space.

With all these advantages in equipment and general layout not possessed by the ordinary laboratory it is easy to understand the enthusiasm of Manager Yates. He firmly believes that he has the best motion picture film laboratory in the country and there is no one who, given the opportunity of looking through the plant, will attempt to disagree with him. An immense amount of thought was expended on the building and equipment before the ground was even broken and these forethoughts are all evident in the finishd product. The Republic Laboratory represents the latest and farthest advance in laboratory make-up of any similar building in the East and it is doubtful if there is one on the West Coast that can even approach it in general excellence.

which discusses "equipment" necessary to the successful picture player in the way of mental alertness, musical resourcefulness and repertoire. Under "musical resourcefulness" the authors group the subjects of musical characterization, thematic development, transition and modulation, transposition and improvisation. The repertoire lists pieces under such titles as "nature," "love themes," "elegiac moods" and the like, to give appropriate music for interpreting the emotions constantly depicted in screen drama.

"Musical Interpretation" to which the second part of the book is devoted, treats the manner of accompanying each type of picture encountered in the usual program, i.e., the feature film (with a special paragraph on the subject of "flash backs") cartoons and slap-stick comedy films, comedy dramas, news reels, educational and travel views. Although brief, the suggestions contained in this part will be found to cover practically all the situations a picture player will be likely to encounter in the ordinary course of his work.

Part III, devoted to the "Theatrical Organ," is extremely practical as it deals with the peculiarities of organ technique which puzzle many beginners. Among the phases of the subject discussed are: "how to sit at the organ," "pedalling," "independence of hands and feet," "staccato and legato touch" and "registration." Especially valuable are the chapters on orchestration by means of organ stops, the identification of tone-colors for descriptive purposes (registration) and special effects and how to produce them.

This little book, unique in its field, has received the highest praise of leading figures in the musical end of the picture world. Hugo Riesenfeld said of it: "I consider this book of greatest value to all organists and pianists playing for the pictures . . . will convince musicians in general that the musical interpretation of photoplays can be made an expression of art and a serious profession."

THE NEW MUSIC FORUM

He Calls It the Musictionary

I was rather surprised and very pleased to receive your brief communication, and to see that perhaps something I have said may be of some use in promoting the upward trend of things for the motion picture musician. We have been looked upon for so long as a necessary evil, and no more, that it is really a pleasant thought to think that at last our means of livelihood (it sounds rather commercial to call an art "livelihood," but, after all, it is just that) is being placed on a fifty-fifty basis of respect and recognition with the films themselves. It has been long comig. Now it is on its way, let's hasten it.

Your article in this week's News anent the producing of a musical dictionary hits me right where I live. The only things I regret are the facts that, first, I didn't think of that three years ago (I have been directing that long), and, secondly, that I can't claim the brains to be able to be the musical Mr. Johnson myself. Ishould think, though, that by co-operation it should not be so difficult as it at first appears. Supposing that a list of all the musical directors of this Continent could be supplied by the various locals (an easy enough matter, for we are all amalgamated) and a circular sent out asking all these men to send in terms they have been in the habit of using themselves, as we all have them, I am very sure. I think that by the time a competent committee had sorted and listed those applicable to general usage you'd have some dictionary. Then the gaps, if there were any, could be very easily filled in by some really brainy one, and there you are. I for one would be absolutely in to help to the limit, small as it might be, and, by the by, consider my copy already ordered, per most any price. (Suggestion for a name: "Musictionary.") I hope myself to be in New York before the end of this year, as I have at last succeeded in attracting the eye of one of your wary publishers, and, should things go as at present indicated, I'll drop in on you some time in September. Are there many good good opportunities up your way for really good organists. I don't wish to brag or anything, but I have a few degrees, and I can play an organ, even if I can't do anything else. Yes, and jazz, too. I used to be ashamed of it, but you know we live and learn. I admit it without even a blush now. The public wants jazz—ergo, I give it to them.

Knowing you to be a busy man, I tender you my humble apologies for wasting so much of your valuable time, and beg to remain, very sincerely yours to the limit,

CECIL G. BARNHAM-KAPPEY.

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

In the March 12th issue of the NEWS we noticed your invitation to send our musical troubles to you and we surely have our troubles. May we enlist your aid?

We are looking for some information helpful in locating a first class motion picture organist. Can you help us out?

Thanking you for your trouble and courtesy in the matter, I am,

MISS R. HEMINGTON,
New Wolverine Theatre,
Saginaw, Mich.

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

Thank you for the copy of the proceedings of the conference. I was very glad to read what had taken place since I was prevented from attending the conference by a long and painful illness.

There is no doubt that the conference made history. Not only were certain problems settled, but certain other problems that cannot be remedied immediately were recognized and presented for study. Future moving picture musicians, whose road will be very easy by comparison with the trials of the present day pioneers, will have to thank this first conference for the beginning of their blessings.

If the general public is to appreciate the importance of music in the movies, it will not be sufficient to hold a conference for the producers—get after the school children—and hold a conference for them.

Respectfully,

PHILIP GORDON,
Musical Director,
South Side High School,
Newark, N. J.

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

Have read with interest the Music supplement sent me giving the record of the Motion Picture Musical Conference and must say that I think it a much needed innovation and one with which I am in sympathy.

With best wishes for the success of the project,

Very truly yours,

VIOLET A. CONKLIN,
Peekskill, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

In answer to your special Music Supplement I might say that this has been my hobby for several years That all pictures should have the proper music. All film exchanges should have the proper music to send with each and every shipment. Also to send the music with the shipment previous to the one to use. So as they could have a practice of the music. This thing of merely sending a cue sheet is not of much use, to the small houses in most of the cases. The small places have not got the music on hand when it is wanted and in my opinion this is the only way to give the small houses a chance to have the proper music for all pictures. I notice that all State right pictures have the proper music carried with the film. Why not have all film exchanges furnish proper music and make their charge in case it is destroyed in any way or not returned.

This matter can be arranged and I have traveled some and found that in some of the best houses the proper music is not always used, and it certainly spoils the picture.

I certainly hope you will be successful in doing something along these lines.

Truly,

J. A. MORRISON,
Morrison's Theatre,
Meadford, Ont., Can.

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

Have received the Special Music Supplement which you so kindly sent me and am pleased to note that the convention was such a success, due to your untiring efforts. I have been a faithful reader of the music department since you took charge, and have been benefited in many ways from my reading of it.

The interesting topics covered in the conference by men "at the top" were very convincing and should carry great weight in the success of the association, and am very sorry that I could not have been there to hear them in person.

I have read many interesting topics in the music department on acoustics and the proper location of the organ; however, there has been little or nothing said about the proper location of the key desk or console. I do not think that the key desk has been given the attention it deserves, from the organ's standpoint.

It is my opinion that the key desk should be so situated that the organist can hear his instrument the same as it is heard by the patrons of the theatre in order to get the most out of his instrument. I have played organs in theatres where the key desk was placed so that the true tonal volume of the organ could not be heard by the organist, the swell shadings very indistinct, and in a few cases, where after pressing a key the tone would not be heard for a second or two by the player.

Another phase of the question is relative to picture and key desk. Why should the key desk be placed as nearly under the picture as possible (as in some of the smaller theatres) or off to one side where the organist gets a very distorted view? The conductor of the orchestra has his place of advantage to view the picture. Why not give the organist an equal place of advantage as his instrument takes the place of an orchestra when he is on duty, and it is necessary that the organist have a general view of the picture, and not one where everything is all detail and hodge-podge.

Now, Mr. Isaacson, I do not know whether this item is covered by the association in their discussion of "location of organ," but if not, I think it might well be included. I am not much on "writing things," but it may be proven worth while, to ask for opinions on the subject through your department to see what the general opinion of the theatre organist is.

Trusting I have not taken too much of your time, and beg to remain, a friend and booster of the music department.

FREDERICK GOODWIN,
Regent Theatre,
Lima, Ohio.

The Barton Organ

Mr. F. W. Fischer Owning Theatres in LaSalle, Ill. Kewanee, Ill. and Madison, Wis. says—

"I buy Barton Musical Instruments because they have beautiful tone quality that pleases my patrons — the instruments stand up — I get immediate service when necessary — My players are furnished by the Bartola Company — and I have received fine treatment from the concern."

Mr. Fischer bought his first Barton Instrument seven years ago. They are now an attraction in all of his theatres. Are you interested in this kind of musical instruments and service?

Madison, Wis., Majestic Changes to Pictures

The Majestic theatre, owned by F. W. Fischer, will enter the motion picture field in Madison on April 10. The Majestic ran as a motion picture house from 1915-1917 and was re-opened February 6, 1921, with popular priced musical comedy.

The opening picture will be "The Inside of the Cup" and an elaborate prologue will be used. An organ recital, introducing the theatre's new pipe organ, a two reel comedy and a news film will complete the program.

Mr. Fischer says that the general trend of the attractions shown will be toward special pictures which can be preceded by prologues prepared by the local staff. To date, one prologue has been used in Madison.

A new Bartola grand style pipe organ with special vox humana echo organ is being installed this week. Bernard Cowhan, who has been featured by Balaban & Katz, Chicago, has been secured for the opening performances.

Two new Simplex projectors, with Mazda projecting lights, are being installed. A new screen completes the mechanical re-modeling. Mr. Fischer plans to redecorate the entire theatre early this summer and mural paintings will probably be used to a large extent.

The seating capacity of the Majestic theatre is approximately 700.

Louis St. Pierre of St. Paul, Minn., has been appointed manager of the theatre. Mr. St. Pierre specializes in oil painting and will personally tend to much of the decorating for the numerous and ingenious prologues which are booked for the theatre.

Rothacker Film as Legal Evidence

A Rothacker produced film was recently admitted as evidence in a patent case and thus moving pictures find one more field of usefulness. The mining machinery involved in the litigation was in operation hundreds of miles from where the jury sat.

Under the old fashioned method the twelve good men and true would have been subjected to several days of blueprints, expert testimony, still photos, legal oratory, etc., in order to pound into their lay minds the highly technical point under dispute. But by the film method the technical point was made as simple as A, B, C, by two screenings. The jurors sent the Rothacker Company a vote of thanks.

Feature Subjects of Short Length

"Poor Dear Margaret Kirby"

(Selznick)

POOR Dear Margaret Kirby" is a pleasingly pleasant picture, with the star, laine Hammerstein, in one of her usual roles. Although the story has been told many times previous films, it makes no difference as far this production is concerned, for it is related om a rather different angle and is directed ith a certain trueness to life that is bound to ouse interest.

Elaine Hammerstein, however, is the whole ow and grasps every situation and holds it hile she is on the stage. And there were many fficult and trying scenes to get over and others at were "fill ins."

In "Poor Dear Margaret Kirby" Miss Hamerstein plays the role of a young married oman whose husband has lost his fortune and at of his wife's in the stock market.

When he censures her for receiving gifts om a rich man and a quarrel ensues the dispointed husband takes poison. He does not e, however, but spends many weary days and eeks in bed while his loving wife attends his ery wish. Meanwhile the wife earns a livenood for both by turning the home into a arding house.

The husband is removed to a sanatarium, and is there that the plot begins to thicken, for e "other woman" arrives and comes very ar separating the happy couple.

She doesn't and the story reaches a happy ding.

Miss Hammerstein is supported by a splendid st.—FRANK LEONARD.

"Everywoman's Problem"

Plymouth Pictures, Inc.—Feature—State Rights)

BUILDED on a new theme—women in politics—and the principal roles interpreted a creditable cast, Plymouth Fictures, Inc., ate rights' offering, "Every Woman's Prob-m," is destined to deliver pretty good satisfction to the public and a right good profit its distributors on the independent market.

It has a box-office angle, seldom, if ever, hit on by picture producers and because of this d the big theme running throughout its reelage, ith strong appeal to the women and arousg curiosity among the men, "Every Woman's roblem" rates with the current state rights' traction of worth and stands a little above e average offering wherein spectacle or exaordinary appeal is not intended.

Throughout its run, this picture holds to od sequence, situation and plot, and were not for the rather inhuman position in which e woman is placed—in the position of govnor of a state in which her husband has en condemned to death by public propaganda "Every Woman's Problem" would stand as uninterrupted delineation of strong, appealg drama via the silver sheet. As it was own for review, the situation noted above pretty sure to leave the audience in a more less depressed condition, especially since ey, the public, have been educated so desively in not only the happy ending but the ppy theme throughout.

The titles, too, may be described as a bit ereotyped and in some instances a bit flowy and intended to arouse an appeal that isn't in the situations of the picture to which they refer. Some of the titles, and this includes the majority, are well read and convey impressively without over-doing the thought conveyed.

The cast has done well with the possible exception that of moments when over-enthusiasm in direction may be noticed. Dorothy Davenport does some real dramatic work in her part of the woman judge and Clara Madison, Willis L. Roberts and Wilson Du Boise are runners-up for almost equal honors.—Length 5 reels.—LAURENCE REID.

"Dead Easy"

(Vanity Comedy-Educational—One Reel)

"DEAD EASY" is one of those comedies that rather surprises you for its beginning is rather slow and then all of a sudden it shifts about and we find that it has a real good plot.

The comedy opens with Earl Rodney and Irene Dalton rushing about hither and thither in a rather nonsensical manner. The hero has become jealous of his sweetheart and endeavors to rid himself of this world. When he arrives at the "old bridge" and is about to jump into the calling waters he is halted by two men who offer him a sum of money for his body. This sounds reasonable to the young man but when he receives the tempting lucre he changes his mind and decides to live. But the two men in the black clothes will not have it and as a result he is allowed to live until 6 p. m. when he must deliver up his body—dead. The following scenes are very amusing especially when the young hero attempts to dodge his pursuers only to fall into their hands again. The plot takes another shift when the "pursuers" receive a telegram that the pursued is heir to a fortune and are more determined than ever to catch up with the young man. This they eventually do after indulging in many funny situations.

"Dead Easy" is a good comedy, not because it is of the hilarious variety but because it has a theme which is decidedly unusual and is well worked up.—FRANK LEONARD.

"Indigo Sunday"

(National-Goldwyn-Comedy)

NOW that every person who is "regular" is taking a slap at the proposed blue laws it is only natural that the idea has found its way to the screen. It can find entertainment through just one source—the comedy field, since the idea itself must be exaggerated to take the sting off the puritanical proposition. But the National people have erred in realizing the possibilities. Instead of providing the comedy with humor they have only succeeded in making it as blue as the proposed law itself. Putting a second rate comedian in the role of a rustic sheriff and using him to close up things good and tight is not productive of laughter. And George Bunny is more of a legitimate foil here than he is a comedian.

The son of John Bunny would look better in straight comedy romances or possibly, polite comedies. The sheriff has altogether too much spotlight. With his hands behind his coattails, and his bewhiskered chin thrust out, he makes a poor attempt to add a humorous note. The picture should have been treated with exaggeration—not only in the incident but in the subtitles. As it is the comedy is a very mild protest. Ridicule is the only method to be used in laughing a sorry proposition out of existence. "Indigo Sunday" falters because the incidents and gags are woefully weak. Length 2 Reels.—LAURENCE REID.

"Get Rich Quick Edgar"

(Tarkington-Edgar Comedy—Goldwyn—Two Reels)

IT IS not so much a matter of consequence in the Booth Tarkington-Edgar comedies whether they offer amusement as the fact that all of them since being marketed have been based upon a real idea. "Get Rich Quick Edgar" not only happens to have a great idea but it affords the spectator a large amount of humor. Tarkington has taken advantage of circus day in the small town to exploit the idea that Edgar is an embroyonic promoter. Some may say that the author has lost track of the psychology of boyish character by showing his figures more eager to accumulate wealth than take in the circus. Our opinion is he has kept faith with his idea.

The comedy might have presented more circus hokum insofar as the boys are concerned. We looked for the note of curiosity to come forward with Johnny Jones and his chum sneaking under the tent or investigating the show in all its angles. Instead they see a chance to make their half dollars grow. It is a terribly hot day and the populace is sweltering watching the parade. It dawns upon the boys to buy a dollar's worth of fans with their money and dispose of them at a profit. It is a very busy time they have and they are on the road to becoming rich when the sky darkens. The rain comes down and when it ceases the weather registers a cold and windy atmosphere. The boys still keep up their "barking"—"Cool and refreshing Fa-a-ns, five cents each."

It finally develops that they can't give their product away. They have missed the circus and lost their money. But uncle comes to the rescue with his appreciation of boyish whims and fancies. There is good incident, although the circus parade becomes a trifle monotonous because of repetition. Still it generates a great deal of charm and humor and will bring memories back to the old-timers. The youngsters should enjoy the comedy. It carries appropriate color.—LAURENCE REID.

"Torchy's Nighthood"

(Master Films-Educational Release—Two-Reel Comedy Starring Johnny Hines)

AFTER a couple of hundred feet of just incidental "gags" in a Child's restaurant set "Torchy's Nighthood" takes a brace and evolves itself into one of the most original and highly amusing bits of entertainment ever produced from the w.k. elopement idea. Laugh follows laugh on sheer quality of the farce comedy gags that have been provided. However, one sequence is rather risque.

"Conventional melodrama effectively staged."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Almost too strong a dose of morals. Medium business on opening and only fair all week." "A good dramatic picture, full of action, which seemed to please." "Picture went over big and packed them in. Held it for second week." "Fine picture but one that appeals most strongly to the thinking class. Held up comfortably for two weeks." "Did a capacity business. A prereview given for the benefit of ministers caused widespread comment, which added to its power of attraction." "Good story, well done. Pleased the masses. We had a satisfactory two week run." "A good picture with which we had more than usual business." "Plot a little difficult to follow but on the whole picture was above the average and we played to good business during week it showed here." "Two days to big business."

IT ISN'T BEING DONE THIS SEASON (VITAGRAPH) CORINNE GRIFFITH .....FEB. 26
"Inadequate story, but a veritable fashion show."—M. P. News.

JIM THE PENMAN (WHITMAN BENNETT-FIRST NATIONAL) LIONEL BARRYMORE.....APR. 2
"Grimly realistic but artistic picture from famous stage play."—M. P. News.

JUCKLINS, THE (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) SPECIAL CAST DEC. 25
"Rural story rich in detail and atmosphere."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Pleased those who saw it, but the title not well known enough at this date, with result that it carried no popular appeal." "This feature was well liked by our patrons and went over big for four days." "Very good story. The picture follows the original narrative well and it drew the 'better class' audiences." "Good picture, pulling fairly well." "Had poor business with this, though it seemed to be a good picture." "Great! Monte Blue is just beginning to establish himself, and his following grows with each picture. Business excellent during run." "Rather good, but the name is its worst enemy. Did not draw at all." "Fair picture. The title is poor. Average box office value." "A poor picture, with business below average." "A fair picture with business about as usual." "A good rural story that pleased. Average business two days." "Worthy of even better attendance but receipts were very pleasing."

JUST OUT OF COLLEGE (GOLDWYN) JACK PICKFORD.....FEB. 19
"Slender in plot but rather amusing at times."—M. P. News.

KAZAN (SELIG-HAMILTON-STATE RIGHTS) SPECIAL CAST....FEB. 19
"Another Curwood story makes interesting picture."—M. P. News.

KENTUCKIANS, THE (PARAMOUNT) SPECIAL CAST.....FEB. 12
"Very little drama here; backgrounds are interesting."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Did neither draw nor satisfied. That director missed more good chances than a cat has fleas." "Not a remarkable picture in any way and played it to only average business."

KID, THE (FIRST NATIONAL) CHARLIE CHAPLIN.....JAN. 29
"Long heralded Chaplin six-reeler lives up to expectations."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Kept crowds standing out on the sidewalk for a week. Now on second big week." "Wonderful business from morning till night. Great picture." "A great attraction. Going big on second week of showing." "One of Chaplin's best pictures. Drew big crowds throughout the entire two weeks." "It was a storming success for two weeks, drawing 42,000 persons the first week and slightly less than that number the second week. A knockout. Booked for third week." "The record breaker for the season. Held over for a third week by a house that seldom departs from the week run custom." "Went over big on second week. May hold over for another week." "Second week to big business. Wonderful as an attraction."

KILLER, THE (HAMPTON-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST.....JAN. 29
"Thrilling story given splendid production."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"One of the best Westerns I've ever played. First day's gross surpassed anything for fifteen weeks back. My audiences demand Westerns, and they went after this!"

KNOW YOUR MEN (FOX) PEARL WHITE.....APR. 2
"Heavily emotional, but should please star's admirers."—M. P. News.

LITTLE FOOL, THE (C. E. SHURTLEFF-METRO) SPECIAL CAST.MAR. 26
"Should prove interesting entertainment."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Very good. The picture follows the story well and it holds an audience as only a Jack London story can."

LOVE, HONOR AND BEHAVE (FIRST NATIONAL) SPECIAL CAST .....MAR. 26
"Excellent slapstick feature with good action and incident."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A splendid drawing card. Played to a packed house all week. The picture is an excellent diversion from the more serious presentations."

LOVE LIGHT, THE (UNITED ARTISTS) MARY PICKFORD.....JAN. 22
"Production overshadows the star who is not any too well cast."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"The star brought the people to see it and they were not disappointed." "Splendid picture and business. Mary Pickford really pleased everyone. Never heard a complaint. Capacity all week." "Very good production and well liked. Business was good." "Fell down badly second week. Didn't seem to satisfy. For total showing went over from average to poor." "Mary Pickford interesting if one would forget the story which utterly failed to measure up to the standard expected. Held for the entire week to our regret." "Drew well for about three days and then fell off considerably. Even Mary's large following in this city did not all turn out to see it. Newspaper reviewers characterized it as 'poor' and it was dubbed as 'rotten' by many of little Mary's adorers." "Picture fairly interesting but disappointed some of the fans. Business only fair." "Moved here from another theatre of this city. A good picture but business was not up to standard. It looks as if the star is going back." "A departure from the usual Pickford picture. Miss Pickford displays that she is fitted for emotional as well as comedy roles. Good film, and excellent box office feature."

LOVE SPECIAL, THE (PARAMOUNT) WALLACE REID.....APR. 2
"Acceptable entertainment provided by good humor and a quota of thrills."—M. P. News.

"Interesting exposition of eternal triangle."—M. P. News.

LURE OF YOUTH (METRO) SPECIAL CAST.....JAN. 22
"Acting is better than the story."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"This picture not up to average. The plot is weak."

"Spectacular but false in idea and characterization."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A good drawing title but the production did not justify the name. Average picture." "A splendid picture with well sustained suspense and beautiful photography and settings. Will make thousands of new friends for Florence Vidor and please the admirers of House Peters. Did record business for one week and we are holding it over for second week." "A real picture and a splendid entertainment. People went out of their way to comment favorably on it." "Consider this one of the biggest productions of the season. Corking story, unexcelled cast, magnificently mounted, sure to please. Sorry I didn't have double my seating capacity." "Has proved so popular that it has been held over for the fourth week. This is something never before done in this city. Played to over 60,000 in three weeks' run." "Completed a four weeks' run here, in which it drew over 80,000 people. This is one of the greatest records in the history of the city." "Drew a good house for a week, but the picture does not justify its advance advertising. An average picture."

MAD MARRIAGE, THE (UNIVERSAL) CARMEL MYERS.....FEB. 12
"Carmel Myers is appealing in Greenwich Village formula."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Pretty good picture and we had somewhat more business than usual."

MAMMA'S AFFAIR (FORST NATIONAL) CONSTANCE TALMADGE .....FEB. 5
"Constance Talmadge has serious moments here; picture fairly interesting."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Delighted our people. Box office kept busy." "Played to a capacity house the entire week, but it would not be fair to give the credit to the picture alone, as it was run in conjunction with a week's musical festival, featuring works of local composers."

MAN WHO HAD EVERYTHING, THE (GOLDWYN) JACK PICKFORD .....JAN. 22
"Story and generally good production will get it by."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Terrible. Business was fairly good but that was because the picture played the last part of the week and not because of interest in picture. Pickford unpopular in this territory."

MAN-WOMAN-MARRIAGE (HOLUBAR-FIRST NATIONAL) DOROTHY PHILLIPS.....FEB. 12
"Propaganda and spectacular melodrama are blended here."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Drew very well despite the fact that it was the week before Easter."

MAGNIFICENT BRUTE, THE (UNIVERSAL) FRANK MAYO.....MAR. 26
"A good Western with plenty of action."—M. P. News.

MARRIAGE OF WILLIAM ASHE, THE (METRO).....MAR. 5
"Star enlivens story of British politics."—M. P. News.

MISLEADING LADY, THE (METRO) BERT LYTELL.....JAN. 1
"Stage adaptation is fairly successful as picture."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"The production was not much above average, but the audience seemed to like it." "Bert Lytell an excellent hero of caveman love-making comedy that attracted only fair business." "Fair production which brought about average business." "Good business with this one. It seemed to entertain them well."

MISTRESS OF SHENSTONE, THE (ROBERTSON-COLE) PAULINE FREDERICK .....MAR. 19

"THE CABINET OF DR. CALIGARI"

(Goldwyn Distributing Corporation)

A Radical Departure; Highly Artistic and Imaginative

A PICTURE so thoroughly radical, so totally unlike anything that has ever been presented before, that its reception among filmgoers will cause wide discussion as to its merits or demerits, is "The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari." Being as it is an impressionistic film the uninitiated will wonder over its bizarre and highly fantastic backgrounds and why they should have a place in advancing the radical plot and exposing its weird ramifications. Yet as the first impressions are caught those who do not understand what cubistic art means and care less will realize that these same backgrounds have a definite place through intensifying the idea and characterization and effecting a harmonious composition.

It is like a page from Poe—a fantastic, uncanny piece of imaginative fiction—a page of diabolical scheming by a distorted, insane mind. Thus the sharp angles of the settings—the grotesque designs of angular windows, converging alleyways, topsy-turvy frames, roofs, trees and what not, all of which have been given a coating from the impressionistic paint bucket—are perfectly in keeping with the plot. Even the players are a part of the same uncanny design—the make-up, the costuming bringing a sense of the unreal. It is a crime story which is consistent to the end. Any attempt to whitewash it by a process of regeneration would have spelled disaster. Such a plan would have made it normal. The story revolves principally around two figures, a Dr. Caligari, created from the distorted fancies of a crazy mind—a mind possessed by a lesser figure in the plot who narrates the tale to a friend after he has been pronounced cured, and Cesare, an eerie, almost supernatural somnambulist who is the doctor's instrument of crime, made so by the latter's hypnotic power over him.

The action pilots one through grotesque areaways and structures, sending out an extended, unadulterated thrill on the journey. But the picture also arouses other distinct emotions. It extends a bid to the imagination and humor can be caught in the wierd contrasts of figures and incidents and backgrounds. Those who call it a nightmare of dreadful plottings will admit in the same breath that it is a novelty in screen fiction—a radical departure from the conventional. Perhaps it will be too radical for popular appeal, though it is our impression that human nature is curious enough to warrant it being booked as something distinctively original. The pantomime of Werner Krauss as Caligari is superb. He is the devil incarnate. This actor and Conrad Veidt as Cesare are the perfect representations of what they pretend to be. It is quite likely that people will be receptive to it because of the novelty. Its German origin should not stand in the way. since it speaks no propaganda.—Length, 5100 feet.—Laurence Reid.

Directed by Robert Wiene.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A novelty in screen production is offered in the impressionistic European picture, "The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari," which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. This artistic creation has created a sensation abroad and it is destined to provoke wide comment here, due to its novel design of settings, the fantastic plot, and the remarkable acting of a cast exceptionally skilful at pantomime. The grotesque settings are in perfect harmony with the story, which is a strange pattern woven around the uncanny figure of Dr. Caligari, who takes strange delight in committing crime for crime's sake. In his power is Cesare, a somnambulist, a figure who only awakens at the bid of the doctor. This Cesare is used as the instrument of crime.

The picture is a genuine sensation in its ability to generate thrills. In the company is Werner Krauss, who as Dr. Caligari gives a performance marked for its vividness. Equally successful is Conrad Veidt as the uncanny, ghastly sleepwalker. To those who appreciate something novel and unique, "The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari" is certain to appeal.

PROGRAM READER

Manager ———— takes great pleasure in announcing the presentation at the ———— next ———— of "The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari," the European film sensation. This picture has been widely discussed everywhere it has been shown because of its really novel plot and settings. Nothing like it has ever appeared upon the screen before. It is sensational in its backgrounds—it is amazing in its artistic proportions—it is positively thrilling in its action and suspense—it is absolutely unique in its plot and characterization. Patrons are certain to remark over the real novelty of the screen. Come next ———— and see a picture calculated to make you wonder at a new form of film art. Come and enjoy the thrill of your life.

CATCH LINES

Positively the most original picture ever made is "The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari." Don't miss it. It is a sensation.

"THE PASSION FLOWER"

(First National)

Wonderfully Acted and Artistically Produced Adaptation of Stage Success

UNLESS your patrons refuse to be interested in what is undeniably a tragedy, with three murders and an unusually unhappy ending, this ought to be voted a notable production. Certainly the picture is wonderfully acted, most artistically produced and faultlessly directed with one of the most novel plots ever presented on the screen as a basis for the incident and dramatic situations, provided.

"The Passion Flower" is an adaptation of a play in which Nance O'Neil was starred, that found considerable favor with discriminating New York theatregoers, last season. For picture purposes Miss O'Neil's role, that of the mother has been subordinated and the part of the daughter in which Miss Talmadge has been cast built up to meet the acting requirements of the star, but the picture is by no means a vehicle. In fact it registers as an all star production, with several of an unusually large cast given an opportunity for a display of histrionic ability. In this connection, Courtenay Foote, Eulalie Jensen and Alice May especially distinguish themselves.

This is Herbert Brenon's first production since his return from England and demonstrates once again that he is a master at gauging dramatic tempo and in the technical part of picture making. His lightings and camera angles do much to make the picture impressive and the general atmosphere of the whole production is above criticism.

The story of "The Passion Flower" is laid in Spain. A peasant widow with a grown daughter marries again. The daughter hates her stetpfather in spite of his kindness.

In an attempt to win the girl's filial regard, the stepfather falls in love with her and in conspiring to keep her from marrying another, is instrumental in the murder of two lovers, his own wife, and is himself taken into custody for the crimes.

It is not a pleasant picture but it is real drama that commands attention from every angle of picture making. Miss Talmadge's performance is consistently good throughout with a scene in last sequence, that for emotional acting places her on a par with the most talented of screen stars.—Length, 6700 ft.—J. S. Dickerson.

Directed by Herbert Brenon. Adapted from the stage play of the same name by Herbert Brenon and Mary Murilo.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Norma Talmadge in Nance O'Neil's famous stage play, "The Passion Flower," is the photoplay attraction at the ———— theatre for a ———— days' engagement beginning ————. In "The Passion Flower" Miss Talmadge has the greatest dramatic role of her career as the Spanish girl with whom her step-father is in love and for whom murders are committed and her own mother killed. The picture is a tragedy but from a dramatic and story standpoint it will stand supreme as one of the most notable productions of all time. The feature might well be billed as an all-star production, since others of a formidable cast, that includes Courtenay Foote, Eulalia Jensen and Harrison Ford are given acting opportunities equal to that of the star. The picture was directed by Herbert Brenon, who has lately returned from England and who has to his credit the production of the great features of the past. The feature screens in seven reels, every foot of which is a dramatic treat.

SUGGESTIONS

Bill as a masterpiece in screen stories, telling them frankly that it is a tragedy and a vehicle for the display of histrionic ability. Make the most of the fact that it is Herbert Brenon's first production since his return from England mentioning the big pictures of the past that he has to his credit. Give Nance O'Neil some of the billing, stating that this was her greatest play. For a prologue look to the original script or follow the plan of the New York Strand which is presenting a ballet number in Spanish costumes and atmospheric stage setting. "The Passion Flower" song with words and music are used as titles with an opportunity for a soloist.

CATCH LINES

America's most popular screen star, a master director, the best dramatic story ever presented on stage or screen, made famous by Nance O'Neil, all combine in making this the most notable film of the year.

A picture for those who are fed up with the conventional: who enjoy real drama and real acting: who can enjoy a tragedy for what it is, the most consistent produced picture of the year, a revelation of what the screen can produce in worth while plots.

PICTURE BRAND STAR RELEASED PLAN BOOK

NUT, THE (UNITED ARTISTS) DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS.....MAR. 19
"Entertaining in spots, but needs editing."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Exceptional business for week during Lent. Picture not up to Fairbanks' standard." "Fairbanks has slipped in this picture. It is much poorer than the 'Mark of Zoro,' and while many patrons came to see him the first few days, the rest of the week's business was poor." "Went over big. Some adverse criticism to the effect that it was not up to star's standard." "Fine picture which brought good business." "Brought big business. Pleased my patrons and was a drawing-card."

OFF-SHORE PIRATE, THE (METRO) VIOLA DANA.....MAR. 12
"Not enough substance for picture entertainment."—M. P. News.

ONE MAN TRAIL, THE (FOX) BUCK JONES.....APR. 9
"A well made, entertaining Buck Jones feature."—M. P. News.

OH, LADY, LADY (REALART) BEBE DANIELS.....JAN. 1
"Rather light but entertaining."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"An excellent picture. Bebe Daniels has become very popular here in her short career as a star. This picture has lost nothing; it is transition to the movies." "Good picture to average business." "Great. Bebe certainly has a great following here, and this picture went over 100% better than her first. Believe she is going to be one of the biggest drawing cards among stellar-folk." "Good picture and business was very good during run." "Good picture—good entertainment. Meets modern popular taste. Average satisfactory business." "Bebe Daniels is the best ever and Harrison Ford also; others are mighty good support and production is first class. Realart scores again. I don't want any better pictures or better star than Bebe Daniels."

OLD SWIMMIN' HOLE, THE (RAY-FIRST NATIONAL) CHARLES RAY.....MAR. 5
"Artistic presentation of Riley poem; great entertainment."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A very good Charles Ray picture, but failed to please majority. Played to exceptionally poor business for seven days."

O'MALLEY OF THE MOUNTED (HART-PARAMOUNT) WILLIAM S. HART.....FEB. 19
"Good incident and Bill Hart touches make it interesting." M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"One of the best Bill Hart has done and pleased the Hart fans."

OUT OF THE CHORUS (REALART) ALICE BRADY.....APR. 2
"Well below the average in entertainment values."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Drew a pleasing attendance with average results."

OUTSIDE THE LAW (UNIVERSAL) PRISCILLA DEAN.....JAN. 22
"Best straight melodrama in many a day."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"The best crook picture that has been shown in the city for many months. Big houses all week." "Record houses on this picture. Very entertaining." "Is thrilling crook melodrama which made big hit with our audiences. It has a lot of good exploitation points which we availed ourselves of, and as a result broke all house records during this week's run. Holding it over for a second week." "Sure did go over big. Packed them in at all performances." "Created a record for a two weeks' run heretofore untouched in this section. A picture you can go the limit on in exploitation—and the picture will bear you out in the good things you say about it." "A splendid picture with thrilling plot, which confirmed Priscilla Dean as a favorite with our patrons. Did splendid business for week."

PARTNERS OF FATE (FOX) LOUISE LOVELY.....FEB. 26
"A good average program attraction."— M. P. News.

"Better than average picture from well known novel."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Paramount seems to have fallen down here this season in its big releases. This picture did only an average gross." "The story was carried in serial form by one of the daily papers and this brought crowds to see the picture. They were not disappointed." "Very poor entertainment. Story was not clear and cast was only fair in the opinions of my people. Can't hand this one much. After Vignola's 'The World and His Wife,' this was a great disappointment." "Went over big for week. Is exceptionally good feature." "This picture was only mediocre and it brought forth only fair box office receipts." "Fair picture. Fair business. Fair performance throughout." "Found this picture highly entertaining and we had very big business during its run."

"Well produced domestic drama that will please."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Ran well for the entire week. Big houses set the stamp of their approval on this picture." "Held over for second week because of tremendous business. Generally pleased." "Business held up very well for second week. Pleased our patrons." "A good picture that played to good business." "A slender story produced to bring Dorothy Dickson into pictures. Not a strong box office attraction." "Found this to be a fair picture. Business about average." "A great attraction. This one brought large box office receipts." "Second week to fair business." "Good picture played to better than average business for week." "Lavish but not satisfying. Drew well but did not build. "Very good. Two days to extra big and big business."

PEDDLER OF LIES, THE (UNIVERSAL) FRANK MAYO (MAR. 1).....JAN. 31
"Good production of mechanical and unreal plot."—M. P. News.

PERFECT CRIME, A (DWAN-ASSO. PRODUCERS) SPECIAL CAST.MAR. 5
"Director and star make character study interesting."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"The plot of the picture is good but the production lacks pep."

PLAYTHING OF B'WAY, THE (REALART) JUSTINE JOHNSTONE.....MAR. 26
"Justine Johnstone scores in satisfactory offering."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Pretty poor stuff. Justine doesn't live up to expectations, after all the press-agent flub-dub about her."

PRICE OF POSSESSION, THE (PARAMOUNT) ETHEL CLAYTON.MAR. 26
"Ethel Clayton gives clever performance in mild entertainment."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Does not come up to Ethel Clayton's standard. A fair house all week, but an unsatisfactory picture."

PRINCESS JONES (VITAGRAPH) ALICE CALHOUN.....MAR. 12
"Light offering affords fair entertainment."—M. P. News.

PRAIRIE TRAILS (FOX) TOM MIX.....JAN. 1
"Trivial story, senseless action and a few good thrills."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Regular Mix picture. Well liked. Big crowds, mostly men." "A fine picture which brought more than usual business."

PRISONERS OF LOVE (RELEASED BY GOLDWYN) BETTY COMPSON.....JAN. 29
"Very unusual and artistic drama."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Charming, dainty picture. Opened to better Sunday in several weeks. Well liked, but no unbounded enthusiasm."

RICH GIRL, POOR GIRL (UNIVERSAL) GLADYS WALTON.....JAN. 29

"HER LORD AND MASTER"
(Vitagraph)

Hardly Heavy Enough for Alice Joyce

"HER LORD AND MASTER" does not contain enough dramatic substance for Alice Joyce. This adaptation of a once successful play might have carried sufficient ingredients upon the tage with its dialogue, and considering the fact that its theme carried a emblance of a novelty at the time, it is natural to assume that it offered ome appeal. In this day of repetiteous screen plays, when ideas are retty much alike, it appears a little out of date. Miss Joyce makes the nost of the slight demands of the role. There is no opportunity to display ny emotional talent. She is called upon principally to look pleasant and o wear a fetching wardrobe and she does both with all the charm which s hers on the screen.

The material, however, would look better compressed into two or three eels. It carries a single track story—one which relies entirely on conrast of characterization and a solitary climax for its sustaining features. But while the spectator is waiting for the punch scene his attention is iable to wander because of the mild sequences—sequences which are nostly composed of little misunderstandings between a young married ouple. Miss Joyce is a product of the Middle West who marries into the British nobility. Since she has been brought up to have her own way, her amily have some doubts that the marriage will prove successful. To liminate any cause for conflict she tells her husband to be stern with her f any occasion arises whereby she may assert her independence.

For the purposes of adding a sting a quarrel is precipitated at the time ier relatives are sojourning in London. She asks permission to attend a ertain function and when her "lord and master" refuses, mindful of his romise, the independent girl throws aside all restraint and becomes nistress of her whims. Will he call for her at eleven? He will not! Ie is as stubborn as she is determined. Then when word reaches her hat she will be locked out at twelve unless she returns at that hour, she rrives a few moments later and is allowed to enter by the butler. The ubsequent action after a bit of storming and fretting builds the concluding scene of connubial bliss. The proud wife consents to abide by the vishes of her husband. J. Clarkson Miller's continuity is well arranged nd he has given the director a script that is marked for its compact equences. The scenarist has paid sole attention to the marital conflict, vhich, incidentally, is the backbone of the feature. The offering is adequately staged and acted by a cast that includes Walter McEwen, Frank Sheridan and Holmes E. Herbert.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The combination of a dramatic photoplay of strong emotional appeal and Alice Joyce in the stellar role is sufficient to make the Vitagraph production, "Her Lord and Master," a most satisfying entertainment when it is presented at the ———— theatre next ———— and ————. As a stage play the picture made a big hit and it is certain to duplicate this success on the screen. The scenes are picturesque and filled with human interest. Miss Joyce, who has been identified with high class roles, has in Indiana Stillwater a part calculated to please the most exacting patron.

She is presented as the spoiled girl who becomes the obedient wife when she learns to govern her mad impulses. She had promised to curb her impulsive tendencies, but when an occasion to enjoy a festivity happened she took advantage of it. This precipitated a situation which culminated in a misunderstanding. Eventually Indiana learned how to be happy though married. A well balanced cast interprets the picture which has been adapted by J. Clarkson Miller from Martha Morton's play. Edward Jose directed.

PROGRAM READER

The contrast between American customs and those of the English is clearly drawn in "Her Lord and Master," the picturization of the famous play by Martha Morton, and which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— as a Vitagraph production starring Alice Joyce. The feature permits the beautiful and talented star to exploit her emotions and charm in a most fascinating way. It is a high class role. In fact Miss Joyce has always been associated with such roles. And here she plays the gentlewoman to the manner born. There are many tense situations in "Her Lord and Master" as well as many which are amusing. The

SUGGESTIONS

You can work with a teaser campaign here which would be an effective angle. Play up catch lines, exploiting the idea upon which the picture is based. Ask such questions as "Is it safe to take a woman at her word regarding her faults?" See "Her Lord and Master." "Can an American girl be happy in the home of staid British nobility?" See "Her Lord and Master." Another angle would be to exploit the fact that the picture is an adaptation of the successful play of the same name. Mention the author and credit her successes, such as "A Bachelor's Romance," "Brother John," "His Wife's Father," "The Diplomat," "Mice and Men," and "The Movers." Bill it as a fascinating picture of a headstrong girl who thought it best to obey her husband.

CATCH LINES

Should a man be the lord and master of his house? Or should his wife have equal responsibilities? See Alice Joyce in "Her Lord and Master."

"THE CITY OF SILENT MEN"
(Paramount)

Interesting Crook Story with Rich Details and Heart Interest

THOMAS MEIGHAN'S latest photoplay, "The City of Silent Men," is destined to meet with popular favor everywhere, pictures are shown because the ingredients which compose it are rich in the substance that builds interesting drama. It has a clearly defined plot, sharp characterization, exceptionally realistic detail and such effective values as heart interest and human appeal. It is a picture which is practically flawless insofar as the continuity of scenes is concerned. While it is pitched in a more or less sombre key the logic is so genuine and the action so graphic that a balancing note of humor would appear unnecessary.

Tom Forman, the director, has taken actual scenes of Sing Sing, "the city of silent men"; and has so shaped his sequences against this background that the interest and suspense take on added value. If one can overlook the idea of a man being convicted upon circumstantial evidence and sentenced for life for a crime of murder then one can accept it as a genuine attempt to establish something real. It strikes us that the protagonist is "railroaded" on pretty flimsy evidence. But this premise has nothing to do with the entertaining highlights. The country youth comes to New York and is picked for a sucker by a gang of crooks. The manner in which he is "pedigreed" by the detective forces, his finger prints taken, and also his mannerisms and carriage, is sufficient to get the spectator in a curious mood. His pal is a "third-timer" who urges him to escape at the first opportunity. The picture revolves around his flight for liberty and his efforts to keep outside the clutches of the law. Every track is covered here. When one expects him to get away by disguising himself in a suit of clothes from the tailor shop, a surprise comes when the garments are discovered. Being a trusty it is easy for him to secret himself in an empty box and be carried to safety.

The heart interest enters in the communion of mother and son. The convict's desire for liberty is actuated by the news that the mother is dying and it is a pathetic touch when he arrives home to see her funeral cortege passing. For conflict a determined detective is employed—a detective who traces his man by visiting the cemetery years after and learning who paid for the woman's grave. The love interest is almost neglected and could be dispensed with entirely except for the fact that it supplies a happy ending. The concluding sequences are the only topical movie parts of the picture. It is the detail of prison life and the splendid acting by the star and Paul Everton as his pal which are conspicuous in a feature of many absorbing highlights.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Should an innocent man who has been sent to prison on circumstantial evidence seek escape or should hee resign himself to fate and serve the term? That is the question which provides the drama of Thomas Meighan's latest picture, "The City of Silent Men," which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. This is a screen version of John Moroso's novel of the same name and it has been ably put into picture shape by Tom Forman, one of the ablest of the younger school of directors. As Jim Montgomery, Mr. Meighan contributes a portrayal which is remarkably rich in its human appeal.

Jim might have become reconciled to his fate had it not been for the fact that his mother was dying from grief. He makes his escape, but arrives home just in time to see his mother's funeral cortege leaving the home. He goes west, and in a new environment, builds his life anew. He is traced by a detective, and he knows that he can be identified by finger prints. How does he win his freedom? The answer is so unusually strong and dramatically effective that to relate it here would be destroying the picture's interest for the spectator. "The City of Silent Men" is compactly told and builds scenes and situations which are thoroughly compelling. In the cast are George MacQuarrie, Kate Bruce and Lois Wilson.

PROGRAM READER

Do you recall Thomas Meighan's superb work in "The Miracle Man"? Do you remember his sterling performance in "The Easy Road?" Well he has another crook role in "The City of Silent Men," which he will show at the ———— theatre next————. Mr. Meighan's forceful interpretation adds another virile screen portrait to his gallery of characters. It has been said that he gives his finest performance as the wrongly accused convict who finds a way to freedom. Many of the scenes were filmed in Sing Sing, while others were photographed in the Criminal Courts building and the Tombs itself. Pretty Lois Wilson, who will be remembered for her charming portrayal in "What Every Woman Knows," appears in the opposite role and acquits herself in a most capable manner. It is a picture which is certain to entertain because of its stirring adventure.

SUGGESTIONS

Thomas Meighan is a star who has forged ahead rapidly since his memorable work in "The Miracle Man." He has become famous as the best interpreter of crook roles on the screen. You can tell your audiences that the star comes to the ———— in another of his distinctive character roles. Tell that the picture is crammed with exciting adventure, that it offers a charming romance, that it is strong in pathos and sentiment. Play up the star and if he hasn't a following—the chance is yours to develop a following for him. Play up Tom Forman and tell that he was formerly a popular leading man. Play up Lois Wilson. She is one of the most beautiful women identified with pictures. The title is a good one and

"Flashbacks" on Earlier Releases

"Earthbound" (Goldwyn)—"Never had a picture in my theatre which called for such divided comment. Those who liked were crazy about it—those who did not like it roasted it. There were no half-way opinions on it. Kept it on full week in house where limit of run is three days, and it made a lot of money. Personally, considered it the season's most remarkable production." "Better than the average photoplay in estimation of our patrons and did a very fine business."

"Daddy Long Legs" (Pickford)—"Just as good as if it were brand new. Bears out the theory that a good picture is always a good picture."

"Passion's Playground" (First National)—"Mediocre picture; business fair."

"The Jack Knife Man" (First National)—"Fair business; no star; not enough pulling power."

"My Lady's Latchkey" (First National)—"Katherine MacDonald is a favorite with the women and matinee business was particularly good."

"The Love Flower" (Griffith)—"This one went over at opening and closing days and average the middle part of the week. Very entertaining picture."

"Dinty" (First National)—"Very good feature which brought more than the usual business."

"Curtain" (First National)—"Katherine MacDonald's beauty aided much in making this story of stage life attractive. Miss MacDonald's popularity is increasing in this city. Business good."

"Peaceful Valley" (First National)—"A mediocre story that only drew fair houses."

"Fickle Women" (State Rights)—"Butler is a wonder in 'Fickle Women'—great picture, the box office returns were not very large."

"Love, Honor and Behave" (First National)—"Only average picture and brought poor returns."

"While New York Sleeps" (Fox)—"Going over very big. First morning it opened had to turn them away at eleven o'clock, the first show having gone on at nine-thirty."

"My Lady's Latchkey" (First National)—"I liked the picture very much and so did everybody who spoke to me about it as they left the theatre. Had one of the biggest Sundays of the year. In fact was a close second to the record-breaking opening."

"The Branding Iron" (Goldwyn)—"Not more than a fair week."

"The Greatest Love" (Selznick)—"An excellent picture which Vera Gordon's name helped to put over to excellent business for one week. Did so well we are holding it over for second week's run."

"Why Change Your Wife" (Paramount)—"Had capacity business with this one. Everyone seemed pleased and it sure did make a hit at my house."

"The U. P. Trail" (Hodkinson)—"Regular Western with lots of action. Opened to more than usual business and help up well all week."

"Madonnas and Men" (State Rights)—"Opened big. Everyone thinks it a big picture from every standpoint. Fine box office attraction and splendid audience picture."

"The Snob" (Realart)—"Very poor stuff—light and frivolous but some of them liked it and the business was just ordinary."

"The Guile of Women" (Goldwyn)—"An average Will Rogers picture which was well liked by his numerous admirers. Started out well but business fell off toward the end of the week."

"Something to Think About" (Paramount)—"Excellent production in every way. Picked up so well at end of two weeks' run that we came near to holding it for third week and only abandoned this plan because of advertising and photos being placed on 'Humoresque.'" "Certainly a great picture and it took well here. Crowds jammed the theatre at each performance." "Very interesting picture which seemed to please my audiences." "The picture has played to three solid weeks and was still going strong at the end of the engagement. The title is a great advantage."

"THE WAKEFIELD CASE"
(Weber—World—State Rights)

Crook Story Carries Lively Action and Suspense

THE first essential in a crime story is to incorporate a sufficient amount of suspense so that the spectator will be kept on the anxious seat concerning the denouement. "The Wakefield Case" arries this essential element. The purpose of such a plot as forms the ackground of this offering is to befuddle the imagination as to the lentity of the crooks and detectives. While one is led to believe that the ction comprises several groups of crooks, who vie with each other to eal the rubies, it is certain that detectives are hidden in the pattern mewhere, only to be spotted at the concluding climax. Any one who members the style of writing crook stories will take advantatge of this act.

"The Wakefield Case" is a lively story. Make no mistake about that. here is something doing most every minute from the time that the hero's ther is killed to the day that the former exacts vengeance for the crime. has been the author's privilege to hide carefully the identity of his aracters. He even employs a girl to lead the hero and spectators astray. heir actions are certainly mysterious. The picture opens in London nd the succeeding two reels or more transpire on a steamer bringing he crooks to America. Here is occasion to employ the trimmings and appings of the vessel for the purpose of suspense. It is a story of rob- ing robbers. The rubies are sought by the Krogan brothers. When the reen gang steal them, the elder Krogan takes upon himself the task of ealing them.

Meanwhile various personalities are disclosed which help to pile up the ystery. You suspect a crook in the clothes of an English army officer; ou suspect the aged father of the heroine, and the latter also comes nder suspicion. The only person you are sure about is the hero, who in ality seems a rank outsider in this plot of underworld life. A few oments are given up to the romance, but it is mostly a negligible factor. he hero is finally caught in the clutches of the Krogans, and one suspects e is also in the clutches of the Breen gang. This is a weak point because he girl, her father and the officer are more or less attached to Scotland ard. After a "hefty" tussle in which Herbert Rawlinson tosses men round like a wrestler and which incident defies logic the picture con- udes with the culprits caught and the rubies safe. The picture is inter- ting, but loses many of its point by bad cutting.—Length, 6 reels.—aurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A fascinating story of crime is offered in "The Wakefield Case," which comes o the ———— theatre next ———— with Herbert Rawlinson as the star. his photoplay is the work of Shannon Fife, an author long experienced in writing r the screen. He has woven together a remarkable thread of melodramatic inci- ents, all of which revolve about the detection of crime. "The Wakefield Case" arries what is known in the underworld as the Master Mind, a figure who is ominant over his associates and who conceives and executes the daring exploits f his profession.

It not only boasts of one Master Mind, but three as well. They all scheme and lan to overthrow each other as well as the entire police forces of two continents. gainst these sinister forces of the underworld, Herbert Rawlinson, in the char- cter of Neil Hartley, matches his wits. The outcome affords the spectator a con- nuation of thrills from beginning to end. "The Wakefield Case" is marked for s lively action and its dominant note of mystery and suspense. And it is finely cted by a well known cast of players. George Irving directed.

PROGRAM READER

Do you enjoy a rattling good mystery story? Do you like to witness such a ory translated on the screen with all its dominant mystery, its moving and com- elling action, its abundant suspense? If you do, then come to the ———— heatre next ———— and see "The Wakefield Case," starring Herbert Rawlinson. n the cast are Charles Dalton, Joseph Burke, Florence Billings and Jere Austin— ll well known and exceptional players. The picture is by Shannon Fife, one of he best known scenario writers on the screen. He has fashioned a photoplay hich is certain to appeal because of its dramatic quality. To detail the story ould be spoiling the suspense. We will permit you to play detectives next ———— and see if you can solve the mystery.

SUGGESTIONS

Any attempt to detail this story to your public would be fatal. So just con- entrate in your exploitation on the fact that it is a mystery picture, one which bound to keep the spectator in a high pitch of suspense because of a com- licated plot which has to do with crime. Bill it as an exceptional mystery photo- lay. Emphasize the suspense and the rattling action. Mention the cast.

"FORBIDDEN LOVE"
(Wistaria Productions-State Rights)

Rather Morbid But Has Interesting Moments

THERE is a rather unhealthy theme upon which this picture is founded, presenting as it does a Cain and Abel characterization. While it carries a sympathetic quality in the triumphing note of virtue over viciousness, and possesses such appealing elements as heart interest and pathos, the burden of its idea is almost too heavy to make it genuinely popular. There may be instances of a man whose nature is so vicious that he turns upon his brother, but they are so few and far between that they smack of unreality. There is really no motive for the bad brother's conduct. He is guided solely by diabolical impulses. And when he does have a grain of conscience at the death of his child it is dismissed immediately. We will say that the development of the character is consistent to the end.

The brothers are in love with the same girl, but the vicious one possessing a dominant personality, is able to win her through discrediting the other. The melodrama revolves around the conflict of temperament when the good brother visits his relative. The director has greatly emphasized the difference in characters. Not an incident is shown, but what is developed around a satanic impulse of hatred and cruelty. It is all quite morbid and hectic. The devilish brother sings his song of hate by innuendo principally, although he becomes brutally frank at times, especially toward his long suffering wife. The picture is enacted against backgrounds of a New England fishing village. There is a deal of good atmosphere but the simplicity of life is not once recorded. The action is as turbulent as the tide itself.

There is one thing about "Forbidden Love," it carries a punch—one almost too rugged to be realistic. The climax presents a genuine thrill since it shows the brothers in mortal combat high on the bridge of a lighthouse. The bad one has come to the place with murder in his heart. The rain is beating down in torrents. And in a frail rowboat the wife, who has aroused his jealousy by declaring her love for the good brother, follows, and entertains happy moments for the first time since her marriage when her vicious husband perishes. The director has overshot his scenes which are noticeable in the wealth of detail, some of which is totally irrelevant. And the picture is ragged in places. For the most part it develops with good continuity and furnishes adequate suspense. The picture has been intrusted to a capable cast that contributes first rate performances. In fact the leading players should provide a good angle of exploitation. The high lights are the atmosphere and the thrilling climax. —Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A strong, dramatic picture of a house divided against itself, of brother against brother, told against a realistic background is offered in "Forbidden Love," which comes to the ———— theatre with a cast that includes Creighton Hale, George MacQuarrie and Marguerite Clayton. This is a story of fisher-folk of a New England village and revolves around the conflict of characters, two brothers in fact, one whose nature is vicious, the other, a paragon of virtue. Into their lives enters a girl who is loved by both although the wicked brother triumphs through possessing a more dominant personality. His entire life is dedicated to the vindication of his hateful impulses. In the end virtue triumphs.

The picture is remarkable for its realistic action which measures out a goodly quota of thrills and adequate suspense. It carries such elements as heart interest, pathos and jealousy. The players give a good account of themselves. The picture is directed by Philip Van Loan who has saturated it with splendid atmosphere.

PROGRAM READER

They were brothers, one of whom was vicious, the other, gentle and honest. The latter was incapable of expressing love due to his innate modesty, with the result that the other won the girl, whom both desired. Then into the lives of all three came sorrow, disillusionment and despair, brought about through the vicious machinations of the evil brother. This is the brief outline of "Forbidden Love," the rugged melodrama which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. Enacted against the picturesque backgrounds of a New England village, it records graphic and powerful suspense. It is a picture of stirring climaxes and thrills.

SUGGESTIONS

The best angle to exploit this picture is the announcement of the cast. Your crowd is familiar with the three leading players. All have achieved success a score of times. Another good angle is to tell that it is a stirring melodrama enacted against the picturesque backgrounds of a New England fishing village. You can put over atmosphere if you go in for lobby display by featuring fishing paraphernalia, such as oars, nets, etc. Play up the fact that it tells an absorbing story. Bill it as an unusually strong picture of hardy fisher-folk. The title is a winner, too, and can be used for effective advertising, principally on a teaser campaign. You might be able to stage a prologue with little expense featuring a lighthouse, and a vocalist singing songs of the deep.

CATCH LINES

See "Forbidden Love," an absorbing drama of twisted lives. A picture of action and suspense.

"THE LITTLE CLOWN"
(Realart)

Heart Interest Circus Story Should Get Over

THIS picture will undoubtedly be a reminder of "Polly of the Circus" to the majority of picturegoers. It is actually cut from the same pattern, relying upon a romance of the big tops which is stressed with sentiment and heart interest. Avery Hopwood, the author, probably had the above-mentioned play in mind when he conceived "The Little Clown," for the plot and characterization are almost identical. The idea behind it is to point the contrast between a family of aristocrats and the democratic members of a circus. In emphasizing this conflict the story is permitted to sag because of repetitious detail and the fact that the characterization does not always ring genuine. Still "The Little Clown" is about the most attractive story the star has had in some time.

A real honest-to-goodness circus seems to have been employed here to bring atmosphere. It is this element which really saves the picture. Where Polly rode a horse and was "fathered" by a clown, Miss Minter plays one of the white face funmakers and is also "fathered" by a clown. She does not fall in love with a minister much to the horror of his congregation, but responds to a young renegade of wealthy parents much to the disgust of his haughty relatives. And so the picture pivots on this extremely simple premise. The conclusion is as certain as the tide. The pretty clown deserts the arena to be taken on probation by her fiance's parents, until such time as she proves herself worthy or unworthy to become a wife and daughter-in-law. The best spots in the offering are disclosed in the circus scenes.

The sequences in the parental home are somewhat drawn out and tend to destroy much of the logic. She is chastised on every occasion but accepts the parental attitude gracefully. Many will wonder why she remains steadfast in her devotion considering the spineless conduct of the young man. The story develops here by pointing her efforts to cultivate deportment, with some of the scenes good for mild amusement. The punch comes when the circus visits the town. The show people come out to the house and are expelled because of being intoxicated, a condition caused by the playful youngster of the house. Being a spirited girl, the heroine accompanies them and is about to accept her guardian clown as a husband when the wealthy youth appears and offers apologies and renews his declaration of love. And so it is over. A mild but interesting little picture. Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

What is considered one of Mary Miles Minter's finest pictures is "The Little Clown," which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. This is a photoplay of the "big top," the life under the big white tent of a circus and it carries an appeal for all classes of picturegoers. It will attract those who have fond memories of youthful days at the circus; it will fascinate the children with its revelations of circus life, which takes in the clowns, the acrobats, the equestrians, etc. And Miss Minter as Pat, the orphan ward of Toto, the clown, happy in the care-free atmosphere of her beloved circus annd later as the disheartened girl whose efforts to be a lady and win the sanction of her sweetheart's parents toward a marriage ceremony, gives an undeniably charming performance.

"The Little Clown" is remarkable for its reality. The scenes under the big top are all real. The picture is charged with fine sentiment, pathos, humor, romance and disillusionment. The supporting cast is excellent, consisting of Jack Mulhall, Helen Dunbar, Neely Edwards, Winter Hall and Cameron Coffey and others. The picture is an adaptation of Avery Hopwood's play and has been directed by Thomas Heffron.

PROGRAM READER

The thrills, the enjoyment of going to a real circus will be experienced by those patrons who come to the ———— theatre next ———— and see the popular and pretty star, Mary Miles Minter, in "The Little Clown." Without the shadow of doubt the picture is said to be her finest achievement. All the joy of witnessing a circus under the "big top" will be felt by the spectator as he takes in the life, atmosphere, of the white tent. Miss Minter has a very appealing role and the picture is saturated with human touches. It is a picture remarkable for its realism. A real circus is revealed before one's eyes. If you have outgrown childhood, the memories of youthful days will swarm over you again; if you are children in reality you will respond to the make-believe world. Come and be royally entertained. Don't forget the date. Next ———— .

SUGGESTIONS

Here is a circus story which should pack them in. All you have to do is to detail the facts and the crowds will come. In many communities a circus never appears so play up the fact that the community isn't being cheated. Play up the fine atmosphere. Use a circus style in billing the picture. You can put it over with bally-hoo stunts. You can go in for circus exploitation. Have barkers stationed around your lobby. If you want to go in for atmosphere you can put up a sort of big top in your lobby. Put on a prologue after a circus act style. Clowns, acrobats, and a barker—these can get your crowd in the right mood. Play up the author. He is a well known playwright and your crowd is doubtless familiar with his offerings. Your artist can put on a good design of the star in a clown costume. Go in strong for atmosphere.

"THE HEART OF MARYLAND"
(Vitagraph)

Excellent Picture from a Sure-Fire Success

THERE is no question about David Belasco's celebrated play, "The Heart of Maryland," being the most dramatically effective of any stage subject written around the Civil War. Possessing as it does sure-fire ingredients, it has appealed to theatregoers ever since its first presentation. And now it comes to the screen the second time, and sponsored by Vitagraph it still conquers the spectator because of its permanently interesting features. The Civil War is just far removed enough in the background of history to cast an irresistible glamour of romance over one, and yet it is near enough to make one feel an actual participant. This is something that the late World War is unable to do.

Vitagraph has given Tom Terriss a free hand to make an exceptional film. And being an intelligent director he has approached the memorable romance with appreciation for its entertaining values. He has demonstrated that a fine picture can be made from a play which has encountered the march of time. That many months were consumed in the production is believable in the painstaking effort to incorporate compelling scenes, rich detail, and make them harmonious with the intricacies of the plot and action. Mr. Terriss has eliminated the features that many of his contemporaries would have employed. They would have relied entirely on spectacular battle episodes. He must have taken into account the fact that the Civil War would provide a poor substitute to the late conflict in the war scenes. So he has emphasized the romance, paying special attention to the many-sided ramifications of the plot.

The tragedy of houses divided against each other is the point which is dominant here. The Southern heroine, her brother who casts his allegiance with Lincoln, the Northern hero, the spy who deserts the uniform of blue for one of gray, the young hot-blooded Southerner who, upbraided by Maryland for his lack of patriotism, enlists with Lee's forces—these are all intact. They are piloted through the richly dramatic scenes which build with definite action straight to a highly thrilling climax. This occurs when Maryland, to enable her lover to escape, swings on the bell clapper and silences it. It is a complicated play which has been made easy to follow because there is a place for everything and everything is in place. The picture is undoubtedly strong in pathos, heart interest and romance. It is properly costumed and photographed amid charming backgrounds. In fact it is marked for its fidelity to truth. The cast is splendid. The film should be a great box-office attraction.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

One of the greatest plays ever written arcund the War of the Rebellion is coming as a picture next ————. It is an adaptation of David Belasco's memorable, "The Heart of Maryland," a play which has achieved wide popularity for many, many years. It has been played before millions and is acknowledged to be a classic for stage romances. The picture is said to be even finer than the play because of the wider scope of the camera. The limitations of the stage are eliminated here. And one can delight in the warring episodes, the big outdoors, the play of atmosphere.

Vitagraph has given a wonderful production of the play. In the cast are such popular and talental artists at Catherine Calvert, Crane Wilbur, William Collier, Jr., and Felix Krembs. It is a play wherein father is turned against son, and brother against sister. It brings the conflict right down to the moment. You become thrilled to see Maryland Calvert save her lover despite the fact that he is associated with the enemy. The blue and gray—the fine play of romance—the war eposides, the thrills, the love appeal—these all bring an enchantment. The picture is a Tom Terriss production.

PROGRAM READER

A story of the Civil War—a romance of the memorable conflict ever holds fascination. There is constantly a new generation growing up that becomes fascinated with this momentous period of American history. A picture of a Civil War romance. A picture of the momentous conflict when fathers and sons were torn from each other—when brothers and sisters forgot family ties to adhere to their cause.

"WHAT'S WORTH WHILE?"
(Paramount)

Single Track and Rather Slow

USUALLY when Lois Weber creates something for the screen, it can be called worth while entertainment. She is a firm believer in adding a moral to her documents, and most of her stories have something to say. "What's Worth While?" is not Lois Weber at her best because resorting to a poular fancy among screen authors she has exploited a single track idea which doesn't solve anything, nor does it build dramatic entertainment. There is a favorite formula among scenario writers which is duly catalogued. Its solution is found in the aristocratic girl, who tired of culture and refinement, longs to find expression with a western caveman.

It may be a fancy with the feminine sex that manliness must be cloaked in rough and ready attire, and that the type must necessarily have atrocious manners, particularly with his knife and fork. It is the accepted opinion that tried and true hearts beat only beneath a woolen shirt. This is the formula of this picture which is pitched in this contrasting, romantic key and which takes a long time to come to its orthodox finish. The proud and aristocratic girl is lugged out to the boundless West by her father and literally thrown into the arms of a rough and ready native. The type impresses her because of his distinct difference from the boiledshirt gentry of the effete East with whom she has chummed around. His manners grate upon her nerves, but she marries him because of his rugged honesty. And thereby hangs the slight dramatic thread. She reforms him into a gentleman and during his transformation he loses his ruggedness. Thoroughly disappointed she lugs him to the West again where in the course of time he assumes his erstwhile primitive manners.

It's a great story for the people west of the Mississippi who are products of the soil. Those who never had a chance for a life of the big outdoors will not take kindly to the idea that strong hearts only palpitate in men of crude simplicity. The picture doesn't point many contrasts. There is this bid for romance which isn't made the most of because of the serious attitude of Claire Windsor, who plays the heroine. A little humor, a little shading would have added some charm to the romantic moments. A wealth of subtitles are employed which do not advance the action but which do acquaint the patron with the beauty of the feminine players. At a neighborhood house the picture got over fairly well, but the spectators burst out laughing over the emotional tossing of the heroine in her berth. —Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Presenting in novel form a problem that is understood by every man and woman, "What's Worth While?" a Paramount picture produced by Lois Weber, who has to her credit a large number of screen successes, of which the latest is "Once To Every Woman," will be shown at the ———— theatre next ————. The story deals with an aristocratic girl who has been brought up in a cultured environment. The life has palled upon her and she longs to associate with people who are not extremely "cultivated." She is urged by her father to take a western trip with him and when the destination is reached she is confronted with an elemental type of man.

The young man is not versed in the art of deportment. His table manners are atrocious. But beneath his rough exterior there beats a heart that is true gold, and good red blood flows through his veins. The man arouses her curiosity and it is not long before the girl finds him extremely attractive. When they are married she urges him to become cultured, but once he has mastered deportment she realizes that he has lost his attractiveness. In the course of time the husband reverts to his elemental type and the girl is satisfied that his simple manner is supreme again. It is a picture which is well directed and acted and fascinates the patron because of its human touches.

PROGRAM READER

She had been thrown in contact with the cultured type of man so long that she found no interest in the masculine sex. She had longed to meet a primitive man—a man who did not care about his appearance or his manners—but who took life easily and who lived up to his convictions no matter whether it devolved upon him to eat with his knife or drink out of his saucer. She met a primitive man and was promptly swept off her feet. Then came the realization that she might feel ashamed of him. So she taught him good manners. And naturally lost her fascination for him. Why? See "What's Worth While?" At the ———— theatre next ———— with a cast that includes Claire Windsor, Mona Lisa and others. It is a picture which is well acted, and directed by one who has achieved fame as a sponsor of worth while pictures.

SUGGESTIONS

While this picture offers nothing new to the patron, the wise exhibitor can stimulate interest by telling that it carries a deal of good, sound drama, a drama staged by one of the foremost directors in the business. You can play up Lois Weber's other attractions. Certainly your patrons recognize her ability through a score of years. She always has something to tell in her picture plays. Play up the title and get the people curious as to what constitutes what's worth while. Treat

"WHAT'S YOUR REPUTATION WORTH?"
(Vitagraph)

Interesting Feature Gives Star Emotional Opportunities

STRAIGHT from the pages of a popular fiction magazine comes a story which carries the earmarks of success written all over it. The theme and characterization are close enough to life to make it ring genuine in a majority of scenes, and it only falters when the director fails to take into account a few slips of detail. "What's Your Reputation Worth?" is founded upon an interesting idea, which, while not novel in any screen sense, is well fortified with elements calculated to appeal.

Certainly Miss Griffith has her opportunities here for displaying some emotional talent, and she takes advantage of them, although, in all fairness, it must be said that certain scenes tax her ability. This star, however, knows the value of restraint. Her poise comes to the rescue time and again and gives the picture a class which might have been missing had it been interpreted by an actress who delights in "emoting" without knowing how to express herself.

A young business man, his secretary, and an office underling are the principal figures in this domestic romance. The first mentioned is unhappy at home and when he realizes that his wife does not love him, asks his charming secretary to stake her reputation by playing the part of an innocent co-respondent, so that his better half may find some cause for divorce. Surely a novel touch and one which provides dramatic moments. The conflict releases another effective note when the wife, goaded by jealousy, seeks to humiliate the secretary. The latter is living in her employer's country home, though fully chaperoned. It is when she realizes the color in which the jealous rival has painted her and leaves the house that the picture loses some of its vigor. It is not reasonable that such a pretty girl could remain out of work and sink almost to the gutter in her extremity.

The director, who has covered his tracks well up to this point, falters by allowing the star to appear lavishly costumed when she has scarcely money enough to pay for a room. A melodramatic note is struck in the villainous attitude of a former office admirer to dishonor her. She has staked her reputation and is paying the penalty by suffering the insults of her so-called friends. The picture closes in a conventional way when she goes to a friend in need, who, when he realizes that she is a thoroughbred calls in the erstwhile employer, and happiness is their reward. The picture holds the attention despite some breaks in the logic and is well acted by Percy Marment in the opposite role.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A stirring story of the problems that enter into the life of the working girl is presented in "What's Your Reputation Worth?" the Vitagraph feature coming to the ———— theatre next ———— and ———— with Corinne Griffith as the star. It is an adaptation of a story in a popular fiction magazine and contains a powerful drama and a most compelling romance. The heroine is a private secretary of a rich business man whose domestic difficulties bring him a deal of unhappiness.

Realizing that his wife does not love him he is anxious to relieve her of the burden of putting up with him. He asks his secretary to risk her reputation so that she might be employed as a correspondent. Surely a novel scheme. But when the girl takes up the task she finds it repellant in many ways. Yet she loved him. In a crisis she is compelled to leave him and he never realized the sorrow and despair she suffered because of her affection for him. That is not until she turned to him months afterward. The picture carries the spectator from one dramatic scene to another, the action comprising scenes charmingly presented and wonderfully acted by the star and a cast that includes Percy Marmont.

PROGRAM READER

Imagine yourself, girls, in the position of Corinne Griffith, who, in her latest picture, "What's Your Reputation Worth?" is asked by her employer to stake her reputation by compromising herself with him in order that his wife might obtain a divorce. What would you do? Would you give up your good name? Would you risk losing everyone's respect? It was a trying ordeal that the employer placed upon his private secretary. But she risked reputation, good name, and self respect because she loved him. Would you go so far for the man YOU LOVED? See Corinne Griffith in "What's Your Reputation Worth?" at the ———— theatre next ———— . It is a charming picture—a dramatic picture—a picture with a tremendous heart appeal. Miss Griffith is supported by Percy Marmont as her leading man.

SUGGESTIONS

The idea introduced in the Program Reader would be a good angle for exploitation here. You can tell also that star has the strongest dramatic picture in which she has ever appeared. Tell that she is one of the best gowned women on the screen and that she wears a lavish wardrobe here. Play up Percy Marmont. This popular leading man has a real following. Tell that it is a simple, heart interest story of present day life in a great American city. Stress the pathos, the sentiment, the romance. Present stills of the star. She has a lovely personality which should be put over on the public. Bill it as a picture of vital heart-throbs. The title can come in handy for some real live exploitation put over in the shape of a teaser campaign.

"THE GREAT DAY"
(Paramount)

Good Production Given Mediocre Story

THIS is the first picture to be made in England by Paramount, and if it hasn't any other appealing quality than its picturesque scenes, that virtue is enough to entitle it to recognition. It is the backgrounds which compensate for a story which beats about the bush without arriving anywhere. Adapted from a Drury Lane melodrama it naturally carries a deal of theatric plotting. No doubt the original play was linked up with German propaganda which it exposed with all the necessary thrills. Here the title finds meaning in the day when disillusionment is swept aside and love is triumphant.

It starts off with a good bid for mystery, presenting a villain who is eager to "cash in" on a secret process of making steel, but who actually stops in his tracks and fades right out of the picture, his motive never explained. Apparently he was flouted off screen in his attempt to hand over the carefully guarded secret to his government. Meanwhile the picture develops a domestic theme, with a hero, unable to declare his love to his rich employer's daughter because of the unpleasant fact that he has been married to an adventuress who has forsaken him. This bride is believed dead, but she bobs up to torment him through blackmailing methods. The complications of the plot will be understood when she is revealed as the wife of the hero's best friend—a friend who is also believed dead. The hero marries here out of sympathy. He narrates this domestic maze in a moment of confidence, at which point the picture flashes back to the time when the friend seemingly perishes scaling an Alpine mountain. Thus the matter rests until the adventuress jumps into the scene to be followed by her husband, the hero's supposedly dead companion.

The action switches to Paris and in a scene of the underworld, the villain is frustrated. The friend rescued from the sordid life of the French capital, they make their way to England where the adventuress is caught in her attempt to blackmail the heroine's father. And so the romance comes into its expression. The picture jumps about quite a bit, although the interest is always held because of the change of scene, and the melodramatic touches incorporated here and there. English country life, the Paris boulevards, and some wonderfully exquisite shots taken in the Alps are caught and give the banal story a certain definite appeal. An English cast of players interprets the feature with fair success. The leading man is rather colorless, and Arthur Bourchier, who is featured, overacts.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Great Day," the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— is a Paramount British production with an all-star cast of English players. The offering has been staged by Hugh Ford in England, Paris and the snow-clad Alps and deals with a young Englishman who invents a steel process for the possession of which rival nations are clamoring and this forms the basis of a tremendously interesting narrative. The picture is founded on a Drury Lane melodrama. In Borstwick's Steel works there is employed a young expert, Frank Beresford, who has invented a new process which is to yield the strongest, lightest steel in the world. It happens that Beresford is very much in love with Clara Borstwick, but an incident in his past life prevents him from making a declaration of his love.

The picture builds up a novel dramatic situation. The hero marries the widow of his friend, but she runs away. Thinking her dead he marries Clara at which time the adventuress comes back very much alive. Also his long lost friend. The latter's entrance into the action at this point eliminates the adventuress. The result is Clara and Frank are reconciled. The picture is exceptionally appealing in its composition of scenes and builds up effective climaxes. The acting is entirely adequate.

PROGRAM READER

Suppose you were deeply in love with a beautiful girl and was prevented from asking her hand in marriage because of a cloud in your life. Suppose you had been married to the widow of your dearest friend and she had left you. Suppose you had information which led you to believe she was dead, only to be confronted after your second marriage with your first wife's presence. What would you do? Come to the ———— theatre next ———— and see the Paramount British picture, "The Great Day" is an adaptation of the Drury Lane melodrama of the same name, which has been directed with unbounded skill by Hugh Ford. The story takes one from England to the snow-clad Alps and the streets of Paris. It is packed with exciting moments, offers a pleasant romance and is well acted by a cast of celebrated English players.

SUGGESTIONS

You can bill this picture as a powerful dramatic story of English life, the development of which carries the spectator to Paris and into the Alps. You can tell them that the theme is one of great heart interest and is bound to please. A Light and Pleasing Romance of Greenwich Villag

CARMEL MYERS comes to the screen in a picture which will full perfectly its mission. Which is to say that it offers light and agre able entertainment and presents a clean, refreshing romance in manner sufficiently original. The star herself gives a performance whi we believe, will win her more admirers than many of her previous p tures. This is due largely to the role. She plays a little Italian girl, wl works as a waitress in a small cafe in New York's Greenwich village. H costuming is simple and well suited to her type of beauty. She is n called upon for any very emotional acting and is allowed to impress l the charm of a vivacious personality.

The story starts, and never leaves, that favorite locale of authors—t Bohemian Greenwich village. It is to be expected that the characters a settings would be exaggerated, for it would never do to make "t village" too conventional. It would destroy one of the traditions New York.

The story is that of a girl who, in self defense, strikes her annoyer wi a chair. The man is found dead and the girl flees in fear into the roo of an artist who lives next door. He believes in her innocence and d guises her as a model, and she is discovered in the apartment by a wil eyed denizon of "the village" who turns her over to the police. It easy to guess that she did not really do the killing, but they have used crude method of fixing the blame upon a gangster, who had entered t room after the girl had used the chair with good effect and killed t man with a knife. The girl is set free and her friend, the artist, is pe fectly willing to lose his fiancee, who is of the iceberg variety. There the usual happy ending.

"The Dangerous Moment" is light and wholesome, perfectly clean, a well able to hold the interest of an audience. The murder does not ke it from being a comedy drama. In a way it is reminiscent of "The Ci derella Man," not so much in its plot as in its spirit.

Miss Myers is supported by Herbert Heyes, who gives a capable pe formance as the artist. Bonnie Hill is well cast as the cold blooded fiance There is really no villain except George Rigas, a very good type, who suffe death rather early. "THE CHARMING DECEIVER"
(Vitagraph)

Mild Interest Because of Its Conventional Treatment

NOT much can be said of "The Charming Deceiver" except that it is an ordinary program picture which never arouses any great interest but which at the same time never entirely loses its hold upon an audience. It tells a story not entirely convincing, which moves along in the prescribed grooves. A few uncommon, original, incidents or a continuity more swiftly moving would have given a zest to the picture which it now lacks, and the absence of which is felt by an audience.

Alice Calhoun is the star. While possessing beauty and a certain amount of charm, there seems to be a stilted manner about her acting. Perhaps this impression comes from the conventional treatment of the story. But her personality is not one which stays in the memory long after the theatre has been left behind.

The story concerns a young woman who has been tricked into a marriage with a criminal. She returns to the home of her grandfather from which her mother had been driven out years before because of an unsatisfactory marriage. The old man, a proud New Englander, is sick and the girl fears to tell him of her marriage to a jailbird. When her husband escapes from prison, he comes to the Connecticut homestead and poses as his wife's brother, who is expected home from a military hospital. Richard Walling, a young neighbor, falls in love with the girl, and is discouraged at her persistent refusal of his attentions. The atmosphere is cleared by the escaped convict himself, who, while intoxicated, reveals that he is husband and not brother to the girl. The two are prepared to leave the house, when the real brother from the military hospital arrives. Detectives are also hot on the trail by this time, and the husband makes a happy ending possible by committing suicide.

The cast is not outstanding, but a good performance is given by Charles Kent as the grandfather, and Jack McLean is a likeable young brother. Rollin Bottomly, while not the type of leading man commonly seen on the screen, is a good enough actor. Eugene Acker's performance as the villain is satisfactory.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Alice Calhoun, one of the most popular of the younger and more recent stars of the screen, plays the leading role in "The Charming Deceiver," which will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ————.

"The Charming Deceiver" is a Vitagraph production, made from a story by Mrs. Owen Bronson and directed by George L. Sargent. It tells a story of unusual interest and affords Miss Calhoun a part which suits her admirably. She is cast as the granddaughter of a stern old New England aristocrat, who returns to the family home from which her mother had been driven out years before. In the meantime she has been led into an unhappy marriage. Her husband is in prison and, because her grandfather is in ill health, she is afraid to tell him of her marriage. The picture ends happily, but there is plenty of romance as well as gripping drama before the final scene.

Supporting this charming star is a very capable cast which includes Jack McLean, Charles Kent, Eugene Acker, Rollin Bottomly and Robert Gaillard. The picture is remarkably well acted and has been produced with great care in regards to detail. The human interest is strong throughout and it is expected to thoroughly please the patrons of the ———— theatre.

PROGRAM READER

Alice Calhoun, one of the younger and rising stars of picturedom, is the featured player in "The Charming Deceiver," which will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. This is a Vitagraph production, rich in romance and heart interest and one which is expected to please the patrons of the ———— entirely.

The story concerns a young girl who is tricked into a marriage with a criminal. Years ago her mother had brought down the wrath of the proud old New Englander upon her head by marrying against her father's choice. So when the young girl returns to the old homestead, she fears to tell of her unhappy marriage. Thus she turns into a deceiver. That she is charming no one will doubt if they see the remarkable acting of Alice Calhoun in this difficult role.

The story unfolds with increasing interest and ends in a highly dramatic climax. Supporting the star are such well known players as Jack McLean, Charles Kent and Eugene Acker. The story is by Mrs. Owen Bronson, and the picture was directed by George L. Sargent.

SUGGESTIONS

Alice Calhoun has not a guaranteed following as yet, and it is well to use her name as much as possible and try to create interest in a new star. If you have shown her last picture, "Princess Jones," be sure and mention the fact. Teaser lines are possible such as the following: "Could you ever forgive deception? Watch and wait for 'The Charming Deceiver' before you answer." Do not book it as an exceptionally dramatic picture, but rather as a light, wholesome piece of entertainment, with plenty of romance and heart interest.

CATCH LINES

Is a white lie always wrong? Can good ever come from telling one? Alice Calhoun who plays the leading role in "The Charming Deceiver," found it brought more harm than good. "The Charming Deceiver" will be at the ———— theatre on ————.

Humorous Touches Make Western Entertaining

TOM MIX comes to the screen this time in a picture which should be adjudged by his admirers as among his most entertaining offerings. The star takes the role of Tex Roberts, "a wild eyed guy from Texas," who comes to a strange town and proceeds to make things interesting. The plot revolves about horse rustling and later on a killing, but despite this material, the picture never gets really serious or dramatic. Instead, the subtitles and the incidents, which, if extraneous to the plot, are well made and appealing, keep up a comic strain. And it is this which supplies good part of the entertainment. For example, "Tony," the horse, goes through some tricks at the bar, and there is considerable hokum when a three hundred pound cowpuncher is introduced. They have found a horse for this heavyweight whose back curves downward like a bow. Then there is a dance hall scene in which Mix arranges the stairway so that it will straighten at the turn of a lover, sending all upon it downwards feet first. In no ordinary Western would the villain, having been thrown out of the window and otherwise punished by the star, rub his forehead wearily and exclaim—"Let me count the pretty cuckoos." There may be some who will resent this facetious treatment of the conventional melodrama, but we think it will win the appreciation of a great many others.

The story is simple and had it been made into straight and continuous Western drama it might have been doomed to mediocrity. Mix does not forget that he is popular largely because of his daredeviltry and faithfulness to the popular conception of a reckless cowpuncher, and this picture has enough stirring action in it to please the enthusiastic youngsters who form a large part of his army of admirers. There is a stampede of horses realistically filmed, some good lariat work, the usual amount of hard riding, a ten-to-one fist fight, with Mix coming out on top of the other ten, and in the climax, a good sized battle in the village street. Even in this scene, however, there is a comedy note when a stick of dynamite explodes in Mix's hand. He recovers in two minutes time.

Sid Nordan is the villain, and William McCormick does well as an Italian. The girl is Pauline Curley, who has not much to do, and does not impress very much doing it.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Residents of ———— will have another opportunity to see Tom Mix, the most popular of all Western stars, at the ———— theatre on ———— when his latest production, "Hands Off," will be shown.

Needless to state, this picture is replete with action of the most virile sort. Probably one of the biggest productions Mix has offered to the public. It contains among its thrilling scenes a realistic stampede of horses which has seldom if ever been equalled in picture history. In the path of the maddened animals is a four-year-old youngster, whom Mix reaches just in time. Escape on either side is impossible so the star simply rushes ahead and jumps into the town pump, stands in the center of the road, until the stampede is over.

There are many other unusually thrilling scenes in this picture, which is well up to the standard which this star established for himself when he first started making Western productions. The story is by Willian McLeod Raine and the direction is the work of George E. Marshall. Playing opposite the star is Pauline Curley and others in the cast include Charles K. French, Lloyd Bacon, Frank Clark and Sid Jordan.

PROGRAM READER

Tom Mix is in town again. His latest film production, "Hands Off," will appear at the ———— theatre on ————, for a ———— days' run. There are few film stars today more generally popular than Tom Mix. His admirers include all those who are fond of fast and thrilling action, for Mix is a personification of the red-blooded American of the West. In one of the scenes in "Hands Off," Mix, as a cowpuncher, takes it upon himself to avenge an insult to a pretty daughter of a cowpuncher. He throws his rope over a telegraph wire and around the body of the bully, suspending him above a big horse trough. And after several duckings the man is willing to apologize.

Another thrilling scene in this picture shows a stampede of horses which is most realistically filmed. All in all, "Hands Off" is one of the highest class pictures of a type which is most popular today among the American picture audiences. It will be shown at the ———— theatre for ———— days beginning ————.

(Paramount)

A Rollicking Farce Comedy with Dorothy Gish

IT is a jolly ghost story they have given Dorothy Gish in this one, and Director F. Richard Jones has evolved from it a rollicking farce comedy which will be pronounced by all except the most blasé audiences as a perfectly satisfactory evening's entertainment. For "The Ghost in the Garret," as is fairly evident from its title, has no startlingly new situations, but a whole lot of good comedy is drawn out of those it has. Place a crowd of crooks, one of them a negro, in a supposedly haunted house, and then let wander among them through the semi-darkness a figure draped in white, and the opportunities for laughs become apparent. Their number is limited only by the director's sense of originality and his ability to keep his cast from overacting. And Mr. Jones takes a situation, draws it out cleverly and provokingly and then puts it across in a subtle manner. For instance, the "ghost" suddenly appears next to two of the crooks. They both might have taken one look, thrown up their hands and ran. But they don't. It takes Porter Strong a full minute to summon up sufficient courage to turn his head, and then the two grasp each other frantically, each trying to get a firmer hold on his companion.

The later half, of ghost sequence, in the picture is by far the better. Unfortunately the beginning, while containing some rattling good incident, is allowed to become just a bit serious. One flashback showing Miss Gish receiving a beating, while not offensive, seems out of place in such a picture. In short, it is comedy drama up to the point where the star gets in the deserted house and scares the crooks by hiding under chair slips and sheets, and from then on it is more farcical.

Miss Gish is cast as a poor relative who comes unannounced, with her bulldog and parrot, to the home of a wealthy aunt. The bulldog supplies some fine comedy. A $75,000 necklace is stolen and an imitation causes the complications.

William E. Park is satisfactory as a leading man, and Ray Gray as a sleek crook is just as smooth as he should be. The quartet of crooks are a good variety of types. Miss Gish herself uses the same mannerisms and gestures as in her previous pictures. They will, we believe, give her in time a reputation for a sameness which may lessen her popularity. She presents her usual personality here, however, and will not disappoint her admirers. The sub-titles are cleverly written and round out a farce comedy high class in every respect.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Another Dorothy Gish picture will be the attraction at the ———— theatre ———— It is entitled "The Ghost in the Garret," and presents this clev and attractive screen star in one of the most delightful comedies of the season.

Ever since her excellent work in D. W. Griffith's "Hearts of the World," Mi Gish has been steadily increasing her following until she ranks today among th highest of all screen favorites. She is a comedienne of unique personality. H charm and her zest and her originality can make any picture unusual. "Th Ghost in the Garrett" is itself an unusual story. It was written by Wells Hasting a prominent magazine writer and is packed with laughs from reel one to the fin fade-out.

Miss Gish is assisted by two unusual actors in this picture. One is "Mike," bulldog who wins for himself everlasting fame by his work in this production. Th second is a nameless parrot who cocks her head and struts about in her part i the best comedy manner. To put it mildly the parrot is "a bird of a comedian."

Miss Gish plays the part of a poor relation who comes to live with a wealth aunt. Polly and "Mike" accompany her. The story revolves around an expensiv necklace which is stolen by a gang of crooks who live in the deserted house nex door. Miss Gish finds that it is easier to scare the thieves by playing "ghost than by using force to win back the necklace.

PROGRAM READER

"The Ghost in the Garret" is the title of Dorothy Gish's latest Paramount pi ture and it will be shown for ———— days beginning ———— to the patron of the ———— theatre. Miss Gish needs no introduction to the American fil public. Her popularity cannot be questioned. Her whimsical personality, and he rare talents as a comedienne, have placed her in the highest ranks of film favorite "The Ghost in the Garret" is out-and-out comedy. It is one of those clev motion pictures which stand out from a background of mediocrity. Crammed wit laughs from beginning to end, it is a thoroughly refreshing evening's entertainmer for the whole family and all the family's friends. The story was written by Wel Hastings, a well known magazine writer, and the production was directed by F Richards Jones, a veteran screen director and a recognized leader in his art.

Do not miss "The Ghost of the Garret." You will like Dorothy Gish, you wi like the story, and you will forget the worries and cares of the day in the enter tainment it affords.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is Dorothy Gish in another comedy which will satisfy her admirers per fectly. Her name should not be relied upon entirely to fill the house, however Advertise it as a light, wholesome comedy, crammed with humor. Do this espe cially if your competitors are showing heavy dramas or if you yourself have ha a long stretch of emotional stuff. It is an ideal picture to form the basis of a "all comedy bill." Incidentally the title, "The Ghost in the Garret" could b the subject of a competitive short story in the local schools which you could ti up with your run.

"A Day With John Burroughs"
(Prizma—One Reel)

THIS exquisite little number is highly appropriate at the time when the beloved naturalist is so much in the public eye because of his death. It comes to the screen bringing a sense of communion to the spectator. It generates a spiritual motif, caught in the simplicity of the life of the lamented naturalist. He is happy and contented in his rustic setting, as he guides some little youngsters about and points out to them the ways and mysteries of nature. He is also acting as our instructor too. And as he describes a bug, a flower, a bit of granite, or a tree, or indulges in some bit of woodcraft, the subtitles employ a reproduction of his own handwriting. A great number—one which will be highly applauded—LAURENCE REID.

"Screen Snapshots No. 22"
(C. B. C. Film Sales Corp.)

VERY good. Whoever compiled or gathered together the interesting moments in Screen Snapshots No. 22 has the nose for interesting news concerning the film stars. There are scenes filled with all sorts of action and the actors are made to act and do stunts that would gain credit for them in their known line of endeavor.

For instance the cowpunchers of western movie thrillers stage a real Wild West show, with Tom Mix and Buck Jones on their favorite ponies helping to put the "act" over. These scenes are well worth witnessing.

An then there is Barbara Castleton doing a little stunt entitled "Waiting at the Church," to be followed by Matty Roubert, the boy actor whose ambition leads him to portray a strong dramatic role. The contribution is named "Drink" and young Roubert plays the role like a Barrymore.

A thrill is added when Paul Bourgeois, Universal's animal trainer is shown in the "big cage" putting a horse and lion through their tricks. Mr. Lion doesn't like it a bit but it doesn't seem to worry the trainer or the horse. Charles Ray is also caught in the act of personally delivering one of his own pictures by aeroplane.

The wind-up shows a group of stars arriving in San Francisco to attend a movie ball. Clara Kimball Young, Bebe Daniels, Bryant Washburn, Mary Miles Minter and Mary Thurman and many of the lesser lights are all here grouped about the camera and in automobiles looking their prettiest. Very interesting to say the least.—FRANK LEONARD.

"The Hick"
(Larry Semon Comedy-Vitagraph—Two Reels)

LARRY SEMON, who is acknowledged to be the leading knock-about comedian of the screen, comes forward in "The Hick," in his best form. This amusing burlesque on rural life, love, and romance, presents the star in a variety of adverturous stunts. Always credited with being something of an acrobat or tumbler, Semon eclipses his former effort in the bounding, somer-saulting tricks he puts over with all the nonchalance of a squirrel hopping from tree to tree. The milk flies, the butter churner takes a flight into space, the cows kick up, the donkey lives up to his reputation, and these stunts come so thick and fast and are so packed with amusing incident and exciting thrills that the spectator feels like an actual participant. So much for realism in Semon's comedies. The subtitles are pithy and full of punch.—LAWRENCE REID.

"The Worst Was True"
(Chester Outing-Educational)

"THE Worst Was True" might be termed a short story of Hong Kong, China. As the film is only one reel, it is the high spots and important incidents that are touched upon and in this way the subject is compact and contains plenty of interest.

Hong Kong must be a city of interest judging from the views, which begin at one end of the town and sweep around until the circle is completed.

The beautiful harbor, with the Chinese junks and sailing vessels gliding quietly to and from port and then the jump to the close-ups picturing the big foreign boats tied to the docks, unloading their cargoes of merchandise, the Chinese coolies being the "unloaders," forms a picturesque background.

The Chinese method of shipping sheep and hogs is sure to hold the attention, especially as regards the latter, each one of which is encased in a wicker basket and easily carried to shore.

Many views of the inhabitants are also shown to keep up the interest, the scenes shifting hither and thither picturing the natives at play and at work and not forgetting the children.

A very good scenic.—FRANK LEONARD.

A RITCHEY ACHIEVEMENT

WHEN a man sees a trim and well turned ankle in front of him the chances are ninety-nine to one that he will try to see the face that goes with it. The public psychology works in much the same way as regards posters and photoplays. The twenty-four sheet stand for "Sheltered Daughters" illustrates the point. It is for a Realart production in which Justine Johnstone is starred. As an example of ultra refined work, which nevertheless is potent with advertising value, it stands unrivalled in recent poster achievement.

Being these things, it is of course a RITCHEY poster!

WHEN that famous author, F. Hopkinson Smith penned his delightful story, "A KENTUCKY CINDERELLA" he wrote an appealing romance of West and South whose swift action is filled with the spirit of youth. This is just the kind of romantic drama which GLADYS WALTON can play to perfection and your audiences will be utterly charmed with the sharply contrasting lights and shadows of this well-loved tale, in which the little orphaned Westerner wins out in her struggle against adversity and comes into safe harbor at last.

Mack Sennett's

Six Part Comedy-Drama

New York Journal, Monday, April 11, 1921

Comedy week at the Rialto brought the cleverest play of its kind seen in many a month, and the most original. If you are a thirty-third degree film fan you will see what you look like when staring at a thriller just as the hero leaps to uncertain death. If you are a screen star, which, of course, you are not, but if you hope to be, which, of course, you do, you will learn a lot from Ben Turpin in "A Small Town Idol"

New York Herald, Monday, April 11, 1921

Mack Sennett is such a master of the film farce that in "A Small Town Idol" he can make comedians even of owls and fishes. This latest excursion of the producer into the six reel explosion, which is the feature of "Comedy Week" at the Rialto, uses up every possible variant of the burlesque on the rural mellowdrammer in its wildest form, so that it becomes a film carouse that all but shakes down the plaster of the Rialto with laughter as the plaster in a regular Sennett hotel fight is shaken.

The Evening Telegram, Monday, April 11, 1921

Although Mack Sennett does not appear in person on the screen at the Rialto Theatre this week, he dominates the theatre with his new photoplay, "A Small Town Idol."

The new film is much more subtle and every bit as funny as this producer's earlier screen plays. . . Ben Turpin appears in the hero role and is ably assisted in the principal roles by pretty Marie Prevost and Phyllis Haver and Charles Murray The supporting cast is a long one and includes, besides an enormous group of Sennett girls, James Findlayson, Bert Roach, Al Cooke, Dot Farley, Eddie Gribbon, Kalla Pasha, Billy Bevan and George O'Hara. Of course, there are animals, lions, and so on Earle Kenton directed the production under Mr. Sennett's guidance.

The Evening Mail, Monday, April 11, 1921

"A Small Town Idol" is quite the most pretentious thing Mack Sennett has attempted. Several of the scenes are huge and employ hundreds of participants, particularly a travesty on Babylonian revels in which the brevity of costume of the Sennett beauties probably outdoes all previous efforts.

"A SMALL TOWN IDOL"

IS THE PICTURE SENSATION OF NEW YORK!

The World, Monday, April 11, 1921

It would sound like a paid advertisement, but is is the truth, and so here goes For six reels the audience laughed—laughed as it hasn't laughed for a long time. The funny eyes of Ben Turpin; the ridiculous comedy of Mack Sennett's whole photoplay, "A Small Town Idol"; the overripe tomato in the Sheriff's eye; the pretty girl dangling, head downward, from the roof, a flash of pink now and then; the burlesque on melodramatic film scenes worked into it—these things and many more make of this latest slapstick play of comedy and spice the funniest thing that has been seen on a screen for many weeks. It is on view at the Rialto this week as a feature in an all-comedy bill which Hugo Riesenfeld has prepared.

The Morning Telegraph, Monday, April 11, 1921

Mack Sennett strikes a great blow for art at the Rialto Theatre this week, where throngs of those who love the highest and best in the silent drama are rushing to see "A Small Town Idol." The discriminating patrons of the cinema always have looked to Mr. Sennett for the purest expressions of the screen. Heretofore he has devoted his great gifts to making mere vignettes, short but vivid snatches of life translated to the terms of the motion picture. But "A Small Town Idol" ranks with his more ambitious efforts like "Down on the Farm" and "Married Life."

New York American, Monday, April 11, 1921

"A Small Town Idol," which came to the Rialto yesterday, is a classic. It's a liberal education for motion picture stars of the so-called sterner sex; it will prove a revelation to motion picture fans, and it is a six reel stream of laughter for everybody.

"Back From The Front"

(Christie Comedy-Educational)

THE fellow who would palm himself off as a hero is the idea behind the latest Christie comedy, an idea which never grows old because it is akin to human nature. "Back from the Front" is about the best full grown legitimate comedy which has reached the screen in some time. There is no slapstick present, nor any recourse to burlesque. What is depicted is genuine. Bobby has been a "stay at home" lieutenant. When the boys come back with their decorations for bravery his humiliation seems complete. He is invited to a week-end and to make a hit palms himself as the most successful "ace" in the aviation service. Now everything would have been O. K. had Bobby just talked of his exploits. He never dreamed that he would have to indulge in aviation feats. He attempts to find a way out of his difficulty but to no avail. He is forced to take the air and the evolutions certainly spell a heroism as great as that he might have earned during the war.

The high spots of the picture come when the ambulance corps attempt to follow him about. A quartet of ambulances in perfect formation, wheel and turn, and race, over the field to be near when the machine tumbles to earth. It is a very humorous bit and one that will be appreciated wherever it is shown. Eventually Bobby is forced to fly with his fiancee's father. The entire house party are indulging in hero-worshipping. But Bobby never leaves the ground. Instead the aeroplane skims over the surface and strikes a huge haystack and Bobby and his future father-in-law are propelled through space. He hasn't proved himself much of a hero, but he has the satisfaction in knowing that he will not be urged to fly again.

There is no repetitious detail, the company builds from its idea, sending out thrills and humor without effort.

It certainly scored with the Rialto audience in New York. After one has been "slapsticked" to boredom it is a relief to see something which can conquer with realities. "Back from the Front" is a sure-fire comedy—a refined comedy, but one which carries a "kick" like 500 bomb proof "likker." Christie will have the slapstick directors eating out of his hand if he continues with similar ideas.—Length, 2 reels.—LAURENCE REID, Motion Picture News.

distinctively a novelty. It has a cunning intelligence, a cleverness and a subtle humor.

will probably be sharply divided—and that's the first thing that recommends the picture,settings are the background, or rather an inseparable part, of a fantastic story of murder and madness such as Edgar Allan Poe might have written. This story is coherent, logical, a genuine and legitimate thriller,. So the film, then, is a shocker for those who like such to revel in. It is a feast for those who want their fiction strong and straight.

WORLD

fantastic charm which makes this picture the most amazing and radical thing shown since films began. It is only upon reflection that you sense the careful art of the production to realize the perfection of the craftsmanship which can give to the audience the mood of its characters caught in the delirium of a disordered brain.

JOURNAL

It is an interesting piece of screen play, a novelty that combines mentality, humor and a certain cleverness of execution. It must be credited with presenting a departure from the hackneyed type of picture with which our market has been surfeited.

TELEGRAM

The bizarre and distorted settings are not merely fantastic; they reflect the mental state of the characters involved. "The Cabinet of Doctor Caligari" is likely to have a big influence on motion picture producers.

DAILY NEWS

I have come away believing. The cubist settings in this picture are not only interesting because they are fantastic; they are also extraordinarily impressive when the effect of horrible beauty or of terror of imminent doom is desired.

I am glad to have seen the picture because it represents a new departure and, on the whole, a successful one in the matter of settings.

The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari Rich in Exploitation Cues

Uniqueness of the Picture Provides Opportunity for Stunts Equally Unique

What the Capitol Theatre did in the way of exploitation you can do—and you can do it better for having benefited by its experience.

This new European motion picture is vivid, thrilling, fantastic, bizarre, gripping—in fact it is all the adjectives in the dictionary of synonyms.

Give your patrons something new — they want it!

"The Other Woman"
Excellent Story of Dual Personality, Portrayed by Exceptional Cast and Distributed by W. W. Hodkinson
Reviewed by C. S. Sewell
One of the most interesting productions that this reviewer has recently witnessed is "The Other Woman," a J. L. Frothingham picture distributed by W. W. Hodkinson. The story is tensely told, starts off with a punch and holds the pace practically through its entire length. It is rich in human interest and in addition to being interpreted by a cast of well-known players, is beautifully photographed with several striking lighting effects.
Dual personality, in which the hero, after the manner of Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde, knows nothing of his actions in his other personality, is the keynote of the production. The instance in question is represented as an extreme case of what the brain specialists term amnesia, wherein the mental barrier is finally dissolved and the subject remembers his actions in both personalities.
The production has been well directed by Edward Sloman, and is clean throughout. An interesting problem which presents a good angle for exploitation, and which has been solved in such a way as to satisfy the majority, is the fact that in each personality the hero has a wife and a child, and he finally has to decide to which one he owes the greatest allegiance. Due to the renunciation by his real wife, he is enabled to protect the other woman and give a name to her young baby.
Jerome Patrick, Helen Jerome Eddy, Jane Novak, William Conklin, and Kate Price are names to insure fine portrayal of their respective roles.

READ WHAT THE LEADERS OF THE TRADE OPINION HAVE TO SAY FOR YOUR BENEFIT

NOT A PRESS AGENT'S CONCOCTION, NOT A PUBLICITY WIZARD'S STUNT, BUT THE UNBIASED VERDICT OF THE INDEPENDENT TRADE PRESS, AFTER A SHOWING OF OUR SENSATIONAL SUPER-FEATURE, ARRANGED EXCLUSIVELY FOR THE REPRESENTATIVES OF THE LEADING TRADE PUBLICATIONS OF NEW YORK.

Motion Picture News:
"You and I" is a fitting successor to "A Man There Was." The story revolves around the theme of a woman's unselfish love. Truly, one loses all sense of time and environments; so impressive are the rugged story and the marvelously picturesque background. Enchanting as is the grandeur of its scenery, it is the vivid and stark drama which dominates. Seastrom is thoroughly grounded in his art. Once in the crowd the play will advertise itself by word of mouth.

Moving Picture World:
The theme is strongly developed. Scenically, the background of towering mountains, precipices, spouting geysers, and water-falls, seem most fit. Victor Seastrom gives an impersonation that is gripping in mounting dramatic intensity. Edith Erastow's performance is one of great dignity.

Wid's Daily:
As a whole, an excellent picture. Artistic production, fine acting, beautiful settings. Exceptional handling of eternal triangle makes it distinctive. Direction very good. Photography excellent. Lighting exceptional. Camera work first-rate. Victor Seastrom gives admirable performance, as does Edith Erastow—splendid types. "You and I" is "different." Even better than "A Man There Was."

Telegraph:
"You and I" is a story of ideal love. The simplicity, fine acting and beautiful settings combine to make a vital picture. Victor Seastrom has an eyrie fascination, and Edith Erastow gives a strong and realistic performance. It displays an artistic blending of the old and the new.

Exhibitors' Trade Review:
Scenically and photographically "You and I" is a wonderful big production. The story, while impressive, deals with an old theme, but one which, nevertheless, has always served as a great box-office attraction.

Bill Board:
It is a story of great elemental force, showing to an overpowering degree the devotion of a woman to her lover, and contrasting her sublime unselfishness with the weaker will and greater love of life on the part of her mate. The story is built up with extraordinary directorial skill. Step by step, the audience is made to realize that it is in the presence of a great creative genius, possessing power, to an uncommon degree, to move and stir the feelings of the crowd.

New York Review:
Victor Seastrom directed the picture and acted the leading role, again revealing his mastery of both. He has one of the most commanding personalities in the cinema world. Goldwyn, Paramount, and Metro should compel their directors and stars to see it.

Screen Opinions:
"You and I" is a wonderfully fine production. Beyond appeal to the eye lent by spectacles of Nature, there is splendid craftsmanship. There are individual scenes which are masterpieces of composition. We doubt whether the art of facial expression has ever been more successfully demonstrated on the screen. The photography is especially good. The sub-titles are carefully and effectively worded. This production could be used to good advantage as a special feature with special music and specially chosen programme fillers.

VICTOR SEASTROM stands out today as the greatest screen actor of the world, barring none.

EDITH ERASTOW, the famous tragedienne of Europe—one must see the last scenes of "You and I" to realize that there is no greater dramatic actress on the screen, here or anywhere.

Even better than "A Man There Was," say the critics, and "A Man There Was" acclaimed by the trade press as the "Treat of the Season," and recently singled out by the New York "Times" and the New York "Globe" as an outstanding picture of 1920.

"YOU AND I" IS READY FOR RELEASE. "A Man There Was" is now being released and there is some territory yet unsold. We are ready for business, dashing and profitable for any state-right man who is alert and quick to grasp opportunity.

"Confessions" of a Motion Picture Screen!

I HAVEN'T got the nerve to speak right out and tell what I think of some of the pictures that are using me, because I want to keep on working. And, after all, I'm more worried about what I'll be used for if censorship comes than I am about conditions now.

Being part of the silent drama it's hard for me to get my ideas to the Exhibitors who own me; and that's too bad, because I know some things that would help them mightily. For instance, the other night we showed "Thrills" a Kineto Review. My colleague at the STRAND in New York and some other big theatres of Joe Plunkett's standard, told me it was a great pleasure to serve such a splendid picture, "the best short subject ever released," was the tip to me. I'm glad to pass it on to others. I had previously been used for Charles Urban's Movie Chats and like the Kineto Reviews they are wonderful one-reel subjects.

I advise all my colleagues—all the other Screens—to tell their owners to play them. They're better than most features.

Sincerely yours,

A MOTION PICTURE SCREEN.

"The Morosco Stage Successes Filmed with The Typical Morosco Star Casts"

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

To Exhibitors:

I have not entered picture production just for the novelty of converting a few of my most successful stage plays into films. I am in to stay — and the only way to stay is to make good pictures. It is my definite policy to establish Morosco pictures as a permanent feature in the exhibitor's programs.

Many of my old friends of the theaters have become exhibitors. I know that they take the same pride in showing good pictures that they did in playing first-class road attractions. I want them to welcome a Morosco picture as they did a Morosco play.

Our pictures are being expanded from my best stage plays. I am working with tried and proved material only. We consider the story the first essential.

We are using infinite care in the making of each picture. We are preserving and strengthening the stories. We are discriminating keenly in the selection of casts. The utmost skill has been used in direction, photography and the building and dressing of sets.

"The Half Breed", our first picture, is completed for First National release. It will show you the high standard we have set for our productions. I sincerely believe that you will profit by communicating with your nearest First National exchange regarding not only "The Half Breed" but the other Morosco pictures that are to follow.

Yours very truly.

Fight! Fight!! Fight!!!

THE Albany situation, at this writing, looks somewhat more hopeful. At least the industry has not yet surrendered to defeat.

We may not have censorship in New York State—ot, at least, this year.

And so, again, the industry may be saved at the leventh hour.

In any event, it is no time for self-congratulation, no ime to claim credit, or award medals; it is no time to elax.

It is time for just one thing; and that is—to fight ensorship—to begin to fight it. For the real fight is ust beginning; and we—for our part—have scarcely tarted fighting.

The world, as we have stated before, is facing a com-lex reform era. It is not declining; it is just gather-ng strength. And the motion picture is just now its rime objective—will continue to be.

Our real fight is ahead of us.

Any success at all demands the best effort this united ndustry can make. It is time now to face the issue almly, to think clearly, to do away utterly with selfish-ess, to get ready and completely equipped for a serious nd sustained effort involving every branch and ndividual within this industry—

In other words to organize.

Just what is the situation?

* * *

In the first place we are admitting—disclaiming the icious and unfair attacks, against us—that pictures nd their exploitation have not been all they should e. We will even admit the necessity of a considerable eform, realizing that we handle the greatest of all ontacts with the public mind and morals. But we lemand that we, in close conjunction with the public, e allowed to create and mould our own product for he public, and in behalf of the public.

We say that censorship is unconstitutional. If so, vhy do we permit the state censorship laws of Penn-ylvania, Ohio, Kansas and Maryland to go unchal-enged? How do we justify such an attitude? Why esitate to direct the best legal brains against one or ll of these statutes and fight them tooth and nail—to finish?

We say that censorship is un-American. But we say it only among ourselves—a few thousand of us. We don't say it to the millions, the millions who go daily to our theatres.

They—the public—don't know a thing about it. Not a handful of people in this country know what official censorship really means.

If we believe what we say, if we know that the public won't countenance that which is un-American then—for the love of Heaven!—let's tell them all about it. Tell them that censorship robs them of their voice, their liberty, of their jury system, of their right of redress in court—that it is mediaeval, bureaucratic, impossible.

And to tell them, let's use the screen, the splendid power we have within our own hands, the power we vaunt so much about—and use freely for any other welfare than our own.

Are any pictures being made or shown, or any exploitation offered detrimental to the public and therefore detrimental to this industry? If so, let's take the initiative ourselves and call into action the ample laws of control that already exist.

And to wage these campaigns—to tear down the wrong and build up the right—big campaigns each of them—what do we need?

The answer, the one and only answer is—organization, an organization great enough and powerful enough to carry on so big a work.

And what does such an organization mean?

* * *

It means the unified and harmonious consolidation of every branch within this industry and every individual within each branch. Just that! No branch, no group, no individual can handle this fight alone.

It demands organization and leadership.

If the National Association is wrong, let's smash it overnight and build a right one. If it is right, let's support it,—at the expense of all individual considerations.

Said Ben Hampton to the Governor

Hon. Governor Miller,
Albany, New York.

April 9, 1921.

OWING to the fact that in magazines and newspapers I have been outspoken in my denunciation of salacious pictures, New York people have asked me to wire you regarding censorship situation now pending. I sincerely believe if you could sit in the office of any picture producer for one week you would be convinced, first, censorship is un-American in that it deprives us of our constitutional right of trial by jury; second, that pictures art cannot progress under censorship; third, that censorship has proven itself ineffective. Also you would be convinced that the clean pictures leaders have taken most complete and drastic steps to eliminate all doubtful elements from pictures. You would be thoroughly convinced of integrity and sincerity of these men. Also you would be convinced that if these men have your cooperation, you and they will be able to bring about reforms on which they have started. Under censorship no individual is ever punished; this situation is true because of complex situation under which pictures are made and distributed. The greatest sufferers under censorship are men and women who are trying to make clean pictures and who do not want to stoop to methods necessary to deal with censorship organizations. I urge that police power be used to put in jail salacious pictures makers, distributors and exhibitors. Use police power to make punishment reach guilty individuals. If a few guilty individuals were sent to prison, doubtful plays would pass out of existence immediately. Censorship merely confuses and distresses and hampers clean, honorable pictures makers. Newspapers say that William A. Brady, president of National Association, offered to pledge pictures interests to cooperate with you for clean pictures. In all sincerity and earnestness I believe that if you would use your great power and influence in accepting Mr. Brady's proposition, you would work an incalculably great benefit to the people, not only of New York State, but of the entire United States. Such an action on your part would strengthen the hands of the clean men in the pictures industry; also it would arouse public opinion throughout entire country to supporting clean pictures and to withdrawing their support from unclean pictures. By this action you would give the greatest encouragement to motion picture art it has received to date, and in doing that you would be assisting in purifying, strengthening and building up the greatest educational medium society has ever known. I beg to submit to you, sir, that the opportunity that lies before you is a peculiarly great opportunity, and one for which the clean pictures men and women and the general public would long hold you in grateful remembrance.

BENJAMIN B. HAMPTON.

Supporting a National Association, doesn't mean sending a check yearly to the treasury and a portfolio-carrying assistant to a meeting. Better take this Association with the utmost seriousness or do away with it entirely. And is anything—may we ask?—more serious than loss of control over the making and showing of pictures? Can any individual business consideration be more serious?

When the difficulty of organizing the scattered exhibitors of the nation is considered; when we see competitive exhibitors everywhere joining hands in unselfish organization; when we note the fast strides being made toward a compact and spirited national organization of exhibitors—what excuse have producers and distributors to make for their present lack of adequate organization and their lack, too, of any working contact with exhibitor organization?

Leaders, too, are needed. But where are leaders to come from, if the leading business executives treat organization as a vague and nominal thing over which any business consideration large or small takes immediate precedence?—and this when the necessity for organization is hammering loudly at their very doors.

It's time to act, gentlemen.

If you have any doubt about it, take a trip—not to Europe—but over the length and breadth of this country, visit any hamlet, town or city and find out how others intend to control your business if you don't intend to control it yourselves.

It's time to organize—or quit.

Be Honest with Ourselves

THE recent attack made upon American pictures by the Northcliffe press is now followed by Lord Beaverbrook, who announces in his newspaper, the "Daily Express," that two leading British circuits have stopped booking American films. Lord Beaverbrook is financially interested in both circuits.

About the same time an address was made by Lord Beaverbrook before the Cinematograph Exhibito Association of Great Britain in which he appealed f "cooperation."

The latter speech, taken in conjunction with t action of the two circuits referred to, seems to regarded by the British trade press as virtually proposal to boycott American pictures.

Lord Beaverbrook's argument is to the effect th British exhibitors pay 25%, or even 30% of their gro intake for American film rentals, that this is e orbitant, and that the money should not be diverted the American producer.

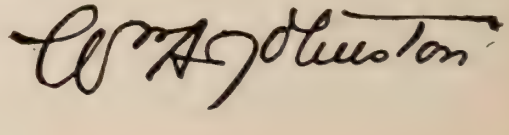
Lord Beaverbrook should be informed that t American exhibitor, or at least the very large majorit pay even more than the amount he considers unjust the British exhibitors.

More than eighty per cent of the exhibitors of t United States and Canada pay out an average of ful 35% of their box office receipts in the shape of fil rentals.

Lord Beaverbrook should also be informed that t rental question goes down to the fundament economics of the industry, and can only be adjusted a readjustment of our economic situation. Gre Britain, as a heavy booker of American pictures, is the very same boat with the American exhibitor.

Film rentals are a combined result of overprodu tion, high distribution cost and wrong rental polici They will change as these fundamentals change. boycott is futile, illogical and unbusinesslike.

We are somewhat surprised at such a recommend tion from one of Lord Beaverbrook's keen ability a announced sympathy with and deep interest in the p ture industry.



Illinois Exhibitors Hold Business-Like Convention in Chicago

Majority of Old Directors Re-elected; Name of Organization Changed

THE MOTION PICTURE THEATRE OWNERS OF THE STATE OF ILLINOIS held its ate convention on Monday and Tuesday this week, April 11 and 12, at the Sher-an Hotel, Chicago. The exhibitors' ate organization, known until last Mon-ıy as the Illinois Exhibitors' Alliance, ansacted much important business dur-g the course of its two-day convention hich moved with admirable precision and ficiency. The pending censorship and eposit bills in the Illinois legislature also ceived attention.

The outstanding feature of the conven-on was the resignation of President seph Hopp and Secretary W. D. Bur-rd and the entire directorate of the Alli-ıce, to become effective on the slection their successors. President Hopp de-ared this step was taken so as to afford e members the opportunity of electing the vacant offices men that they would ıve confidence in. The convention re-ected a large majority of the old direc-rs unanimously, and predictions were ade that the directors would put Messrs. opp and Burford back at the head of the ganization.

The newly elected directors include essrs. Hopp, Burford, Dee Robinson, harles Lamb, Don Bestor, Charles Law, . W. Watts, J. F. Dittman, William Ca-ret, Ralph Crocker, B. F. Uran, John iller, Fred Hartman, H. Von Mitron, hn Silka, M. O. Fells, Harry Hoffman, eorge Brombley, K. S. Fitzpatrick, John remid, and Henry Golson. The conven-on also elected 27 delegates and 27 alter-ates to represent the association at the tional convention to be held in Minne-olis. Practically all those elected de-ared that they would attend.

President Joe Rhode of the Wisconsin xhibitors' State organization, gave some luable advice on combatting censorship d inspired the convention with his re-rt of the excellent work being done by s organization. President Al Steffis, of e Minnesota Exhibitors' State organiza-on, also addressed the meeting and ex-nded a cordial invitation to every mem-r to attend the coming Minneapolis con-ntion.

Resolutions adopted by the convention ovided for a change in organizational le from "Illinois Exhibitors' Alliance 'Motion Picture Theatre Owners' of merica, State of Illinois'" and for the loption by the state organization of the nstitution and by-laws of the Motion cture Theatre Owners of America as e constitution and by-laws of the Illinois hibitors' state body. Other resolutions tified by the convention include the fol-wing:

We Wonder——?

JUST how will the censors regard the talking motion picture? Will they cut out scenes and at the same time cut the speech that goes with them? How, then, about that bulwark of our liberty—free speech?

We wonder, too, what the state censors will do about the anti-censorship films soon to be circulated. Will they prevent their showing? They have that power. If so, an individual, an American citizen, cannot express himself in the states of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Kansas and Maryland; nor has he any redress if he is not permitted to express himself.

Is censorship American?

WM. A. JOHNSTON.

A resolution adopted put the organization on record as "opposed to any form of legalized censorship prior to publication." The bills of this character now pending in the state legislature were mentioned specifically in the resolution. The state organization also demanded "'uniform film rental contracts' stripped of 'catchy' and ambiguous and one-sided clauses" and expressed itself as in favor of the abolition of advance deposits. A resolution was also passed condemning Dr. Wilbur Crafts and the International Reform Bureau for alleged attempts "to effect a reform element dictatorship over the destinies of film theatres and motion pictures."

The convention also protested against the practice of some producers-exhibitors who "exhibit 'pre-release' for weeks some of their 'special features' in Central theatres and thus exploit them until 'milked' and then turn them over for regular release to independent exhibitors."

Another resolution adopted declares that "the 5 per cent film rental tax directed against producers and distributors" is passed along by them to the theatre owners, and this resolution further recommends that steps be taken to urge Congress to abolish this tax. "This tax should be 'lifted and shifted,'" declares the resolution. A resolution was also adopted denouncing Manager Seery of First National for alleged unfairness and treatment of exhibitors and making a demand upon Balaban and Katz to oust him.

On the first afternoon of the convention State Representative Lyon, of Chicago, a member of the legislature's building investigating committee, now sitting in the Windy City, addressed the assembled exhibitors and called their attention to the danger of two bills, now before the legislature, to the motion picture industry. One is for the licensing of all manufacturers of films doing business in Illinois and the other censorship by the state. He also talked of the evidence of alleged graft brought before his committee in its investigation of the maintenance shakedown in Chicago, and urged all exhibitors to get together and refuse to pay tribute to predatory labor union leaders.

State Representative C. L. Rew, the only exhibitor member of the state legislature, and author of the deposit bill now before that body, also spoke at the first session of the convention. Features of the deposit bill which, he said, would be a benefit to exhibitors, are those making it compulsory that deposits be placed in a bank in the county in which the theatre is located and providing that the exhibitor making the deposit shall get all interest accruing on the money. The bill also makes violation of contract by either party to it, a misdemeanor.

Representative Rew urged all exhibitors to write to their Senators and Representatives, setting forth their opposition to the three censorship bills now before the legislature and, which, he stated, would cost the taxpayers $38,000 a year in Chicago alone and more than double that amount throughout the state.

One of the pleasantest features of the convention was a dinner, at which Joe Friedman, president of Federated Film Exchanges of America, and of Celebrated Players Film Corporation, Chicago, was host to those attending the convention and many Chicagoans connected with the industry in various ways.

Preceding the dinner, which was held in the Tiger Room at the Sherman Hotel, the visiting exhibitors inspected Celebrated's fine new exchange at 810 South Wabash avenue, which opened its doors for business Monday for the first time.

Following the dinner three episodes of the new Selig serial, "The Miracle of the Jungle," was shown and made a hit with the crowd.

Among the exhibitors in attendance at the convention were:

Burger to Represent Associated Producers

J. K. BURGER, of New York, has been appointed by General Manager Al Lichtman,, of Associated Producers, Inc., to represent the organization in the field. With experience in the motion picture business dating from the days of the old Eclectic Film Company, Mr. Burger has been connected with many of the larger distributing organizations in various capacities and he is known to exhibitors throughout the country. For three years he represented the Eclectic Film and Pathe Exchanges in the East and later helped to organize the International Film Service, Inc., with which company he attained the position of assistant general manager.

Mr. Burger left the International to become manager of the short subject department for the Paramount Pictures Corporation. As special representative for Associated Producers, Inc., Burger will work out of the home office. Other appointments announced by General Director Lichtman are those of Sam W. B. Cohn, former director of advertising and publicity for the Allen Theatre Enterprises of Canada, who will occupy a similar position with Associated Producers, and Louis E. Loeb who has been appointed as a member of the Associated Producers home office staff.

Other additions to Associated Producers are Charles Muehlman, former personal representative for Joseph Schenck, who becomes special representative, and Edward Grossman, formerly of Famous Players-Lasky, who joins the home office staff.

Arkansas Exhibitors Hold Semi-Annual Meeting

The Moving Picture Theatre Owners of Arkansas on Monday, April 4, held their first semi-annual meeting at the Hotel Marion, Little Rock, Ark. President Lick, owner of the New theatre at Fort Smith, presided. About fifty members were present.

A resolution condemning the filming of the life of Clara Smith Horton was passed by the exhibitors. C. C. Haubor, of the Haubor theatres, arranged the program. W. A. Nance, an exhibitor and a clergyman, spoke on "Advertising from the Standpoint of the Church;" F. L. Clarks, of Hazon, Ark., spoke on "The Troubles of the Smalltowner," and President Licke spoke on "Reserved Seat Pictures."

The next meeting will be held in October, when officers will be elected.

Walthal to Make Canadian Stories for New Company

Henry B. Walthall and several other players are scheduled to arrive in Toronto, Canada, in May, where the Canadian Features and Productions Co., Ltd., has been organized and incorporated to produce features. The president and principal director of the company is William J. Craft.

Louis P. Gottschalk is associated with Mr. Craft. It is stated that the pictures will be made from three famous Canadian novels.

New Hampshire Exhibitors Urge Cleaner Pictures

State censorship was condemned as a dangerous departure in a free country by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Hampshire at a meeting held in Boston on March 24th. They further agreed that the public does not want pictures of a lewd or licentious character and passed a resolution protesting against the making of any films in which the titles or scenes were objectionable. They also stated that they were for the elimination of all sex problems on the screen.

Toothless Censorship Bill Passes Michigan House

The motion picture censorship bill of Michigan passed the House of Representatives on April 6th. The bill was a substitute measure for the original Strom bill which was introduced early in the session.

The bill makes it unlawful to display pictures which might be injurious to the public morals and places the right to censor all films shown in the state in the hands of the administrative board. The original Strom motion picture bill set up in detail what was to be construed as objectionable under the terms of the censorship measure and banned certain classes of pictures and certain subjects.

It was stated by some members of the House that the bill as passed is entirely harmless from an exhibitors' standpoint, and that it at the same time satisfied to a certain degree those clamoring for censorship. The bill now goes to the Senate where it is expected to die in committee.

Affiliated Picture Interests Elect Officers

The board of twenty-five directors chosen during the week by the Affiliated Picture Interests, Inc., in the West elected the following officers for the coming year:

Frank A. Garbutt, Famous Players-Lasky, chairman; William S. Smith, Vitagraph, vice chairman; Sol Wurtzel, Fox Films; Joseph Engel, Metro; Frank E. Woods, Screen Writers' Guild; William D. Taylor, Directors' Association; Ed Roberts, Film Press; Ted Taylor, secretary, and W. J. Reynolds, secretary of the Producers' Association, as treasurer.

The executive committee consists of the following: Frank A. Garbutt, Frank S. Brown, of the Electrical Engineers; Charles H. Christie, Abraham Lehr, of Goldwyn Pictures; Fred A. Miller, of the California theatre; Glen Harper, of the Theatre Owners' Association, and J. H. Goldberg, of the Film Exchange Board of Trade.

The organization endorsed the candidacy of several aspirants to Los Angeles City office, including candidate for mayor.

New Ohio Bill Permits Sunday Openings

A new bill was introduced into the Ohio State Senate, April 7th, by Senator Deweese of Miami County. The bill, known as the Deweese bill, is an effort to save the Sunday motion picture show. It would permit film theatres to be open Sunday afternoon and Sunday evening, provided such action was authorized by ordinance of any municipality. Furthermore, the Deweese bill would give state censors control over photographs, or posters display advertising of the films, as well as the films themselves.

It amends the present censorship law now in force, by providing that the censors shall not pass any serial picture of crime or lust which, in their judgment would tend to corrupt morals, or a picture tending to cast ridicule upon religion, or upon a minister, or a priest, rabbi or any other recognized leader of a religious sect or upon public officials and officials of the law.

Italian Film Executive Visits in America

Count Ignazio Thaon di Revel, one of the leaders of the Italian film industry, is spending a month or six weeks in the United States studying American motion picture conditions and production methods.

As the head of the Cito Cinema, Count di Revel is directly responsible for the marketing, outside of Italy of the product of the Unione Cinematografica Italiana. This producing group embraces such concerns as Ambrosio, Pasquali, Cines, Itala, Rinascimento, Palatino and Cesare.

President Kohn to Tour Eastern Key Cities

Morris Kohn, president of Realart, left last week on a tour of key cities in the East. Mr. Kohn recently returned from an extended trip during which he visited Realart exchanges in the Middle West, Northwest and far West. His present trip will round out the tour and bring him in touch with the important centers in the East.

Leaving Sunday, April 10, Mr. Kohn's itinerary called for stop offs at Washington, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Detroit, Cleveland and Buffalo.

The New Officers of the N. Y. State Organization

Big Deal Closed Between Pathe and Keith

Pathe News to Be Played First Runs by Keith Circuit and Allied Theatre Interests

A DEAL of unusual scope has just been announced by the Pathe headquarters. By the terms of the arrangement just negotiated, Pathe News, beginning May 1, will be played first-run in nearly every theatre in the Keith circuit and its allied theatre interests. These include among others, the Orpheum circuit, the Proctor circuit, the Moss circuit, the Poli circuit, and Wilmer and Vincent circuit. While in its present state, it is not possible to state exactly how many days booking this deal represents, yet it is expected that the Pathe News will gain between 2,500 and 3,000 days bookings through the deal.

Credit for engineering this booking goes to E. F. Albee, president and chief owner of the B. F. Keith vaudeville circuit and president of the B. F. Keith vaudeville exchange; J. J. Murdock and Paul Brunet, president of Pathe.

The importance of the Keith-Pathe deal can best be gleaned from the fact that at least 250 first run accounts are expected to be added to the Pathe News. This means full runs for the two issues of the Pathe News.

This also indicates a tremendous call upon the resources of the Pathe News laboratories, owing to the considerable number of new prints which will be necessary to fill the Keith contract, but preparations have already been made to handle this additional Pathe News print quota.

In announcing the signing of the Keith interests, as first run accounts for the Pathe News, Mr. Brunet rightfully felt that Pathe had accomplished one of the biggest deeds in its history.

"The scope of this proposition reaching as it does from one end of the country to the other, all have a tremendous bearing on the future of the Pathe News' he said. "The Keith interests represent all that is best in the vaudeville world, and the Pathe News is honored in being represented on the screen of the beautiful houses which were the pride of Mr. Keith, and now of Mr. Albee and his associates.

"We will strive with every effort to maintain the Pathe News at the standard that won for it the recognition of the Keith interests and their ultimate booking of the reel in all their theatres and allied houses. We have always prided ourselves on the consistency of merit maintained by the Pathe News and our efforts in the future will be unbending in aiming at maintaining it first in its field.

"We hope to compensate the Keith interests for their confidence in the Pathe News, by giving their hundreds of thousands of patrons the maximum amount of entertainment that can be furnished in any one reel motion picture subject.

"I want to take this opportunity of publicly expressing our appreciation of the Keith interests in booking the Pathe News and to give assurance that in the future the Pathe News will keep apace with the times, reporting news events with the greatest possible speed, impartiality and accuracy, and above all live up to its slogan, 'The real news first.'"

On behalf of the Keith interests, Mr. Murdock said:

"We were particularly impressed during the last year with the manner in which the Pathe News consistently demonstrated its speed and efficiency in covering the important news events of the day.

"Particular attention was paid to the results obtained in the reporting by the Pathe News of the inauguration of President Harding, and other big recent international events.

"The Keith interests believe always in giving their patrons the best it is possible to obtain in the way of entertainment, and we feel that in booking the Pathe News over our entire circuit, and in our allied theatres, they are furthering this desire.

"The arrangements with Pathe News will go into effect on May 1, and we look forward to being able to keep our patrons posted on the big news events of their day, in pictorial form, through the Pathe News."

Jesse Lasky in Strong Attack on Censorship

His Article in May Issue of The Pictorial Review Is Great Blow for Industry

JESSE L. LASKY, first vice president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in a powerful article in the May issue of the Pictorial Review, has struck a powerful blow for the film industry, which, it is expected, will make the general public more sympathetic towards pictures and more critical of censors' methods. The article is entitled, "Is There Any Sense in Censorship?" The faulty methods of established censorship come in for a coldly analytical expose in Mr. Lasky's article, and case after case is cited to show the culpable and objectionable features of censorship as already practiced in some sections of the country.

The Pictorial Review Publishing Company has prepared a tremendous nation-wide campaign to advertise the article. The magazine has distributed 20,000 posters on the article to newsdealers of the country. Full page advertisements will run in 500 newspapers, and a clip sheet on the subject has been mailed to every newspaper.

Mr. Lasky's review expresses a firm conviction in the desire of the average motion picture public for clean entertainment and he begins his article in this manner:

"Pictorial Review's campaign to rouse the women of America to kill the exhibition of indecent motion pictures has my hearty indorsement and I am sure is approved by every other reputable producer or exhibitor of motion pictures. We want the help of the women, not only their help in eliminating the bad pictures but also their encouragement when we produce a good one.

"There will never be many, however, of the wrong set, for the resistless law of public opinion regulates all great movements. For a striking proof of this, look at the way public opinion absolutely controlled the exhibition of war pictures in the fall of 1918. Just as soon as the armistice was signed, war pictures had to be discontinued because the public would not go to see them. Many producers suffered heavy financial loss by the sudden withdrawal of public favor. The public simply disapproved a certain type of play and the type had to disappear from the screen. No better illustration of the power of public opinion is needed. Public opinion will act in the same way when it comes to indecent pictures. The public demands clean and helpful entertainment.

Referring to pictures for children, Mr. Lasky writes:

"Some loose thinkers have criticized certain pictures because they could not take their children to them. This is really arrant nonsense. Let us have done with the thought that the photoplay is primarily for children. No more is it child's entertainment than is the speaking stage, the novel, the magazine or the newspaper. You cannot hold us down to drama fit only for children. Some of Barrie's most whimsical books cannot be understood by children. And yet their 'cleanliness' is never in question. Hundreds of plays, as pure as the gilded lily, cannot be understood by children and are therefore, unsuitable for them. We makers of screen drama aim to serve the majority and not any specialized group.

"The motion picture, with the help of the public, is just beginning to fulfill the mission that the intelligent families of the nation are demanding of it. It lies entirely with the public to decide just how soon we shall reach the era in which every picture shown at a reputable theatre will be wholesome entertainment."

F. B. Warren Launches National Distributing Organization

ANNOUNCEMENT is made of the incorporation at Wilmington, Del., of the F. B. Warren Corporation, a motion picture sales and distributing organzation which will operate branch exchanges in twenty or more motion picture distributing centers of the industry.

Director and producer connections insuring an annual output of thirty or more big productions have been and are being made, assuring the release of a powerful production each week beginning Sunday, September 4, 1921.

All productions released through the F. B. Warren Corporation will be under the complete supervision and control of one of the greatest production and critical experts in the industry; a man already identified with the ownership and making of pictures that have broken nearly all of the picture earning records of the industry.

The financial interest affiliated in the ownership of the F. B. Warren Corporation is said to be one of the largest private monied interests in the United States with holdings and control over several industries. This interest is also thoroughly familiar with the sales and distribution of motion pictures.

It is claimed o be ahe only organization of its kind that will not have a single dollar of interest or equity in any producing organization. This distribution will, at all times, be maintained independently to offer its facilities for world-wide sale of big productions of a quality in keeping with the standards of this distribution.

Complete distribution will be maintained through branch offices in the Dominion of Canada, through F. B. Warren, Ltd., a Canadian corporation, and offices in Europe will be maintained in London, Paris, Berlin and Milan.

Headquarters of the new company will be upper Fifth avenue, New York, the location to be announced shortly.

Fewer New Incorporations in New York State

Companies incorporating in the motion picture business, and filing the necessary papers with the Secretary of State's office at Albany, N. Y., show a decided decrease, the past week witnessing but five incorporations of this character, the total capitalization amounting to $215,000. These companies, with their directors and amount of capital stock are the Nick Carter Productions, $50,000, Flora Nathan, L. A. Jackson, J. L. Herz, New York; Campbell Comedy Corporation, $120,000, E. Kraychie, Arthur Skillman, H. G. Liese, New York; The Bootleggers, Inc., $25,000, P. J. McKown, H. M. Manney, Charles F. Martin, Brooklyn; American Corporation of International Inventions, $10,000, Arthur Schmid, O. P. Heyn, O. H. Wipprecht, New York; Maxsam Amusement Corporation, $10,000, Max, Lena and Louis Blum, of Brooklyn.

Eddy Eckels Resigns from Independent Film Ass'n

Eddy Eckels has severed all connections with the Independent Films Association, according to a statement issued this week from Eckels' offices on the West coast and verified by the Films Association in Chicago.

Eckels has been affiliated with the state rights distributing field for the past nine years and in 1918 organized the Independent Films Association, Chicago. Since the inception of the Films Association, Eckels served as president, general manager and member of the board of directors.

Although details concerning Eckel's plans for future activity are presently being withheld, it is stated that he fully intends to continue his work in the field of distribution.

Dwight Perrin Associated with F. B. Warren

Dwight S. Perrin has resigned from Associated Producers, Inc., where he was assistant general manager of distribution, to become associated with F. B. Warren, former general manager of Associated Producers, in Mr. Warren's new motion picture enterprise. Mr. Perrin will be a vice president of the F. B. Warren Corporation.

Mr. Perrin is a former night city editor of the New York Tribune and in the early days of Goldwyn was its publicity manager.

Godsol Leaves for Coast

F. J. Godsol, vice-president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, and chairman of the Board of Directors, left Saturday for the Goldwyn Studios at Culver City, Calif. He will be gone several weeks.

Charles J. O'Reilly

THE election of Charles J. O'Reilly is not only a fine thing for the New York State League, but also a fitting tribute to a hard, intelligent and unselfish worker, who has always sincerely struggled to keep himself in the background.

Former President Sydney S. Cohen will now devote his entire time to the National League Presidency. With these two men, able co-workers, one at the head of the national organization and the other heading the Empire State organization—which it is expected will serve as a model organization state—we may confidently expect a strong widespread and efficient exhibitor organization.

We bespeak for these leaders the support they so unqualifiedly deserve from every exhibitor in the country—and from the entire industry.

We want exhibitor organization. We have an organization able to protect this industry without exhibitor organization.

The Michigan Motion Picture E hibitors Association has passed a reso tion condemning the featuring of Cla Smith Hamon on the screen. Th further pledged themselves not to displ at any time such films and intend to ma every effort to prevent the showing such pictures in any theatres in Michig whose owner is a member of th association.

Film Censorship Dies in Nebraska Senate

Motion-picture censorship for Nebraska was killed in the state senate on April 11th by the advancing of the Beebe "High License" substitute bill by a vote of eighteen to fifteen. The defeat of the censorship measure was brought about by a change in the votes of Senator Louis Berka of Omaha and Senator Picket of Wahoo, who voted against the Beebe amendment and for censorship on April 4th, when the vote was a tie.

If the Beebe substitute bill passes the senate on the third reading, the house, which gave censorship a comfortable majority a few weeks ago, will be asked to concur in the Beebe substitute. The senate lobby was filled with women who sat in the aisles. They neglected to applaud after the vote was taken on censorship, as was the custom at past sessions.

The Beebe substitute provides for one-thousand dollars deposit by film companies carrying on business in Nebraska. In the event that a film company shows a picture of an "off color" variety and the court finds the company guilty, its license will be forfeited and the company will be forbidden to continue business in Nebraska.

Censors Prevented from Ordering Inserts

An attempt on the part of the Maryland Board of Motion Picture Censors to enter the field of continuity writing by issuing unheard of orders in connection with its inspection of "Without Limit" has fizzled into a fiasco under pressure of a Court action.

The censors, in addition to cutting several scenes, deleted two titles and ordered inserts. The Metro Film Service Company started legal action, and an agreement was finally reached outside of court, in which the cutting of the film did not interfere with the theme and the titles were allowed to carry their original thoughts.

Propose Right of Censor Appeal for Citizens

An ordinance amending the Kansas City censorship ordinance by prohibiting the exhibition of alleged objectionable pictures, and providing means for citizens to stop such pictures in case they have been passed by the censor, was introduced in the upper house of the council recently and referred to a committee for hearing.

Any twenty or more taxpayers who have seen a picture which has been approved by the censor, and which they consider immoral, may appeal to the board of review for the revocation of the permit issued for such a picture. The board of review will then examine the alleged objectionable picture.

Organization and Leadership

THE best speech we ever heard on the necessity of motion picture organization came from E. F. Albee, a vaudeville executive.

Now we yield the palm to J. J. Murdock, another vaudeville executive.

We can't help wishing that we had these men in the picture industry. We can't help feeling that we could then have a big, virile, highly efficient, well-financed and harmonious organization of this entire industry—one that would bowl censorship over and out of sight, that would stifle every bit of iniquitous legislation, one that would make every member of the organization glad he belonged to it, and afraid not to.

We speak feelingly, but—Great Heavens!—we do need such organizers.

Witness some truths J. J. Murdock shouted at the exhibitors of New York in session at Rochester: "Co-operate—organize—put implicit confidence in your leaders! Eliminate your pretty jealousies—get together and stick together!. Make of yourselves one solid piece of machinery! Keep your fights out of Albany and Washington! Make your great power felt! Back up your organization to the limit!"

Mr. Murdock said that three efforts to organize vaudeville failed at first; so perhaps there is hope for a united and national motion picture organization.

In connection with the present strength of the National Vaudeville Association, it is pertinent to note that each theatre pays $260 a year dues to the organization treasury.

Precinct Censorship Proposed in Kansas City

A plan to place a woman motion picture censor in every precinct in Kansas City will be presented to the central committee for the better censorship of motion pictures when it meets April 14. The plan is being formulated by the precinct sub-committee, which expects to have arrangements complete in a few days.

Under the proposed plan, a woman censor for each precinct will be appointed by ward chairman and each will work only in the ward in which they live. The censor will be expected to know the kind of pictures being exhibited in the theatres in the precinct to which they are assigned. Objectionable pictures will be reported to ward chairman, who will report to the central committee. The central committee is working in co-operation with official censors.

Censor Bill Fails to Pass Iowa Legislature

Censorship has been defeated in the Iowa legislature. After passing the House the bill went to the Sifting Committee in the Senate. It was reported out by the committee on the last day of the session, but by quick action was recommitted and failed to come out again before the legislature adjourned on the night of April 8.

Wire Briefs from Coast

TWENTY-FIVE directors representing all the departments of the Western motion-picture industry have been elected by the affiliated picture interests. At a meeting called for Wednesday evening of this week, these directors were scheduled to elect officers. Hereafter the affiliated picture interests will maintain representatives at the California capital continuously.

Four of the six measures detrimental to the industry, recently introduced into the California legislature, have been killed in committee.

It has been reported on the Coast that Robertson-Cole will discontinue production for a period of from six to eight weeks upon the completion of its present subject.

Post Office Urges Industry's Co-operation

Postmaster General Will H. Hays, has called upon the motion picture industry and all other large users of the mails to co-operate in expediting the transmission of mail matter by posting letters at frequent intervals during the day instead of holding off the bulk until evening.

In a statement to the public at large, Mr. Hays calls attention to the fact that in all large post offices, the influx of mail reaches a peak late in the evening which is impossible to handle quickly. In Washington the Government has taken steps to cure this by having all departments institute a system of frequent mailings.

"If the public, especially the large users of the mails," says Mr. Hays, "will follow the Government's lead in an earnest effort to cause frequent mailings, there will be the following certain consequent advantages:

(a) Business would be expedited through an earlier dispatch, sometimes making a difference of one entire day in the delivery of the mail at destination.

(b) Congestion of work in the post office at night is reduced thereby lessening the possibility of delay.

(c) Mailing during the morning and early afternoon clears the way for more expeditious handling and dispatch of the important evening mails.

(d) Matter mailed early is dispatched on trains that are not heavily laden with mail, with consequent more efficient train handling.

(e) Matter mailed early usually reaches the large business centers at a time when it can be readily distributed, and therefore, is more likely to receive prompt delivery there.

(f) Lastly, but by no means least important, the early mailing reduces the amount of night work at post offices and thereby benefits postal employees and their families."

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry is endeavoring to co-operate with the Post Master General and has forwarded to all of its members, a copy of Mr. Hays' statement.

Colorado Film Measures Die in Committee

Colorado's legislature adjourned on April 7th, with the situation, as far as motion picture theatres are concerned, the same as it was before the session. The bill to amend what is commonly known as the "Blue Laws" failed to get out of committee, and the censorship bill suffered the same fate.

The Rocky Mountain Screen Club, of Denver, reports that it is satisfied with the general results and that they will try at the next meeting to repeal or amend the Blue Laws.

A Cure for Pessimism

ABOUT the best thing we can suggest to the pessimists within our prosperous industry is to take a trip to Chicago and view the Tivoli theatre.

We won't speak here of its beauty; except to say that just to view its interior is more than worth the price of admission.

We suggest the following observations:

—how the 4,500 seats are filled every performance, every day.

—that the patronage is strictly neighborhood.

—that it costs a small fortune per week to run and yet the theatre makes big money.

—that the huge investment here is based wholly upon the public taste for motion pictures for years to come. This theatre is non-commercial, has neither stores nor an office building to rely upon. Within a number of years it must amortize its investment upon a continuous profit from selling pictures to the public.

May we also call to the pessimist's attention the opening of the following big theatres: The Allen in Cleveland, the Capitol in Toronto, the Tivoli in Chattanooga; also the Saenger announcement of new theatres—2,000 to 4,500 seats—in New Orleans, Shreveport, Pensacola, Texarkana,; the new Lynch house in Nashville.

The public hasn't stopped buying motion pictures; it's about the only commodity that hasn't been seriously affected.

Automobiles were hit hardest. Yet the automobile industry has resumed.

Los Angeles Theatre Will Run One Act Plays

A development in the policies of the New Ambassador theatre in Los Angeles forecasts an important advance in the art of motion-picture presentation. Gore Bros. Remish & Sol Lesser are to inaugurate a series of one-act plays to be staged in conjunction with the showing of first-run pictures, plays not unlike those first brought to the stage at the Grand Guignol in Paris, and later imported to this country by Holbrook Blinn at the Princess theatre, in New York. First National attractions will continue to be pre-released at the Ambassador as before.

Manager Williams Leaves Providence Strand

Charles N. Williams, who for six years has been the manager of the Strand theatre in Providence, R. I., severed his connection with the house April 9. He was tendered a farewell dinner at the Narragansett Hotel Sunday. Edward L. Reed, who has been Mr. Williams's assistant for twelve years, now becomes manager of the Strand.

Dramatic Editor Makes Anti-Censor Address

ROBERT G. TUCKER, dramatic editor of the Indianapolis Star, delivered an unusually keen and intelligent anti-censorship address before the Traffic Club of Indianapolis on March 31. Mr. Tucker went to the rock-bottom of the reform agitation and in a logical manner showed that it was not only false in principal but absolutely unworkable in practice.

"I insist," said Mr. Tucker, "that if the reformers are permitted to say what we shall have at the theatre they can enter our homes and tell us what to do there. They do not trust the public to manifest a choice of pictures. As a newspaper man I have watched public manifestations, and I say from experience that the public can be trusted to pick out good entertainment.

"It doesn't patronize the bad very long."

Mr. Tucker's address was very well received.

State Censor Bill Jammed Through Senate Despite All Opposition

Picture Representatives Fight to Keep Bill from Being Reported Out

BY a vote of 30 to 18 the Lusk-Clayton State censorship of motion pictures was passed in the Senate at Albany, N. Y., last Monday night, when the bill was literally jammed down the throats of more than one Senator who did not have the courage to stand up and declare his principles.

In the Senate procedure was adopted to force the bill to a vote, the like of which has been seldom seen in legislative halls at Albany. Although it had been noised about that the bill would come before the Senate for action Monday night, resulting in the chamber and the galleries being jammed to their capacity, the very fact that the bill was among the last on the day's calendar, was sufficient to lead many to believe that it would not be reached before Tuesday.

Senator Lusk, right hand man of Governor Miller, rose in his seat at 10 o'clock and offered a resolution which asked that the censorship bill be given preference over all other bills, even including those on the calendar as well as a thousand or more which must be passed this week, if at all.

Senators gasped at the very audacity of Senator Lusk's move. Senator Walker jumped to his feet and offered objection after objection. He was hopelessly in the minority, however, and Senator Lusk was successful in carrying his first trench by a vote of 35 to 9.

There was no hope of the bill going over until Tuesday. Senator Lusk immediately offered another proposition limiting the time of debate to thirty minutes.

"Does Senator Lusk mean to tell me," asked Senator Walker, at the top of his voice, "that this is his own particular body to the extent that he can tell me, the minority leader, that I can not speak for more than thirty minutes on a measure that directly affects ten million and more people, as well as billions of invested capital?"

Once under way, Senator Walker paid no attention, whatever, to the attempt on the part of the majority leader, to stifle his efforts. Unmercifully flaying Senator Lusk Mr. Walker declared that a lack of courtesy on the part of the majority leader was never heard of before to the extent that it had been shown.

"But I promise you," said Senator Walker, "that as the wheel goes round, things are bound to change. There has never been such an example of concrete brass as exists in this administration when steam roller methods have become every day occurrences in railroading bills through that should never be passed. There is that anxiety to satisfy someone. The whole thing is but another creation of that meddling crew. This censorship bill is the most un-American thing that has ever been brought into a New York State Senate. Censorship is an absolute limitation on art. The bill is not expressive of the sentiment of the people of this state.

"The motion picture producers have been tricked and trapped into offering to clean up their industry at the hearing last week."

"If it were not for fear of committing a breach of confidence," said Senator Walker, "I would tell why they made this suggestion—at whose suggestion they were tricked—yes, and trapped by men of international reputation."

Senator Lusk attempted to explain the provisions of the bill the best he could. He said that its purpose was regulatory and not as a revenue producing measure, this fact, he declared, being evident in the amendments which had been made reducing the examination fees. Senator Lusk declared that producers have complained that certain exhibitors have not used posters which they had sent out, these having been supplanted by others of their own, wherein a sensuous appeal was made in the hopes of attracting patronage to their houses. This, he said, would be taken care of by the bill.

He estimated that in the way of revenue, the measure would bring in something in excess of 70,000.

Senator Holland Duell inquired as to just exactly what constituted an "inhuman scene," and whether or not such plays as "Macbeth" could be properly screened if the bill became a law. Senator Theodore Douglas Robinson, nephew of the late Colonel Roosevelt, inquired of Senator Lusk just how many examiners he thought would be necessary in carrying out the provisions of the bill. The question proved too much for the majority leader, who ducked a direct answer.

Senator Lusk said that it was the desire on the part of the legislators to co-operate with what he termed were the "decent producers" and that censorship would proved a "little assistance."

At midnight, the measure went to a vote of the Senate. Taking no chances, even though he had already polled a vote among the Republican members behind closed doors, Senator Lusk instructed the sergeant at arms to summon all Senators to their seats and to allow no one to leave the chamber.

As the voting progressed, it was apparent that the party whip would corral the votes, even though the sentiment existed among many in opposition to the bill. Once in awhile some Senator, such as George Fearon, of Syracuse, hailing from Governor Miller's home city, would have the courage to vote against the bill, and explain his action by saying that there were sufficient laws on the statute books to take care of the situation.

Senator Robinson took an open stand against the bill, even in the face of a telegram which he read from his home town, stating that 400 members of a church in his district had asked him to vote for the bill. He declared that if any pictures of an indecent nature were being shown in this state today, that no one was responsible other than the people themselves.

"They have the remedy at hand if they are not too lazy and indifferent to use it," he said.

Among those who have followed the progress of the bill since its inception, however, there is a wondering as to whether or not Senator Lusk, sharp in the tricks of the political game, was not responsible for the stand taken by Senators Fearon and Robinson in the hopes of creating the impression that after all the bill was not a party measure, and that with such impression existing the Republican party would not bring down the censure that might exist if the bill was being steam-rollered through as a party measure.

Announcement of the vote in the Senate showed the following results:

For censorship—Republicans: Senators Ames, Baumes, Bloomfield, Burling, Burlingame, Campbell, Carson, Davenport, Draper, Duell, Ferris, Gibbs, Harris, Hewitt, Kavanaugh, Knight, Lockwood, Lowman, Lusk, Martin, Mullan, Pitcher, Reischmann, Simpson, Swift, Thayer, Thompson, Tolbert, Towner and Walton, A.

Fighting to the Last Ditch!

WITH Charles O'Reilly still in Albany, the motion picture men of the state are still hopeful that the Clayton Censorship Bill may not be acted on before adjournment of the Legislature on Saturday, April 16.

On Wednesday, April 13, O'Reilly, Sam Burman and W. H. Lincoln were at work in an effort to persuade the Rules Committee not to report the Censorship bill before adjournment.

ITEMS OF THE EXCHANGES AND THEATRES

BALTIMORE

Louis A. DeHoff, manager of the New Theatre, played host to 450 poor children last Saturday and practically gave them the keys to his place at a special morning performance. The kiddies were in charge of Mrs. Calvin Ferris Troupe. Vera Gordon in "The Greatest Love" was the feature. The local daily newspapers mentioned the treat in their columns.

Samuel Bassin, who recently acquired the Flax Motion Picture Theatre, 1 South High street, has renamed it the Metro Photoplay Theatre.

M. A. Berger is handling local territory as a member of the sales force of Screenart Film Company of Philadelphia.

A certificate of incorporation has been granted by the State Tax Commission to the Brunton Motion Picture Corporation, which specifies one of its purposes as "to encourage and cultivate a taste for drama, cinematography, music, literature and the arts."

The incorporators are Charlotte T. Cohee, Corrine B. Outten and Sara L. Mackey, all of Wilmington, Del. The concern has the Corporation Service Company as resident agent and paid a tax bonus to Maryland amounting to $515. Its authorized capital stock amounts to 22,000 shares, without par value.

PORTLAND, ORE.

Paul Emerson Noble, manager of the Liberty theatre, Portland, Ore., accompanied by Mrs. Paul Emerson and their five-year-old son, Junior, will spend April motoring through California.

In his absence from Portland, Ralph Winsor, manager of the Star theatre, will preside in the Liberty theatre offices. The Nobles will visit among other film celebrities in California, Frank Keenan, Wallace Reid, Charles Ray and William S. Hart. Mr. Hart is Junior's godfather.

Plans for the annual orphans' matinee to be given all institutional children of Portland and vicinity at the Liberty theatre on the morning of April 28 are being completed by C. S. Jensen. The kiddies' show is given by Master Von Claud Jensen, only son of the theatre magnet, on his birthday. This year's matinee will be the second and will mark Von's second birthday.

Wallace Reid was the guest of honor of the Liberty theatre on Friday, March 18, in Portland, Ore., where he stopped on his way back to California after attending the opening of the new Paramount theatre in Vancouver, B. C. Mr. Reid made five appearances in person at the Liberty theatre and on each occasion was greeted by a capacity house.

CANADA

An important development in moving picture trade circles of Toronto, Ont., apart from usual lines, has been the establishment of the Educational Motion Pictures, Limited, with headquarters and salesrooms at 27 Melinda street. The new company will specialize with films of an educative nature and will sell equipment for the projection of such pictures in schools, churches and homes.

The churches of Toronto, Ontario, are literally coming to the moving picture theatres. This is due to the fact that several of the large new film palaces in the Ontario Capital are being used regularly for Sunday evening services by church congregations. The Bloor Street Baptist Church has been using Loew's Uptown theatre in this way during the past winter, and now the Riverdale Presbyterian Church has moved into the new Palace theatre, Pape and Danforth avenues, for regular Sunday services.

Montreal people have been rather astounded over the fact that the amusement tax revenue from local theatres during the recent Lenten season created a new record. During the month of March, the city collected no less than $41,558.56, as compared with $41,276 for the month of January. The revenue during the short month of February was $37,778.34, this sum being greater than for the same month last year. For the first three months of 1921, the city derived the record amount of $120,613.20 through the collection of the tax on theatre admission tickets. This money is used for the benefit of local hospitals and charitable institutions.

The Province of Quebec has adopted a new measure which provides for an annual tax of $200 on each of the moving picture exchanges which operate an office within the Province.

WESTERN NEW YORK

The Rivoli theatre, Buffalo's big east side neighborhood house, of which Harry Dixon is manager, has reduced its prices from 22 and 28 cents to 15 and 20 cents and has eliminated the vaudeville part of the program. The policy is now straight pictures. The Rivoli is the third house in this part of the state to reduce prices. The Family, Buffalo, several weeks ago started a ten cent program of pictures, the International at Niagara Falls last week announced a reduction and now the Rivoli.

The Regent theatre at Dunkirk, N. Y., has installed a six piece orchestra and an elaborate stage setting by Servison of Rochester. The house was recently opened by Lally Brothers. The Regent is the result of a $50,000 expenditure in remodeling the old Empire.

Jane and Katherine Lee, screen kiddies, were the headliners at Shea's vaudeville house this week, and next week Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne will make their debut locally as vaudeville stars.

Out-of-town exhibitors who were in Buffalo on booking trips last week included C. Babcock of Wellsville, Mr. Tooker of the Regent, Elmira; D. Epstein of the Regent, Corning; Mr. Kelly of the Elk, Corning, and Fred Schweppe of the Colonial and Amusu, Elmira.

Bert Lyon, former Buffalo representation for Hodkinson, dropped off in town last week on his way to Gotham from the coast to visit O. T. Schroeppel, now assistant manager at Realart, who was formerly Hodkinson representative.

J. R. Thomson, Pathe salesman in Buffalo, is now covering the entire territory for Associated Exhibitors. Harry Knappen is in town representing this company. Robert Smeltzer, district manager for Pathe, was a Buffalo visitor last week. Howard Riehl is now covering Basil Brady's territory temporarily. Mr. Basil is recovering from an attack of pneumonia.

INDIANAPOLIS

The Colonial has reduced its top night price from forty to thirty-five cents. The Broadway and Rialto, vaudeville and picture houses, have announced changes of both prices and policy. The Broadway will headline feature photoplays and fill in with acts and the Rialto will play musical comedy with feature photoplays. The Rialto scale will be fifteen and twenty-five cents afternoon and twenty-five, thirty-five and forty cents nights and the Broadway, twenty-five and thirty-five cents uniformly.

"The County Fair" was held at Mr. Smith's for two weeks and "The Gilded Lily" at the Ohio for the same period.

The complaint of George G. McDonald, stockholder in the Apex pictures Corporation, that this company, which has a small studio in Indianapolis, and Smart Pictures, Inc., were near insolvency resulted in appointment of James L. Barnitt, 307 Lombard Bldg., Indianapolis, being appointed receiver for both companies in Superior Court. Smart Pictures took over Apex, assuming some $20,000 worth of debts a year ago, it is stated.

OKLAHOMA CITY

Clara Smith Hamon is out of luck in Kansas. Films in which she is to appear are barred by the Kansas State Exhibitors' Association. Such is the effect of a resolution passed by the association last week. The exhibitors went so far as to include in the resolution a clause barring films which exploit notoriety gained by other persons of similar circumstances.

An ordinance passed by the Miami, Okla., City commissioners forbids the indecent exposure of any person or the making or production of indecent motion pictures showing in Miami theatres at a penalty punishable by fine or jail. The ordinance authorizes the appointment by the mayor of a city board of censors.

All theatre owners or other places of public amusement showing motion pictures will be compelled to obtain a permit from the board before giving a performance or showing a picture in the city. The board reserves the right to revoke a permit at its discretion.

The mayor is to act as member of the board. The ordinance further provides that other city officers than a member of the board, the fire or police commissioner or any officer are given power to stop any performance contrary to the ordinance provisions.

DAYTON, O.

John Siefret who, for many years has been identified with the motion picture theatres of Dayton, has resigned as manager of the Rialto and Ideal theatres and has been succeeded by Gil Burroughs formerly of the Auditorium of this city.

Gil takes up his duties with the good wishes of every exhibitor in southern Ohio where he is well and favorable known. He is an old timer at the show business having managed the old National theatre when melodrama was in its prime.

The first shovel of dirt was taken from the lot where Keith will build on Tuesday, April 6th. The lease on the present Keith location expired and Charles Gross of the Columbia bought the property and will open it about May 15th with a stock company of Shubert selection to run through this summer.

Keith's move to the Strand which they have under lease and will show pictures and vaudeville there this summer. They have also leased the Lyric theatre and will put pictures in there to take care of their contracts now running at the Strand.

SAN FRANCISCO

M. A. Hulling, for six years with the San Francisco Pathe exchange, has been appointed sales manager of the Associated Exhibitors branch opened in San Francisco April 4.

"Wobber Week," May 8 to 14, will be celebrated by the four coast offices of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in tribute to Herman Wobber, district manager of that territory. The idea was conceived and arranged by H. G. Rosebaum and Wayland H. Taylor, branch manager at San Francisco and the publicity and advertising man there, respectively.

DETROIT

The Majestic theatre has booked the new Sennett picture, "A Small Town Idol," for two weeks.

F. Raoul Cleaver, formerly manager of the Grand Circus theatre and a salesman for Universal, has joined the staff of Merit Films, state rights exchange.

W. S. McLaren of the Majestic theatre, Jackson, has been elected president of the Jackson club in the Central league.

Safe robbers broke into the safe of the Washington and La Salle Garden theatres last Sunday night, securing $2,400 from the first and $2,800 from the latter. The robberies took place in the early morning and employes in both were bound and covered with revolvers, while the robberies were in progress. Neither safe contained a strong box and the robbers got at the contents by knocking off the combination.

CLEVELAND

Mrs. Evalyn E. Snow of Mt. Vernon, is the newly appointed third member of the Ohio Censor Board. Mrs. Snow takes the place of Miss Elinor Parker, resigned. The other members of the board include Mrs. Maude Murray Miller, chairman, and J. S. Kingslow. Mrs. Snow is a sister-in-law of Judge Wanamaker of the Ohio Supreme Court.

Phil Selznick of Phil Selznick Productions, Cleveland, has just returned from a hurried trip to New York and brings with him the good word that he has purchased the Ohio releasing rights to the four James Oliver Curwood pictures. These four pictures are to be released every three months during the coming year, beginning May 15, the first one to be "The Heart of the Northland."

Morris Safier, newly appointed manager of Select's local office was in Toledo last week, and arranged for a whole week of Selznick pictures to be shown at the Valentine theatre. Norma Talmadge in "Panthea" was shown the first half of the week, and "Ghosts of Yesterday" the latter part of the week.

R. E. Shrader, central division manager for Pathe, and Leo Adler, auditor, were registered on the guest book of the Cleveland Pathe office this week.

W. F. Seymour, central division manager for the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, gave Cleveland and the surrounding territory the once-over this week, and received a cordial welcome from the exhibitors whom he used to serve personally as local exchange manager.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 220 SO. STATE ST.

Jack Graumont has returned to Chicago after a six week's visit to California with his family, to assume his duties as vice-president and general manager of the Doll-Van Film Company, of Chicago. President Vandawalker announces that he expects to get into the new and larger quarters of his exchange at 734 S. Wabash Avenue before May 1st.

The election of Adolph Marks to the State Senate from the First District of Illinois, to fill the unexpired term of Francis P. Brady, puts another champion of theatrical and moving picture interests on the floor of the Illinois Senate, and he undoubtedly will be a valuable aid to the Allied Amusement interests in blocking blue law legislation. Mr. Marks is allied with the Mayor Thompson administra' tion in Chicago, and probably will be one of the Mayor's leaders on the floor of the Illinois State Senate. He is widely known as an attorney for theatrical interests and it is claimed has done much in the way of eliminating legislation that was a hardship to theatre owners, producers and the profession in general. It was he who took the sting out of the Child Labor Law of Illinois, which had caused the theatrical profession no little trouble and expense until he obtained a high court decision that was favorable to the theatrical interests and he also has other important achievements to his credit.

Salesmanager Belford, of Pinnacle Productions, is leaving this week for a tour of the western exchange centers and before his return will visit St. Louis, Dallas, Denver and other cities.

Returning from the coast, Watterson R. Rothacker proceeded to New York. He plans to be in the vicinity of Chicago again in time for the First National Convention at West Baden. When he sails for Europe in June, his wife and daughter will accompany him. Douglas D. Rothacker is back in Chicago after a month at the New York Industrial Branch.

The flood of beauty contest photos to the Evening Journal was increased when Chicago girls learned that Watterson R. Rothacker would have trailers made of every hundredth girl to get her photo into the newspaper office—the trailers to be shown in local theatres. The contest winner, who gets a job in Christie Comedies will be announced at the motion picture machine operators' ball, May 5th. The ball is being promoted by Thomas J. Reynolds, union president, and Joseph J. Sullivan, chairman of the ball committee.

Franklin B. Coates, director of Mesco Pictures Corporation, was in Chicago this week in connection with company business. According to Kansas City newspaper clippings, which he brought with him, "Jesse James Under the Black Flag," Mesco's first feature production, broke all records at its premier showing at Newman's Twelfth Street Theatre, Kansas City, and was a big popular success. Mesco's distribution plans call for the picture being booked by company representatives and Jesse James, Jr., will make personal appearances in larger cities.

The Majestic Theatre, Madison, has been entirely remodelled and redecorated and has opened under the management of F. W. Fisher, who operates theatres in La Salle, Kewanee and Galesburg, Illinois. One of the features of the house as remodelled, is a large-sized Barton Organ, which Mr. Fisher installed in order to assure his patrons of good music. This is the fifth instrument purchased by Mr. Fisher from the Bartola Musical Instrument Company, and makes the Fisher houses one hundred per cent. users of the Bartola instrument.

Salesmanager Mintz, of Synchronized Scenario Music Company, announces that the Hostettler Amusement Company, of Omaha, have contracted to distribute Synchronized scores in Iowa, and Nebraska, and that Sobleman, Mustard and Roe, of Minneapolis, have taken over the territory including North and South Dakota, Minnesota, Northern Wisconsin and the upper peninsula of Michigan. Sobleman, Mustard and Roe, of Milwaukee, have also arranged to handle Southern Wisconsin. Mr. Mintz reports that everywhere exhibitors are showing great interest in securing the Synchronized Scenario Music service in order to give adequate musical presentation for feature pictures. He also states that only two or three territories remain open and that within the next week he expects to have the state rights closed one hundred per cent.

Six new organs have been contracted for installation in theatres of Gore Brothers and Sol Lesser by J. F. Charles of the Los Angeles office of American Photoplayer Company. A $75,000 instrument is being installed in the Kinema Theatre and other theatres to be similarly equipped are at Pomona, two in Hollywood and the Capital Theatre in Los Angeles. Mr. William Mullaney, for three years in charge of the serial department of Los Angeles Pathe Exchange, has been added to the sales force by Mr. Charles.

T. W. Chatburne Enterprises are planning to film The Old Homestead, the very successful stage play by Denman Thompson and have engaged William Lawrence, who succeeded Thompson as star in the stage production as the star of the film.

Space has been rented at the Willett Studio, at Culver City, by a newly organized company headed by Judge A. N. Hilton, which will make a series of two-reel classics, the first of which will be Babes In the Woods, followed by Little Red Riding Hood and others. Dempsey Toblar and Henry Matthews will be in charge of production and W. J. Cohan has been appointed sales manager.

Selected Films are now distributing the novelty, "The Old Time Movie Show," which is meeting with considerable success. It depicts movies as they were in the olden days and includes a one-reel feature, "Shadows of Doubt," with Mary Pickford and Owen Moore; an old time comedy, "The Runaway Leopard," and a song entitled, "My Little Kangaroo," illustrated in old time fashion by slides. The Rialto, Central Park and several important first run theatres already have played this novelty.

Lew Cody made a personal appearance at Jones, Linick & Schaefer's McVicker's this week and went over big with his monologue and funny stories.

Celebrated Players Film Corporation opened its new quarters at 810 S. Wabash avenue on Monday and kept open house for exhibitors and others connected with the industry. Joe Friedman is justly proud of his splendid new exchange which is one of the largest and best arranged in Chicago's new film district.

A large number of exhibitors attended the pre showing of Vitagraph's special production, "Heart Of Maryland," at that company's new projection room, 839-43 S. Wabash, Thursday, and were very much pleased with the picturization of the famous stage play. Manager Tarbell expects to do an unusually large business with this splendid feature.

The Frank Thelan Circuit opened its fine new Rialto theatre in Elgin on Monday night of this week. It is one of the handsomest houses in the state and has a seating capacity of sixteen hundred. Messrs. W. D. Burford, the Rubens brothers and other officers of the company attended the opening which was successful in every way.

Salesmanager Kent of Famous Players-Lasky presided at a sales conference of district managers in Chicago last Saturday. The managers of the Minneapolis, Cincinnati, Detroit, Cleveland and Kansas City territories being present, as well as District Manager Gilday of the Chicago office. After the meeting Manager Kent, accompanied by Mr. Gilday went to Kansas City where he took part in the celebration marking the opening of the new Kansas City exchange. From Kansas City Mr. Kent went to the west coast where he will confer with Mr. Lasky on Paramount's Spring production plans.

Ralph Kettering, of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, is back on the job again after a fortnight spent at Hot Springs, Arkansas, and reports that he was greatly benefited by his brief vacation.

"Dream Street"

D. W. GRIFFITH'S latest production, "Dream Street," may be called a sequel to "Broken Blossoms," since it is founded upon a couple of Thomas Burke's Limehouse Nights stories. The producer has used just a mere skeleton of the author's tales, establishing a drama of his own around them. And against this background moves a plot with a moral, pointing the good and bad in human beings. Two brothers, one a swaggering bully, the other a cringing weakling, a spirited girl and a wily Chink compose the quadrangle—a quadrangle which is supplemented by lesser figures in the pattern.

The picture seems pointless in its earlier reels, since most of the sequences are given up to stressing sentiment, character and atmosphere. The concluding chapters build convincing drama until the finale, when a purely movie ending inconsistent with the action and characterization is offered for the sake of happiness. Mr. Griffith seems to have profited by the fact that picturegoers do not care for tragic epics.

The picture lacks the vigor and substance and poetic quality of "Broken Blossoms," though it carries sufficient vitality. The producer has emphasized close-ups and intimate by-play to the point of exaggeration. The picture is well cast in most instances. Its outstanding features are its exceptional photography and atmosphere.—LAWRENCE REID.

Music and the Picture

Percy Grainger Joins the Picture Music

By Charles D. Isaacson

I WILL not say that I told you so. But here it is: For the information I am about to impart I am indebted to that much cleverer and more assiduous reporter, Miss I. M. McHenry, who is the concert man of The Billboard. She met me on the street and she declared that Percy Grainger has joined the picture music and that he was going to play twice a day at the Capitol Theatre and here was the prediction of the Music Conference (Hotel Astor, January 24-5-6) come to pass.

Percy Grainger is one of the big artists, looked upon as among the most conservative musicians of the day. He is a composer of piano music of a serious trend. He is tall, handsome, blonde, with an abundance of silken hair. He looks the musician, and his name has become one which seems destined to immortality.

I would have said if you had asked me if Grainger would be one of the early-birds of the conservatives to come into the motion picture field, I would have said no. I have considered folks like Galli-Curci and Mary Garden and Paderewski first. For Percy Grainger has kept aloof from many modern and radical movements in music, which should have inspired him and secured his support.

But here he is in the movies at two a day.

Do you think I am poking fun at him, or casting him lower in the scale of importance? Indeed not! Perish the thought!

Percy Grainger goes up one peg or two! He has justified himself in my eyes anew. He has trampled down the smug attitude of so-called dignity and dared to do what he knows is right and fair and good. Percy Grainger will not play anything less than he would have done in the concert hall, nor will he play it with any lowering of his style and his manner of performance . . . He is going to meet a different audience, a keener, a more live, more sympapathetic audience—a set of people consciously and unconsciously seeking to better themselves. Percy Grainger will return to the concert hall with a new sense of life, refreshed, given a new vigor, in much the same way that he returned from the army bands during the war, realizing that the stilted atmosphere of ordinary society functions and formal concert recitals do not necessarily cover all that there is in existence! Moreover, Percy Grainger will draw with him to his next recitals, scores of these Capitol Theatre listeners, who with the taste of a composition or two upon their lips, have a gnawing appetite for more in the hearts.

Perhaps it is not all Percy Grainger's fault. In fact I can see the master touch of S. L. Rothafel in this deal. Ah, Rothafel! You have many big plans up your sleeve, which the little fellows who have sneered at you in all your pioneering days could never dream out if they live a thousand years. I would not be surprised to read any minute that Rothafel had taken over as guest conductors, the big directors of the symphony orchestras, the opera house. I would believe without a question a press story from Rothafel that he has engaged the entire Metropolitan Opera Company to appear at the Capitol theatre or that he had brought over the Covent Garden Company from London, or that he had signed a list of stars appearing weekly from a list including Galli-Curci, Josef Hofmann, Sergei Rachmaninoff, Martinelli, Mary Garden, Muratore, Cavaleri, Ruffo, Amato, Kreisler, Heiftz, Elman, Casals, Salzedo, Kubelik, Pavlowa, Isadora Duncan, etc., ad infinitum.

I am not astounded at Percy Grainger's engagement of two performances a day during Music Week (April 17th to 24th) at the Capitol theatre. I expected it. And here I take the pleasure of quoting again the proceedings of the Astor Hotel Music-Picture Conference statements which then seemed more remote than they do at this moment.

"The time is not far distant when the greatest artists in the world will not feel that it is at all beneath their dignity to sing or play in the fine motion picture houses. And just as theatre managers once paid ten dollars for a picture and now rent it for thousands of dollars, so will they be happy and consider it good business to pay real money for real artists—even those managers who now think one hundred dollars a week is a lot of pay for a singer!

"Within another year I predict that names of the highest rank—international artists will be headliners in the motion picture houses.

"I am not afraid of the motion picture theatre—for it is the low being raised to the highest plain—I am afraid of the vaudeville, for it is good being debased and lowered."

In view of which I shall not say I told you so. But here it is.

BULLETIN OF MOTION PICTURE MUSICAL INTERESTS

The Committee of Five, consisting of Messrs. Breil, Luz, Reisenfeld, Rothafel, Tremaine (chairman), Isaacson exofficio), have to report that they have completed all plans of organization: that final invitations to the Executive Board of Nine and the Advisory Committee of Thirty-five have been sent forth.

Within a very few days the permanent organization will have been completed.

ELIMINATE IMITATIONS

By F. L. GRANNIS

FILM MUSIC COMPANY

It was after considerable experience with temperamental musicians working on music cues and music scores that we discovered that the most important part of the work of selecting music for certain scenes was in being practical. This, then, meant the elimination of idealistic ideas of temperamental whims or fancies and brought it down to a basis of determining, in the first place, what emotion the scene itself was expressing.

Having learned this much, our first step on every picture was a very thorough and careful analysis of the dramatic values of every scene in the picture. It was found that when a scene was properly analyzed as to its dramatic value and just to what degree the dramatic emotion was being expressed, it was a very simple matter to find music that would express the same emotion in the same degree. For instance, if the scene was a fight, it was only necessary to note whether it was a fight between two people or more or whether it was a mob, and then to note on top of this whether it was interior or exterior, in the foreground or at a distance. With this information the right music was quickly found. This same process is applied to every scene, first determining exactly what the actors in the scene are expressing or, in other words, to take the thought back of the scene and help the actors express that thought by playing music which is in harmony with that thought.

The next step in this work was our stand regarding the imitation of certain effects in pictures. For instance, a telephone bell, auto horn, horses running and a hundred other various actions which are imitated religiously by a very great number of musicians all over the country. The careful analysis of this question brought out the fact that if we were going to play to action rather than the thought back of the action, we would not be helping the picture. Instead of a musical atmosphere we would be imitating, in a crude way, these different effects. This, then, would become "noise" to pictures and not music to pictures.

In analyzing further it showed on the face of things that the idea of having a bell ring when the picture showed a telephone bell ringing, and then to have a man answer the telephone (without hearing his conversation) was absurd, and merely burlesqueing the situation. Just why you should hear a telephone bell and then not be able to hear a human being, is a question that would be hard to answer, and yet you hear this sort of thing daily.

Also, in the case of pistol or gun shots, explosions, etc.—why should musicians who are playing music to that picture try to imitate these noises? The only answer that can possibly be is that they are trying to secure sensational effects which they believe will make an impression on the audience.

The writer of this article not so long ago saw Cecil B. DeMille's "Don't Change Your Husband," shown at one of the largest theatres in the country and in one scene where a pistol was fired, they had a pistol actually fired back of the scenes in absolute synchronization with the screen shot. The people responsible for this probably thought it was very clever. There is absolutely no doubt, however, but that this thing seriously hurt the presentation of this picture and did much to destroy the many other excellent fea-

EXHIBITORS' REPORTS ON NEW RELEASES

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATERS

FAMOUS PLAYERS

The Witching Hour—
A combination of hot weather and a well known play but one not particularly well produced. Result—our crowds dwindled. (Middle West.)

Business did not keep up well with this feature. Somehow it didn't seem to please. (West.)

Forbidden Fruit—
Went over big on the second week of its run. (West.)

Gorgeous costumes and dazzling scenic effects, but the picture drags in spots. A good box office attraction. (Middle West.)

The Gilded Lily—
The kind of picture patrons expect to see Mae Murray in. About the best she has done. Consistent business with a clientele she has built up. (Middle West.)

Only Mae Murray's tricky costumes, and dancing held this up. Business just fair, despite heavy advertising. (East.)

The Easy Road—
Not as good as some of the other Meighan pictures. Meighan well liked, however, and matinee business was particularly good. (Middle West.)

Buried Treasure—
Big production. Story not convincing. However it is the best thing the star has done so far. Fair box office value. (East.)

What's Worth While—
Good picture that does justice to a snappy title. Played in conjunction with "You'll Be Surprised," a Chester comedy, and did a week's capacity business at my house. (Middle West.)

What Every Woman Knows—
Enjoyed fair business for week run. Opened to big business. Audiences commented favorably on production. (East.)

The Idol of the North—
Best thing Dalton has done since "The Flame of the Yukon." She is losing her grip on the public, however, and business was only fair, despite tremendous advertising. (East.)

The Kentuckians—
Monte Blue made this one. His following increases with each picture, and business held up splendidly on this fact. An excellent picture. (East.)

Paying the Piper—
Exceptionally well liked by everybody. One of the best opening Sunday s in weeks. Kept up satisfactorily. (Middle West.)

The Dollar a Year Man—
A sure-fire attraction, which brought extra large box office receipts. (West.)

Fatty Arbuckle always a sure bet and this picture proves to be no exception. Capacity house all week. (Middle West.)

The Love Special—
Did fine business with this picture. My patrons like Wallace Reid and of course turned out strong to see his picture. (Middle West.)

The Frontier of the Stars—
Started out well but did not stand up. (West.)

Silk Hosiery—
Found this to be a mediocre picture. Played to the usual business. (West.)

FIRST NATIONAL

The Old Swimmin' Hole—
An unusually delightful bit of screen entertainment which the entire city flocked to see. Censorship would not be worrying the industry if there were more films like this. (East.)

An excellent picture from every angle and business was splendid. Went over big. (Middle West.)

The Kid—
Broke records first half of week, fell down at end of engagement. Audiences divided in opinion of picture. (East.)

Mama's Affair—
Very entertaining feature. Had more than usual business during run. (West.)

Passion—
Played this three weeks to satisfied audiences and big business. (West.)

Not Guilty—
A skillful use of trick photography, which makes the "twin brother" idea probable. The settings are good, and the picture on the whole is pleasing. (Middle West.)

Scrambled Wives—
Not much to the picture—but the fact that Marguerite Clark has made her return to the screen in this helped some. Business good. (East.)

Sowing the Wind—
Going over very good. (Middle West.)

Man—Woman—Marriage—
Held over for second week to better than average business. (Middle West.)

Good References—
Audiences found this a pleasing picture. Box office returns fairly good. (East.)

Not Guilty—
A good play, but rather weak as a box office attraction. Played to only a fair house at my theatre for a week. (Middle West.)

GOLDWYN

Prisoners of Love—
Splendid but Compson name not known. Too long a time has elapsed since "The Miracle Man" to give much effect to advertising. Did not do an average business. (Middle West.)

It's a Great Life—
A splendid story cleverly told. Appealed strongly to young people between the ages of 14 and 19. No box office value. (East.)

Hold Your Horses—
A fair comedy with a decidedly poor plot. The sub-titles are very good. (Middle West.)

The Man Who Had Everything—
A delightful picture, with Jack Pickford in a role for which he is well adapted. (Middle West.)

Bunty Pulls the Strings—
Fair picture with business not up to usual standard. (West.)

A Tale of Two Worlds—
Pleasing feature. Brought satisfactory box office returns. (West.)

Boys Will Be Boys—
An ordinary picture with which we had average business. (West.)

METRO

The Marriage of Wm. Ashe—
Pleasing picture. Box office value average. (East.)

A Message From Mars—
Opened very big and stayed big for two reasons. One because Lytell is a great favorite and always pulls the business. Two, because it's a corking good show. (Middle West.)

Puppets of Faith—
Corking little picture. Nothing big or super-special about it—but star's personality put it over with a bang. (East.)

Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse—
6th week of big business. (West.)

ROBERTSON-COLE

Kismet—
Picture with high ideals but only of average amusement. Did only fair business for week. (Middle West.)

The Mistress of Shenstone—
A pleasant picture which seemed to please my audiences. Fine business. (West.)

The First Born—
This is its second week to big business. Keeps house packed. (West.)

"Unhappy Finish"—Mack Sennett Comedy

This is the way Edward L. Hyman, managing director of the Mark Strand theatre, Brooklyn, is advertising "The Passion Flower"

PATHE

The Devil—
Entertaining picture. Pleased intelligent audiences. Only mildly enjoyed by the ordinary run of people who do not like to think in the movies and who prefer a pleasant tale. Fair box office attraction due to the star. (East.)

High class picture that appeals to the discriminating. Well liked by all who saw it. Did good business. Holding it over for second week. (Middle West.)

The Riddle: Woman—
Fair. Nothing to rave over. Conventional, over-drawn, and somewhat spoiled by over-acting. Farrar does not do herself justice in this picture.

VITAGRAPH

Dead Men Tell No Tales—
Attracted fair business for run. Audiences not greatly impressed with this production. (East.)

Black Beauty—
One of the best picture I have ever seen from the standpoint of a patron. Appeals to all ages and classes. Big business at all performances. School children essay contest helped put it over. (Middle West.)

EQUITY

Straight From Paris—
Best picture C. K. Young has made in a long time. Went over big. (East.)

Hush—
Greater business than usual with this delightful picture. (West.)

FOX

Skirts—
Played on double bill with "Know Your Men." Neither pleased our people and box office returns were not satisfactory. (Middle West.)

UNIVERSAL

Outside the Law—
Standing up well in third week of run. (West.)

ASSOCIATED PRODUCERS

The Last of the Mohicans—
Going over big. A wonderful production. (West.)

UNITED ARTISTS

The Nut—
The picture is not up to Douglas Fairbanks' standard, but has an appealing title and offers a good field for exploitation. A good house the entire week. (Middle West.)

Running this a second week to big business. (West.)

STATE RIGHTS

The County Fair—
Went over great. No limit to opportunities for unique exploitation. A capacity house for the first week and held for a second week. (Middle West.)

REALART

Out of the Chorus—
Used in conjunction with "You Can Never Tell. Average business but it increased at end of week. (East.)

The Playing of Broadway—
Good picture which had good business. (West.)

Sayre Makes Play for Family Trade

J. W. Sayre, advertising manager for Jensen and Von Herberg at Seattle, adopted a novel and effective exploitation angle in putting over "The Old Swimmin' Hole" playing recently at the Liberty theatre.

A whole bill of "fillers" as free from objectionable scenes as is "The Old Swimmin' Hole" was gathered into a program designed to make an appeal to the family trade and the "cleanliness" idea was then widely advertised.

The especial attention was called of Parent-Teacher Associations and like organizations through advertisements and reading material inserted in high school and college papers throughout the city. Naturally this brought thousands of persons who were not regular theatre-goers, but were drawn to the Liberty because of the widespread comment about the program. Three days after the run started, another special ad was inserted in the daily papers, bringing in enormous business until the very end of the run.

Clean pictures have been in such constant demand by organizations and individuals throughout the city, that when an entire bill right on this line was presented, it brought everyone out. The success of the venture indicates that public taste is not decadent and that programs which cater to both parents and children bring out a big trade.

Ballyhoo Stunt for "Fantomas" Serial

Manager Jones of the Bonita theatre, Pensacola, Fla., aroused the curiosity of his patrons for the opening number of "Fantomas" by using a ballyhoo in the form of a man dressed in old fashioned frock coat and wearing mask who paraded up and down the streets carrying a grip on which was lettered "Confidentially I am Fantomas, the Mystery Man at the Bonita, today." The stunt went over very well being entirely new to Pensacola.

Clever Ad Tie-Up Stunt for "Billions"

The title of "Billions," the Metro special Nazimova production was instantly seized by the enterprising exhibitor of the Forum theatre, Hillsboro, Ohio, as lending itself to exploitation during the showing of the picture.

A tie-up with the leading merchants of the town was effected, and a full page of the Hillsboro Gazette for Friday, March 24 contained eight advertisements, all of them using the word "billions" to introduce the sales talk.

The manner in which "Billions" was appropriated into the advertising was extremely clever. One ad began "Billions of people." Another read "If you had Billions. A lumber company advised that "The farmers could save billions, etc." An insurance agent began his ad with "Billions of words of wisdom."

The theatre's ad was in the center of the page and its catch line was "What Are All These Billions, They Are Talking About."

The co-operative advertising idea went over big with both theatres and merchants.

Milwaukee Theatres Stage Style Shows

Style shows given the same week in Milwaukee's two foremost theatres attracted record crowds to both houses.

The Alhambra theatre, which is now under the management of Leo A. Landau, used thirty models displaying not only gowns and wraps for grown ups but for misses and youngsters as well. The customary runway extended out over the heads of the patrons.

At Saxe's Strand theatre, Manager Edward Weisfeldt employed a dozen models who displayed their charms while promenading on a horseshoe shaped runway. This runway started from one side of the stage across over three aisles and ended at the opposite side of the stage. During the showing of the photo play the sections of the runway covering the aisles were folded back permitting the passage of patrons. In addition to the regular theatre orchestra a jazz band in costume and two dancers provided entertainment during the style exhibition. As the brunt of the expenses of the Style Shows was borne by the retail houses who exhibited their wares the two shows proved splendid financial projects. Both theatres secured untold advertising through the tie-up with the local merchants. Four appearances of the models were given each day.

Novel Stunt Worked in Marion, O.

The management of the Orpheum Theatre, Marion, O., the home town of President Harding, worked a novel stunt in the exploitation of "Outside the Law."

Taking advantage of the "Clean-up" week in Marion, cards were sent to every family in Marion, bearing the cryptic words:

Clean up your back yard You are are 'Outside the Law'"—P. D.

The cards caused no end of comment and had much to do with the advance advertising which the picture enjoyed.

Native Spanish Dancers in Prologue at Brooklyn Mark Strand

A pair of prominent Spanish dancing stars, special Spanish courtyard scenery and a Spanish soloist added action to the all-Spanish prologue that was used at the Brooklyn Mark Strand theatre to properly introduce Norma Talmadge in "The Passion Flower."

The scenic set used by Managing Director Edward L. Hyman revealed the entrance to a colorful Madrid courtyard with a Spanish street drop showing through the arch. "Extras" were shown idling in the courtyard until Fernando Guarneri, baritone, attired as a swagger and arrogant toreador with brilliant sash and cape, appeared singing "La Paloma" (Yradier). As he concludes Mlle. Maria, Spanish danseuse, castanets and all dances the swift "La Malaguenas." This is followed by a dance of Spanish passion put on by Mlle. Delirio, another native Spanish dancer. The prologue known as "In Old Madrid," had a twin Spanish dance number as a rousing finale with the pair interpreting "El Aragones."

New Newsboy Stunt for "Dinty"

Incident to the showing of "Dinty" at the Isis theatre, in San Diego, Calif, during the week of March 27th, a good publicity stunt was pulled by making a "census" of the prominent men of the city who had at one time in their lives been employed as newsboys. It was found that the mayor had sold papers in the east, a former mayor had once carried the San Diego Union, making his rounds on horseback, Congressman William Kettner "hollered" on the streets of St. Paul, Minn., and the president of the First National Bank, was a newsy in Kingston, N. Y., when he wore knee pants. The "census" made a good news story as well as carried the name of the feature picture.

Grindley Genius in Constructing Cut-Outs

Here is another cut-out lobby display by Thomas C. Grindley of the Liberty theatre, Astoria, Ore., staff showing how at the cost of $6.00 and the expenditure of five hours time a 24 sheet was made to work ten fold as an exploitation medium for "The Last of the Mohicans."

Mr. Grindley's work is a fine example of what the small town man can accomplish in originating business getting ideas at small expense.

Janisch Has Good Exploitation Idea

A novel advertising novelty was placed by A. C. Janisch, director of advertising for the Finkelstein and Ruben theatres, Minneapolis, for exploiting "The Inside of the Cup." Ten thousand paper cups with the inscription, "Look! On 'The Inside of the Cup,'" and containing a card giving the selling argument for this picture were distributed in all the prominent office buildings in the downtown district. The cups being such useful and practical articles were in great demand and gave an excellent tie-up with the photo-play.

Goldman Ties Up with Firemen's Campaign

Manager William Goldman of the Missouri Theatre, St. Louis, saw an opportunity to get a free advertisement in the campaign which the local fire department is conducting for a shorter working day, and so he rode in with the tide. The members of the fire department are at present working more than 12 hours each day and their efforts to shorten the working hours to eight at the coming election has taken the form of city-wide exploitation on their own part.

So first of all Goldman arranged to have the Fire Fighters Glee Club of 24 voices appear on his program for the entire week. A special song was written for the vocalists by J. Reeves Espy, exploitation director of the Famous Players Missouri Corporation, and Maxwell Goldman, a brother of the manager. Slides were prepared containing the words of the song and the audience was requested to join in singing with the 24 uniformed firemen who appeared on the stage at each of the performances during the entire week.

Then a motion picture was shown which was taken in front of the Missouri Theatre. It showed the firemen and police zouaves in drill and was advertised not only by the theatre but by the large number of participants.

For a lobby display Goldman sought the channels of the Missouri Historical Society which has a collection of rare old fire apparatus. The lobby of the Missouri is very long and wide and afforded plenty room for the installation of a number of these ancient fire relics, consisting of old pumping devices, hose carts, and harnesses. This exhibition alone was the means of attracting hundreds and hundreds of people.

Newspaper advertising featured the firemen tie-up, although the feature for the week was "Gilded Lily."

To further "dress up" the theatre for the occasion, House Manager Meininger employed several local women models to stand at various positions about the house and lobby posing under green spot lights. The young ladies were attired in firemen's uniforms.

How Prescott Put Over "Black Beauty"

Exploitation Campaign at Minneapolis Gets School Children's Attention

JOHN PRESCOTT, managing director of the New Lyric theatre, Minneapolis, has just put over a great exploitation campaign for "Black Beauty" assisted by other Finklestein and Ruben employees.

Advance reviews were run by the Minneapolis Journal after a special showing for the Journal critic. Ten days before the first performance the Minneapolis Daily News began a drawing competition designed especially to appeal to the grade school children and modeled along the lines of the one used at the Palace theatre, New Haven, Conn., as told recently in the News. The drawings submitted by the pupils made an attractive and interesting lobby display and many of them were reproduced during the contest in the Daily News.

Private screenings of the picture were held for the faculty and pupils of an influential boys school, the manager of the book department of a local department store, public school teachers, officials of womens clubs, etc.

The department store gave the feature a special window display in connection with copies of the book.

A special herald was made which had the appearance of a slate. The front sign read as if written by a school boy, "You read it in your school days," and on the reverse was the play date. More than 5,000 of these were distributed to residences. A special place-card was arranged for cafes and restaurants. The first was of the teaser order, without play and date line, and were distributed prior to the showing. During the engagement, a second set of place-cards was utilized, announcing "Black Beauty" at the New Lyric theatre. This new stunt brought forth much favorable comment and many unsolicited calls were made for the cards.

For street exploitation, the management of the Lyric secured an old-fashioned cart, the nearest they could get to a tallyho and a dog-cart. The driver of the tallyho was dressed in uniform and beside him sat a bugler, and the team was two black horses, representing Black Beauty and Ginger. The dog cart was drawn by a black horse, also representing Black Beauty and wearing a lettered blanket, announcing the run of the picture. A circular card, the full size of the wheel attached to the spokes of the dog cart carried the announcement of the engagement of "Black Beauty" at the Lyric.

The prologue was a rural scene with Black Beauty and a collie dog, which represented the hunting hounds, because the latter were not available, and Coster and Clements, Minneapolis soloists, sang two songs, "Rise, Sleep No More," a hunting song, and "Songs my Mother Used to Sing." During the engagement the ushers and employees were dressed in costumes of the period. The girls wore facsimiles of the gown worn by the star in "Black Beauty" and the men wore suits similar to that worn by the hero of the play.

One of the most unusual and successful stunts employed by the Lyric theatre was the reviews written by prominent men of Minneapolis and published during the run in the local daily newspapers.

All of this publicity matter was supplemented by the sending of 2,000 personal letters, signed by John Prescott, manager of the New Lyric, to the school teachers of Minneapolis and a newspaper campaign with attractive advertisements running so large as a full half-page and even more, was conducted throughout the engagement and beginning ten days before the initial performance.

So successful was the campaign conducted for "Black Beauty" in Minneapolis that similar methods are being employed by the other theatres in the Finkelstein and Ruben chain which are showing or will show the production.

Carpenter Enlists Services of Cartoonist

Along with a regulation newspaper campaign of unusual scope, George E. Carpenter, manager of the Paramount-Empress theatre, Salt Lake City, was able to put over a decided novelty in the way of exploitation as is explained by the accompanying cut showing a reproduction of a four column by twelve-inch cartoon run in the Salt Lake Telegram in connection with the engagement of "The Gilded Lily" at the Paramount-Empress.

Just what the inducement was offered Cartoonist Evans of the Telegram we do not know, but it would seem that Mr. Carpenter is "ace high" with the whole Telegram staff.

Anyway the cartoon is certainly the finest kind of exploitation and must have brought "The Gilded Lily" to the attention of Salt Lake City.

Olver Turns Steeple Jack for Compson Picture

Grand Rapids, Mich., was treated to one of the cleverest and most compelling exploitation stunts for the showing of Betty Compson's first stellar vehicle, "Prisoners of Love," at the Isis theatre, in the city's history. The campaign was conducted by Hal Olver, Goldwyn's exploitation man in Cleveland, Detroit and Buffalo.

The first big stunt was climbing the face of a twelve-story building from sidewalk to roof. Mr. Olver, dressed in white and wearing a mask, was his own steeplejack. A record crowd gathered in the afternoon to see the stunt. A large banner was displayed during the climb up the face of the building, advertising the showing of "Prisoners of Love."

Another stunt that aroused the curiosity of the town was a series of teaser ads in the Grand Rapids Press, run for a week previous to the showing announcing the "If the sky is yellow, green, blue and white stunt" used at the New York Capitol and other theatres a number of times in the past year.

A "growing" ad was used for six days in the Grand Rapids Herald. The first one read, "$50,000 reward! See tomorrow's Herald." The second one, "$50,000 reward! Wanted!" followed by a portion of Betty Compson's face. In the third ad her full face was pictured; on the fourth day the following was added, "Blanche Davis alias Betty Compson. Description: Height, 5 ft. 6 in.; age, 22; complexion, fair; weight, 121." The fifth added this information, "Disappeared from home six weeks ago—notify father, Wesley Davis, or Chief of Police, New York City. SHE IS ONE OF THE PRISONERS." The final ad supplemented the fifth day's copy, "OF LOVE at Isis all next week."

Everybody in Grand Rapids was agog to see "Prisoners of Love" when the exploitation campaign was over and the picture did a tremendous business throughout the week.

Strand Stages Spring Style Show

The style show as a business tonic is beginning to be appreciated by the small city managers as well as in the big towns.

Among those who have recently staged a Spring event is Manager Jos. J. Jacoby, of the Strand theatre, Marshalltown, Iowa.

Mr. Jacoby went to considerable pains in staging his style show, building a runway with special illumination over the middle section of seats in the theatre down which his 18 models, all local girls, paraded in the latest creations of fashion.

The show was staged in conjunction with a local store and consumed forty minutes, each girl making her appearance in a number of different gowns.

The array of fine feathers did credit to the city and the style show went over for an unqualified success. Carnations were distributed to the Strand patrons.

Another Wedding on Theatre Stage

Any time you want to garner an exploitation stunt from the book of life page Willie Adams of the Palace theatre McAlester, Tex. Willie Adams believes in having his exploitation and his prologues in realistic manner and furthermore, he believes, whenever possible, in having his audience supply the cast.

The climax came when the Palace theatre played "Behold My Wife." Mr. Adams staged a real wedding in the theatre as his prologue and exploitation on the picture. There was a real judge officiating too and all the friends and well wishers of the bride and groom were in the audience.

The ceremony was tied up with the picture and its title "Behold My Wife" as the bride and groom were tied up to judge had announced the verdict the house was darkened and the feature begun.

Clever Stuff for "Chickens"

Miller of Augusta, Ga., Turns Theatre Lobby Into Farm-yard

MANAGER FRANK MILLER, of the New Modjeska theatre, Augusta, Ga., has gained considerable good repute for the clever lobby displays and exploitation stunts which he has put over, but perhaps the cleverest and most successful in a long time was that exploiting "Chickens," during the week following Easter.

In the first place, for the occasion, the entire lobby of the New Modjeska had been turned into a farm-yard. The ticket-booth was disguised as a hay-stack, and there was just a tiny opening at the front, by which one could catch a glimpse of the ticket-seller, garbed in blue denim overalls, and a white shirt, turned back at the throat, with a red and white bandanna handkerchief instead of a tie.

All around the lobby, there were farming implements flung carelessly about, straw covered part of the floor, like an old barn, and in the center of the lobby was the prize of the whole display—an old-fashioned coop of day-old baby chicks, with their fussy, important mother, clucking distractedly in this strange environment. At one side, was an incubator full of eggs, and a brooder stood beside it, waiting its chance for service.

Forming a sort of roof for all this, was a peachtree in full bloom—a real tree, though one bare of leaves, with sprays of peach-blossoms tied to the bare limbs, so that they seemed to be growing there. This tree stood above the chicken-coop, and added one more touch of vividness to the realistic scene.

Inside the theatre, the country atmosphere remained.

The door-man wore overalls, a bandanna and an old-fashioned "sun-hat." He dropped the tickets into what seemed to be an old-fashioned churn, and little country girls in blue and white gingham aprons, their hair in a braid and tied with gay colored ribbons ushered one to seats.

Great fragrant masses of peach-blossoms had been used in the house, too, to excellent effect.

The ads in the daily papers were in keeping with the entire handling of the picture, for they were a little outside the general run.

Black Birds Advertise Picture of Same Name

A cage of live black-birds in a white enamelled cage, hanging in the lobby of the Alamo No. 2 theatre, Atlanta, was Manager George Schmidt's effective "stunt" for the three-day engagement of "Blackbirds," at this theatre.

The lobby was absolutely bare except for the usual frames, full of stills and photographs. A huge banner across the front of the theatre, in which the letters of the sign, "Blackbirds," were formed of tiny "blackbirds," in various attitudes, painted on a white background.

From this banner swung the beautiful white cage, in which the pair of blackbirds seemed twice as black and glossy by direct contrast.

New One for "Old Swimmin' Hole"

A new tie-up for "The Old Swimmin' Hole" has been originated by Jos. J. Jacobson, manager of the Strand theatre, Marshalltown, Iowa.

Marshalltown has a Y. M. C. A. swimming pool that is popular with the boys of the city, so Mr. Jacobson thought the idea of duplicating the old swimming hole feats of the picture in the Y. M. C. A. pool with prizes for the best performers would get the Strand a lot of publicity both in the newspapers and through word of mouth advertising, so he arranged for a series of swimming matches.

The result exceeded all expectations. Every kid in town wanted to get in on the events. Mr. Jacobson gave complimentary tickets to all the contestants and prizes to the winners. The match was staged two days before the picture opened at the Strand and the results published in the papers. Mr. Jacobson advises that seventy boys entered the match and that it gave the Strand a prestige that it could have obtained in no other way.

Clemmer Theatre Dolls Up for "All Dolled Up"

The Clemmer theatre lobby, Seattle, Wash., was all dolled up Easter week with "All Dolled Up" as the feature picture, as illustrated by the cut appearing above.

The side panels were in velour and the cards shown were gold with pink ribbons. Small spot lamps hidden over the box office illuminated the cut-outs in the panels as they stood out.

The doll in the case was given away to a little girl. It was called a "Gladys Walton Doll," with costumes designed by Miss Walton at Universal City and a letter and autographed photo, accompanied the gift.

The foyer was filled with real Easter lilies and other seasonal flowers.

New Teaser Stunt for "Bunty Pulls the Strings"

When the America Theatre, Longmont, Colo., played "Bunty Pulls the Strings" a teaser stunt, originated by R. P. Allison, exploitation man with the Goldwyn Denver exchange, was used to very good effect.

Two thousand address tags, such as are used on express packages and personal baggage, about five by two inches, with strings hanging from one end, were attached to awnings, placed under cigar lighters and in other places where the strings would protrude and would have to be pulled to see what was on the other end. A small card reading, "Pull the string," was placed by the hanging strings. When the strings were pulled the tag came into view bearing the following on one side: "You have pulled the string. Now see 'Bunty Pulls the Strings,' a comedy with a little bit of Scotch now playing America Theatre."

A thousand special postcards were sent to addresses in the telephone book. The cards read: "There's a nip of rare old Scotch. Where! ! ! In 'Bunty Pulls the Strings,," a delightful comedy-drama with a kick in it. A picture brimful of enjoyment—the whole family will enjoy it.

Wendt Admits Twins Free as Box Office Tonic

Holy Week is known to showmen to be one of the poorest for business of any the entire year around. Knowing this, and yet appreciating that he had one of the best shows of the season for that week, Harold F. Wendt, publicity director of the Rivoli, Toledo, set about arranging any number of extra advertising stunts, both in the form of newspaper ads and outside billing. In addition, he arranged with the Toledo News-Bee for a contest.

"All Souls' Eve" was the picture to be shown. Miss Minter takes a double role in this film, so Wendt announced that every set of twins in Toledo or any two people bearing a close resemblance would, by application to the manager's office, be presented with a pair of free tickets. Wendt got notices for a week in advance on this stunt, all of the stories appearing in the news columns, and many times on page one. During the week of the run, the names of those who had won tickets were used, together with pictures of pairs of doubles who were no relation.

"Mother Eternal" to Run on Broadway

"MOTHER ETERNAL," Ivan Abramson's newest feature film starring Vivian Martin, has joined the throng on Broadway, negotiations having been completed for the Casino theatre, which is to house "Mother Eternal" for several months, beginning Sunday, April 17.

A certain interest attaches to the run of this feature on Broadway for the reason that two of its principals, Vivian Martin and Thurston Hall, are each playing on Broadway in a highly successful spoken drama. The cast of "Mother Eternal" includes also Earl Metcalfe, Jack Sherill, Vivienne Osborne, Pearl Shepard, J. W. Johnston and Baby Ruth Sullivan.

Board of Review Sees "Supreme Passion"

Robert W. Priest showed his production, "The Supreme Passion," to the National Board of Review last Tuesday morning. Miss Florence Dixon, the star of the picture, was present and saw it run for the first time. The members of the Board present expressed their fullest approbation of "The Supreme Passion" and commended Mr. Priest for the production of a picture which they found beyond criticism in subject and treatment, according to a statement from the headquarters of the Film Market.

Additional Exchanges for Reelcraft

President R. C. Cropper of the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation has completed plans for the addition of three more branch exchanges soon to be opened and operated with the distribution system of Reelcraft.

The three new exchanges to be added will give Reelcraft a direct sales organization and its own offices in more than sixty-five per cent of the entire United States. Announcement will be made next week of the three new offices together with the names of the managers and staffs of each branch.

Federated Serial Is Ready

"Miracles of the Jungle" Shown to Exhibitors in 22 Exchanges

"MIRACLES OF THE JUNGLE," the Warner Brothers' animal production, which has just been completed, has been shown to exhibitors throughout the country through the twenty-two exchanges of the Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., which has acquired and is releasing the production.

Reports received following these pre-release showings are said to indicate the unanimous opinion of the exhibitors that the picture is a high-class animal film, from the point of view of thrilling use of wild animals, lavishness of settings, marvelous photography, and sensational, spectacular effects.

According to these reports, "Miracles of the Jungle" is the first wild animal picture which shows the same care for detail, the same disregard for expense, the same high artistic standards, which characterized the leading features of today. Other producers of wild animal pictures have been content to show the beasts, with a story somehow woven about them, and nothing much else counting.

In "Miracles of the Jungle," however, thousands of dollars were expended on sets necessary to get sensational scenes of adventure and drama in their full value, the outdoor locations were selected carefully to show scenes of rare tropical beauty, and many times more feet of film were "shot" than necessary, so that only the very finest, measuring up to the new high standard set for this production, would be retained.

Federated is preparing a country-wide campaign of unusual proportions, to give "Miracles of the Jungle" the publicity and exploitation it deserves. An exhibitors' press book, with a cover in four covers, posters showing some of the scenes from the production, also in colors, and a large and diversified list of accessories, including banners, lobby cards, window cards, heralds and novelties for children, are some of the other exhibitors' aids under way.

One of the features of the exploitation campaign will be the setting up of a sample lobby, completely decorated to get the maximum of attention, with figures or lions and a setting of tropical trees and foliage, as a model for the exhibitors of the country to use when the production is shown in their theatres.

Callahan Film Is Formed

New Comedy Company Leases Airdome at Atlantic City for Studio

THE Callahan Film Company, of Atlantic City, which is headed by Jimmy Callahan, the athletic screen comedian, has been incorporated for $500,000 and has rented the Curtis airport grounds in Atlantic City as a studio.

One of the hangars, dimensions 40 by 50 feet, has been completely equipped as a studio, with a lighting plant which comprises the latest devices for stage and screen effects.

Mr. Callahan will build and paint all his own sets and make his own props. To facilitate this work one of the two hangars on the Curtis field will be utilized for a carpenter shop and paint frame. During the past week Mr. Callahan has been in New York engaging a thoroughly experienced staff of stage carpenters, scene painters, property men and electricians.

Ralph Whiting will be Mr. Callahan's general director, and Edward McReynolds will be his principal assistant. Mr. Callahan's principal support will be two noted leading women, fourteen pretty girls and two well known comedians. The personnel of the Callahan company will be announced later.

Mr. Callahan will make twenty-six two-reel comedies during the coming year. He has four comedies now ready. The first of these will be released about May 16 through Robert W. Priest, president of The Film Market.

Doraldina Feature in Moore's Garden

"The Woman Untamed," Elmer J. McGovern's feature, starring Doraldina, is to open a three-week engagement at Moore's Garden theatre, Washington, D. C., on April 17, after successful engagements throughout Virginia.

In conjunction with the picture Mr. McGovern offers an elaborate prologue-revue. Included in the cast of the prologue-revue is the well known dancer, Signe Paterson.

Plymouth Film Opens in Patterson, N. J.

"Every Woman's Problem," which Plymouth Pictures, Inc., is now distributing on the independent market receives its world premiere this week at the United States Photoplay Theater, Paterson, New Jersey. The picture is booked to run one week and is being heralded by an exceptionally vigorous exploitation campaign originated by Manager Peter Adams with the cooperation of A. W. Sobler, Director of Publicity, for Plymouth.

The initial public presentation of "Every Woman's Problem" will be backed by the active cooperation of Paterson's leading women's societies—the business and professional women's club, the Paterson Women's Club, and the Women's Political Club of Paterson.

Unusual Photography in "Things Men Do"

Soft focus photography plays an important part in securing the excellent photographic effects in "Things Men Do," the feature production which M. B. Schlesinger is offering on the independent market. The unusual shots thus obtained serve as a framework for the characters of the story.

The locale of the story is a sleepy little country village, where trees of every variety and flowers answering every description are to be found in abundance. Scenes showing the rays of the morning sun slanting through the latticework of the trees have ben photographed it is said with rare skill, and furnish marvellous specimens of the art in cinematography.

Five Groups Are Offered

Mt. Olympus Co., New in Field, to Handle 142 Short Subjects

FIVE groups of pictures—in all one hundred and forty-two short subjects ranging from character comedies to negro comedies—is the initial offering of a new organization formed to provide a series of motion picture productions for the States Rights buyer. The newcomer in the field is the Mount Olympus Distributing Corporation, incorporated under the laws of Delaware, and with headquarters in New York City.

The executives in charge of the New York offices of the Mount Olympus company, state that the company is prepared to immediately furnish the entire one hundred and forty-two subjects. Of these, fifty-two will be known as the "Jacquelin Comedies" which are domestic stories similar to those pictured by Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew.

Another group consists of twenty-six "Dizzy Dumbbell" comedies, featuring the sheriff and his deputies from Dizzyville, much on the same order as the Toonerville comedies with the funny official and his aides.

Charlie Conklin is featured in another group of twelve comedies. Mr. Conklin played under Sennett in "Uncle Tom Without a Cabin," "East Lynne with Variations," "Down on the Farm," and many others.

What is said to be a novelty is a new series of pictures called "Darktown Affairs." These are played entirely by colored actors and are said to measure up to the standard maintained by the famous Colored Players recently seen under the management of Mrs. Emilie Bigelow Hapgood. The stories will center around the negro characters woven into song and story by Stephen C. Foster. Among these will be many of the negro tales by Octavus Roy Cohen and Joel Chandler Harris.

Several feature productions will also be made and these will be released under the name "Olympian Productions."

"Liquid Gold" Is Kineto Release

"Liquid Gold" is the next Kineto Review slated for release in the first series now being distributed by the Kineto Company of America through the National Exchanges.

As is apparent from the title, "Liquid Gold" is a story of oil. The locale is in Texas where so much of this liquid gold is found. Not a hint of advertising has been permitted to creep into "Liquid Gold," it is said.

Luporini Bros. Expanding

Negotiations for Amalgamation of Foreign Buyers Are Completed

EXTENSION of the activities of Luporini Bros., the film exporting firm, with offices in New York, which will enable them to purchase foreign rights to American pictures for a large group of territories at a single operation, thus assuring the utmost economy in buying costs, was announced by Ferdinando V. Luporini, the senior member of the company, this week.

The announcement followed the successful conclusion of negotiations, which have been in progress for several months past, looking to the amalgamation of a group of independent foreign buyers, for the purpose of securing the rights in their respective territories to desirable American pictures, under a cooperative arrangement.

Mr. Luporini will act as the purchasing agent for the group in this country, while his brother, Mario, whose headquarters are in the Turin offices of the company, will direct the distribution and marketing activities of the combine abroad.

Luporini Bros., who already have connections in France, Italy, Spain, the Balkan States, Egypt and in Latin American countries, will extend their field of operations still further, affiliating with other film buyers in territories in which they are not fully represented.

Luporini Bros. are now receiving communications from new and unexpected foreign sources seeking to affiliate with them in their buying activities here, it is said. As a result Luporini Bros. will shortly establish other connections, in addition to those already mentioned, in Germany, the Scandinavian countries and elsewhere. It is planned to form all these into a federation of foreign purchasing interests headed by Ferdinando Luporini.

In addition to supplying the foreign market with American pictures, Luporini Bros. are also now organizing a branch department to handle foreign productions for this country. This will be directly under the charge of Mario Luporini, who has under way the establishing of bureaus in the leading film centers in Europe, where screen examinations of the latest foreign productions will be afforded for the purpose of determining the marketing possibilities of foreign films here.

Mr. Ferdinando Luporini will remain on this side of the water, with headquarters at the main offices of the company in New York, making occasional visits to Central and South American countries, as market conditions demand.

New Young Picture Ready

Equity Announces "Straight from Paris" as Star's Latest Feature

EQUITY PICTURES CORPORATION announces that Clara Kimball Young's latest production, "Straight from Paris" is ready for release on the independent field. The story is by Sada Cowan, who is responsible for "Why Change Your Wife" and Miss Young's latest production, "Hush." It is of six reels length and was directed by Harry Garson. In the cast with the star are Thomas Jefferson, Bertram Grassby, William Carleton, Betty Francisco, Girard Alexander and others.

Every background, states Equity, is faithful to the scene portrayed. One of the most accurate scenes, it is explained, is the milliner's shop that plays so prominent a part in the story. No characteristic detail has been omitted. It is expected to surpass even "Hush," the latest Young feature which has been booked for presentation at the Capitol theatre in New York.

"Straight from Paris," it is said, shows Director Garson at his best. No element of appeal is lacking, and old and young will find equal fascination in its story. Two continents are embraced in its field of action and two standards of life are drawn on the broad stage. From workaday milliner a blue-blooded aristocrat, every rung in the social ladder is represented in the motley panorama of human activity.

One of the most effective scenes is a flash-back in the second reel showing a brilliant court scene of the French palace in which the heroine's ancestors pay homage to the King. A minuet is staged with appropriate settings and costumes. Fine photography, it is said, characterizes the entire production. An unusual effect is obtained in the third reel, where the use of double exposure shows Miss Young in two forms within the same scene.

Neal Hart in New Picture

Pinnacle Productions' Star Begins Filming "Black Sheep" at San Diego

WITH thirty persons comprising the party, the Neal Hart company left its studios in Hollywood this week for San Diego, Cal., where the initial scenes to the star's latest story, "Black Sheep," will be filmed under the direction of Paul Hurst and Louis Chaudet.

Included in the party is W. C. Tuttle, author of "Baa, Baa Black Sheep," which appeared in the January issue of the Short Story Magazine and from which Hart's newest Pinnacle production has been adapted.

Mr. Tuttle, whose home is in Spokane, Wash., journeyed to California recently to be on the set with the directors at the studios and on location where he might submit any suggestion that would serve to insure the correctness of the story in each and every detail. The continuity for "Black Sheep" was prepared by Mr. Tuttle in collaboration with Directors Hurst and Chaudet.

"Black Sheep" is laid in Wind River County, Wyoming, and deals with the days of western revolution. The plot centers mainly around the invasion of sheep herders into the cattle country.

Directors Hurst and Chaudet have assembled a noteworthy cast, including Audrey Chapman, who played the leading feminine role in Hart's previous picture, "God's Gold," James McLaughlin, Al Kaufman, Ben Corbatt, Charles Thurston, Mrs. Frona Hale, Ted Brooks, Walter Patterson and others.

"Black Sheep" is announced as the first of the Neal Hart pictures to be released on the state rights market by Pinnacle Productions, Inc., Chicago.

New Billy West Comedy to be Released

"Why Marry," the fifth of a series of Billy West comedies offered on the state right market by Jean Film Sales Co., is now ready for release. The subject is of two-reel length and follows "Sweethearts," "Service Stripes," "He's in Again" and "The Conquering Hero."

In the center is A. J. Sardino, new head of the Dooley Exchanges of Upper New York. On the left is J. M. Sitterly, who remains in charge of the Buffalo Exchange of the company, and on the right is Ben Fitzer, whose product will be distributed by the Dooley Exchanges

To Discuss Screen Music

Kineto to Hold Meeting April 22 to Discuss Short Subject Music

IN connection with New York's Music Week, April 17 to 24, there will be a special meeting for exhibitors and motion picture men interested in the musical presentation of motion pictures at the Urban Projection theatre at the offices of the Kineto Company of America. The date of the meeting is Friday, April 22 at 10.30 A. M.

Recently, Mr. Urban instituted an innovation in preparing exhibitors aids for short subject by preparing musical indications for his Kineto Reviews.

Charles D. Isaacson, of the New York Globe and Motion Picture News, has been preparing the musical phases for the Kineto Reviews. He has a wide reputation as the man who has done a great deal to popularize good music. His New York Globe concerts are famous and through his work on the Kineto Reviews he has helped to create a great deal of added interest in short subjects generally.

Mr. Isaacson will be present at the Kineto meeting on April 22 and will address the gathering on the possibilities of featuring with music short subjects like the Kineto Reviews. His address will be illustrated with a program of Kineto Reviews.

All exhibitors and men and women who are interested in music and the motion picture are cordially invited by Mr. Urban to be present at the Kineto showing on April 22 in connection with New York's music week.

First Hallroom Comedy Ready for Federated

FEDERATED FILM EXCHANGES, INC., have received from the Coast "False Roomers," the first of the Hallroom Boys Comedies which are to be released under the Federated banner. Prints of this new two-reel comedy were received by Federated this week from Harry Cohn, the producer, complete and ready for release, edited and furnished with special art titles.

Those who have seen this comedy in New York, say that the producers have lived up to their promise to produce something new in the comedy line.

Sid Smith does some excellent character as well as comedy work as Percy and Herman C. Raymaker directed the production.

Easily the most ambitious and finest picture ever made by Mr. Lytell. It ran for five years as a play in England and America and will duplicate this success on the screen.

Under this arrangement "The Black Panther's Cub" will have an early Broadway showing.

Chas. Stark Completes Ten Single Reelers

Chas. F. Stark announces the completion of a series of ten single reel motion pictures, shortly to be released. The titles were written by a well known writer of humorous stories, and the star is well known to all theatre goers.

Ten of the most beautiful locations in the United States were selected, such as Yellowstone National Park, Yosemite Valley, Pike's Peak, etc., a different one for each reel. The main title will be announced in the near future, with a secondary main title reading "A traveling comedy in ten jumps.

Mr. Stark believes he is presenting to the exhibitors a brand new idea in short reel subjects, which combines comedy, scenic value, and thrills a plenty. Definite releasing particulars will be announced in the immediate future.

New Reelcraft Comedy is "Here He Is"

"Here He Is," the first two-reel production featuring the comedian "Tweedy," has been completed and is now receiving the finishing touches preparatory to its distribution by the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation.

"Tweedy" has been given a supporting cast of well known players such as Dorothy Allen, Sam Ryan, Tammany Young, Billy Moran and nearly a hundred others.

Reelcraft will announce the first release date shortly.

"Bilt-Rite" Equipment Co. in New Plant

Consolidated Portrait and Frame Company, of Chicago, moved into its big new offices and factory located at 211-227 North Green street this week.

The old Consolidated plant was wrecked by a fire and no time has been lost in getting settled in the new home and starting production of Bilt-Rite display equipment. The new location permits of a maximum centralization of production activities.

Famous Stars Seen in "Screen Snapshots"

In issue Number 24 of Screen Snapshots, the single reel subject produced by Harry Cohn and Louis Lewyn, contains views of Charlie Chaplin and Douglas Fairbanks aiding in a recruiting drive of the United States Marine Corps. It also shows scenes from the Movie Ball held recently at the Hotel Astor in New York.

Ostriche Film on Market

Forward Film Announces Release of Initial Salient Production

JOSEPH SAMETH, president of Forward Film Distributors, Inc., of New York, announces that "The Shadow" featuring Muriel Ostriche, and produced by Salient Films, Inc., is ready for distribution.

By taking over the entire output of the Salient Producing Unit, for the Forward Film Distributors, Inc., Mr. Sameth has put over a financial deal considered to be one of the largest consummated in the independent market in many months.

"When I decided to head a releasing organization," said Mr. Sameth, "I promised the State Right field only those pictures with an assured box office value and merit of attraction. I can gladly state that after viewing "The Shadow," I decided that Muriel Ostriche was a big bet, and that the product directed by J. Charles Davis, 2nd, was in keeping with my plans.

"The Shadow" is bound to go over big. It has for its star a girl who has made good; it is well directed and the story, which is from the pen of the director, Mr. Davis, is one startling episode after the other. It is lavishly built, and I shall give it the proper advertising and exploitation.

"Several weeks ago I emphatically stated that the talk of hard times in the industry was the thought of the fly-by-night man. The Salient-Forward Film Distributors, Inc., is positive proof of my arguments. I am certain that the coming year shall see the film game conducted in a real honest to goodness dollars and cents, as against the old game of motion picture fiction."

Assisting Mr. Davis in the production of "The Shadow" was Mr. Brown, who has a list of successes to his film trade mark. Work on the second Salient feature starring Miss Ostriche will be started this week.

Gibson Starred in Series

Associated Photo-Plays to Have Pictures; "Wolverine" Is Ready

VICTOR B. FISHER, general manager of Associated Photo-Plays, Inc., of New York, left for Los Angeles on Wednesday of this week to confer with officials of Spencer productions, Inc., on the second Helen Gibson feature. "The Wolverine," the first of the series of ten features starring Miss Gibson, is en route for the Coast and has been approved by Spencer Production officials and Director William Bertram.

"Now that we have formulated plans for the release of "The Wolverine," said Mr. Fisher, "we must stop on the second of the series starring Helen Gibson. I believe the time has arrived when the State Right market must lead the field, and to do this we must give value for value received.

"The Gibson series will be made with no fixed sum of money given the director. We demand the best for this star, and when we must spend money to gain a point, we shall do it but at all times shall we try to keep down the cost of production so that the exhibitor can secure features of real merit at the lowest prices.

"I shall have a lengthy interview with the men who are making the Helen Gibson series, and we shall do everything within our power to keep our promise to release only the best. It is the intention of Associated Photo-Plays, Inc., to make no promises that we are not sure can be kept but to the letter and in spirit."

"The Wolverine" is from the book "The Ranch At the Wolverine," by B. M. Bower. Surrounding Miss Gibson in this initial production is a cast headed by Jack Connolly and other well-known western players.

Third Cuneo Is Under Way

"Blue Blazes" Is Working Title of Capital Star's New Picture

LESTER CUNEO'S third production for Capital is under way at the Russell-Greiver-Russell studio according to word received from Bernard Russell, production manager of this concern. Since its opening some weeks ago, the Russell-Greiver-Russell studio in Hollywood has been working twenty-four hours a day in preparation for the filming of this third Cuneo production.

Henry McCarty and Leo Meehan, the authors, are said to have turned out a typical Cuneo story, in "Blue Blazes" which is the working title of the production. It was this pair of authors who furnished the script for "The Ranger and the Law," Cuneo's last picture.

Another artist whose work was seen in the last Cuneo picture, Ferdinand Pinney Earle, has been engaged to illuminate the titles in the entire Cuneo series.

Supporting Cuneo is Fanny Midgely, identified with the Laskey productions for some years. Others in the picture are Francelia Billington, and Bert Sprotte, who has just completed work with Tom Mix.

Arrow Will Have Four Curwood Pictures

W. E. SHALLENBERGER, president of Arrow Film Corp., announces that his company has signed a contract with the Pine Tree Pictures, Inc., to handle the distribution on the independent market of four James Oliver Curwood stories now being filmed in the Maine Woods. The working title of the first picture is "The Heart of the Northlands."

The Pine Tree Pictures is a Maine corporation. The productions are being directed by Charles M. Seay. Included in the cast are Louis Prussing, Warner Richmond, Richard Neil, and William Peavey.

American Legion Picture Is Completed

The American Legion picture "Lest We Forget" has been completed by Storey Pictures, Inc., A. D. V. Storey, president; and turned over to the National publicity department of the American Legion.

The cast of "Lest We Forget" includes Margaret Sousa as the American Girl; Kenneth Carson, Jack Costello, Maybelle Nash Evalyn Kent, Margaret Wagner, Lieut. Chace Daughney and Lou Conway.

Exchanges Interested in "Things Men Do"

M. B. Schlesinger, who is distributing the feature, "Things Men Do," on the independent market, states that an unusual amount of interest has been aroused among exchangemen who have been attracted by the remarkable title.

"Things Men Do" was acquired by Mr. Schlesinger for world distribution only a few weeks ago, and since the announcement of his acquisition he has been in constant receipt of inquiries from state right buyers regarding territorial distribution. Mr. Schlesinger states that several big sales are now in their final stages of completion.

Woody, of Independent, Back from Coast

Nate A. Woody, treasurer of the Independent Films Association, left Los Angeles last week for Chicago after a ten-day visit with Eddy Eckels and Hugh Woody, his father, who is general manager of the Pinnacle Productions, Inc., which organization is starring Neal Hart.

New Arrow Serial for May Release

Arrow Film Corp. announces that Ann Little's new serial, "The Blue Fox," is now ready and will be released in the first week of May. The serial was produced by Ben Wilson, directed by Duke Worne and written by Joe Brandt and Hope Loring.

"Buried Treasure" Said to Prove Popular

Cosmopolitan Productions announces that "Buried Treasure," starring Marion Davies, is proving a popular attraction. The theme of reincarnation found in the picture and the wide-spread interest in psychic phenomena are held to be largely responsible for the reported success of the picture. The screen version was adapted by George D. Baker from the story in Hearst's Magazine written by F. Britten Austen. Mr. Baker also directed. The elaborate settings for the pirate scenes and Spanish scenes were designed by Joseph Urban. The cast includes Norman Kerry, Anders Randolf, Edith Shayne, John Charles, Earl Schenck, and Thomas Findlay.

Selig Starts Work on Educational Release

News from the Coast is that work has been started at the Selig studios on the first of "the de luxe dramas in two reels," which are to be released through Educational Exchanges. According to the announcement, all of these pictures will be made from the books of well-known modern authors. First of these stories is from a novel by James Oliver Curwood. The cast will include Lewis Stone, William Desmond, Wallace Beery and a number of others. Bert Bracken is directing the productions.

Fox's Western Stars in New Releases

One of the thrills described by William Fox in Tom Mix's latest release, "Hands Off," is the rescue of a child by the cowboy star from the hoofs of a herd of horses in stampede. Another production with Western atmosphere to be released under the Fox banner is "Get Your Man," in which Buck Jones will be featured. This picture will be released in May. George William Hill directed.

"Four Horsemen" Scoring

Moved to Astor, New York, April 10; Acclaimed at Chicago Opening

METRO makes two important announcements in connection with the showing of its super-production, "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse." On April 10th, the big picture opened at the Astor theatre, New York, having closed a month's record-breaking run at the Lyric in the same city. On March 26th, "The Four Horsemen" opened at the La Salle theatre, Chicago. Metro reports that the Chicago premiere was accorded a most unusual reception by both the public and the press and predicts that the Chicago showing will rival the record for "instantaneous popularity and unprecedented attendance" established by the picture in New York City.

The following excerpts from the Chicago dailies are submitted by Metro as indicative of the favorable reception given the picture. Mae Tinee of the Chicago Tribune writes in part:

"You will admit, when you have seen 'The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse,' that Rex Ingram, a young man and little heard from, deserves to be bowed into the front rank of directors. He has made a splendid picture."

The reviewer of the Chicago Herald writes in part:

"At detail Ingram is superb; at character creation he is all for swift, almost cynic flashes. Never does he seek to storm your sentiments as does Griffith. He relies upon the slow but sure mounting of suspense on the staircase of thrilling incident, each step small in itself, but part of a structure. A great picture, doing the symbolic thing of the Four Horsemen just enough and not too much, following the story with unbelievable fidelity, fading out in perfect one with the story, holding to Ibanez to the end."

"Fanny Herself" Is Started

Preliminary Arrangements Took 16 Weeks; Mabel Julienne Scott Leads

PRODUCTION work has been started on "Fanny Herself" at Universal City. The picture is based on Edna Ferber's novel of the same title. Sixteen weeks were spent on the preliminaries for production, states Universal. During these arrangements, William Fildew, cameraman, was sent to New York City by Tod Browning, who is directing the picture, to "shoot" scenes of the metropolis's financial district and Broadway so as to preserve the atmosphere in which Edna Ferber's story is developed.

A large number of candidates for the leading feminine role were subjected to tests during the sixteen weeks' preparatory period, according to Universal, and the final choice made by Messrs. Browning, Laemmle and Cochrane fell on Mabel Julienne Scott. Miss Scott has already done creditable work in Rex Beach's picture, "The Barrier," and also in "The Sea Wolf," "Behold My Wife," "Don't Neglect Your Wife," and "The Concert." Though the names of the supporting cast have not been disclosed by Universal in its statement concerning "Fanny Herself," the announcement is made that a strong aggregation of players will surround Miss Scott in the production.

The sets reproducing the required backgrounds of New York City have been built, and the company is prepared to show some fast work in completing the picture, says Universal.

"Caligari" Scores at Capitol, New York

GOLDWYN announces "The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari" for immediate national release to first-runs. The Goldwyn home office reports that the showing of the impressionistic picture at the Capitol, New York, during the last week proved a great success. Here is how the Goldwyn headquarters describes the week's run the picture had at the Capitol, beginning Sunday, April 3.

"Starting with a Sunday attendance of 20,284, the picture continued to draw great crowds and would have been held over for another week had not a previous booking interfered. The Monday paid admittances, 9,732, broke all Monday records. The Tuesday figures were 10,011; Wednesday, 10,314; Thursday, 11,021. Figures for the last two days of the week have not been made public, but if the average of the first four days was maintained, all Capitol records must have been bettered."

Karger Unit Is Now at Work on West Coast

Maxwell Karger; Joseph Strauss, production manager; Arthur Martinelli, cameraman; Bert Lytell and members of his company are now busily engaged in Metro's Hollywood studios on Lytell's new starring vehicle, "The Man Who." Virginia Valli has an important part in the new production. The picture is based on a story by Lloyd Osborne. Though New York serves as the background for the Osborne story, the final scenes had to be taken in California.

After concluding work on "The Man Who," Mr. Karger and Mr. Lytell will start on "A Trip to Paradise," written by Franz Molnar and adapted by June Mathis.

Week Ending April 19 Proves Biggest Yet

A. W. Smith, Jr., assistant sales manager of the Hodkinson Corporation, reports that the week ending April 9th was the largest week in the history of the company, even exceeding the record of Hodkinson Month, November, 1920, both in cash collections and in new business signed up. Mr. Smith attributes this to the growing prestige of the Hodkinson releases among exhibitors throughout the country.

Carmel Myers in "The Scarlet Shawl"

"The Scarlet Shawl" has been put into production at Universal City. Carmel Myers is the star, and Jack Conway is directing. The story was written by Johnston McCully. The cast includes William E. Lawrence, Jean Acker, George Periolat, P. J. Lockney, J. J. Lance, Harvey Clark and Ed Brady.

Jackie Coogan in New York

The "Kid" to Stay in East Until "Peck's Bad Boy" Opens on B'way

JACKIE COOGAN, best known as "The Kid," arrived in New York City on last Saturday and will remain in the East until after the initial presentation of "Peck's Bad Boy," in which Jackie plays the title role. Preparations are now going forward for the premiere of the new Jackie Coogan vehicle on Broadway this month, according to advices from Jackie's representative, Harry D. Wilson.

Judging from preparations being made, the picture will make its initial appearance in New York City in conjunction with an elaborate presentation. S. Barrett McCormick, managing director of the Kinema and the Ambassador, Los Angeles, is also in New York and will personally supervise the added presentation to "Peck's Bad Boy," it is announced. Rene Williams, musical director of the Kinema and the Ambassador, is said to have prepared a special music score for the picture.

Since his arrival in New York, Jackie has been to the circus and to a ball game in Brooklyn. When he appeared at the Madison Square Garden on Monday night and when he attended the ball game on Sunday, he was the recipient of great attention from the spectators. Chicago also showered him with considerable notice when he stopped off there en route for New York. John Coogan, Sr., is in charge of Jackie on his trip East.

Pathe Plans More Serials

Two Just Finished Await Release While Two More Are Just Started

ELMER PEARSON, director of exchanges for Pathe, following his recently completed survey of the United States, announced that "serials constitute the backbone of several programs per week at 60 per cent of America's theatres." An increased serial production—schedule to meet this demand has been decided upon by President Paul Brunet, according to a statement just issued from the Pathe headquarters.

Within a year, according to Pathe, its catalogue of available continuous photoplays will contain four new products of this type of motion-picture entertainment. Two serials recently completed but not as yet released are "The Sky Ranger," co-starring George B. Seitz and June Caprice, and "The Yellow Arm," in which Warner Oland, Juanita Hansen, Marguerite Courtot and William Bailey play the principal roles. In "The Sky Ranger," Harry Semels and Peggy Shanor are seen in the supporting cast.

Ruth Roland has just started work on a new chapter-picture, temporarily titled "The Golden Canyon." The leading male role is played by Earl Metcalf. A feature of the new production will be the scenes of the Grand Canyon of Colorado in which many of the important phases of the story are laid. Charles Hutchison has also started work on a new serial, tentatively called "One Chance in a Million." Many of the important scenes are to be taken in and about the Au Sable Chasm. Warner Oland and Harry Semels are to appear in "heavy" roles. Lucy Fox has been cast opposite Mr. Hutchison, while Ann Hastings will also be seen in an important part. Hazardous "stunts" are to be undertaken by Mr. Hutchison in his new role, according to Pathe.

Realart Announces Releas

"Sheltered Daughters," Starring Justine Johnstone, on Schedule

"SHELTERED Daughters," Realart's latest Justine Johnstone picture, is the latest Star Franchise production to be announced for release. Other pictures released this month are "The Magic Cup," with Constance Binney and "The House That Jazz Built," a Wanda Hawley production. The story of "Sheltered Daughters" was written by George Bronson-Howard.

All of the action takes place in New York City, and in consequence many familiar places are shown in the picture. The Joan of Arc statue on Riverside Drive, with the Hudson river and the Palisades in the background, forms one of the locales. Another landmark is the Pennsylvania Terminal.

Another feature in the production is declared to be the style show. This is shown when Jennie Dark, the heroine, goes to the shop of a Fifth avenue modiste and is persuaded to try on some of the lat creations from Paris for the bene of a fastidious customer.

A dozen mannikins were used these scenes, according to Reala and the costumes said to be t latest in the Parisian mode. we secured by Realart from a numb of leading French costumers w provided advance models for t fashion show.

To Celebrate Eminent Authors' Anniversary

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation is preparing to celebrate the second anniversary of the founding of the Eminent Authors Pictures Corporation, organized by Samuel Goldwyn and Rex Beach in the Spring of 1919. The original membership of the Eminent Authors combine remains intact. A number of the authors are spending most of their time at the Goldwyn studios in Culver City, Calif., cooperating with directors in actual production work.

Following is a list of the pictures contributed by the Eminent Authors during the past two seasons:

Rex Beach, president of Eminent Authors,—"The Silver Horde," "Going Some," "North Wind's Malice;" Gertrude Atherton,—"Out of the Storm," "Don't Neglect Your Wife;" Rupert Hughes,—"The Cup of Fury," "Scratch My Back," "Dangerous Curve Ahead," "The Old Nest;" Basil King,—"The Street Called Straight," "Earthbound;" Gouverneur Morris,—"The Penalty," "A Tale of Two Worlds," "Ace of Hearts;" Mary Roberts Rinehart,—"Dangerous Days," "It's a Great Life," "The Glorious Fool;" Leroy Scott,—"Partners of the Night," and two pictures as yet unnamed.

Scotch Writer Engaged on Realart Staff

The latest addition to the editorial staff of Realart's West Coast studios is Ewart Adamson, a prominent Scotch newspaper writer and cartoonist, who will prepare continuities for Mary Miles Minter, Wanda Hawley, and Bebe Daniels productions.

Vitagraph Companies Busy

Studios in East and West Maintaining a "Mid-Season Pace"

THE Vitagraph producing units at the Hollywood, Cal., and Brooklyn, N. Y., studios are reported to be going ahead with production work at "a mid-season pace." The new Alice Joyce production in the East is based on Charles Caldwell Dobie's novel, "The Blood Red Dawn." Edward Jose has been assigned to direct Miss Joyce in her new production. The cast is now being assembled, and actual production work will be started in about a week's time. Miss Joyce's last picture, "Her Lord and Master," is now awaiting release.

Corinne Griffith's new vehicle is said to be an adaptation of a successful stage play, the name of which has not been divulged by the Vitagraph organization. Webster Griffith will direct Miss Griffith in her new production. "Closed Doors" is the title of the new Alice Calhoun picture, which is based on a story written especially for Miss Calhoun by Harry Dittmar. G. V. Seyffertitz will be in charge of the new production. Miss Calhoun completed "The Charming Deceiver" about three weeks ago.

At the West Coast studios, William Duncan has started a seven-reel feature production, entitled "The Princess of the Desert Dream." It is an adaptation by Thomas Dixon, Jr., of a novelette of the same title by Ralph Cummings. Another former serial star who has entered the feature production field is Antonio Moreno. His success as the star of the feature, "Three Sevens," makes it advisable, according to Vitagraph officials, to continue him in the feature pictures. The cast for his next venture is now being assembled.

George Randolph Chester is making progress on his new screen production for Vitagraph, "The Son of Wallingford." The cast includes Tom Gallery, Wilfrid North, and George Webb. Another production, now in its preliminary stages, is "Flower of the North" by James Oliver Curwood. David Smith will direct. Earle Williams is completing "The Silver Car," and Joe Ryan is on the final scenes of the fifteenth and final chapter of "The Purple Riders."

Big Ascher House Opens with Goldwyn Film

A Goldwyn photoplay, Rupert Hughes' "Hold Your Horses," made from his popular Saturday Evening Post story of "Canavan," was selected by the Ascher Bros. of Chicago, as the opening attraction for their newest theatre, the Capitol, in Cincinnati. The picture is reported to have done unusually big business throughout the entire week.

"The Wild Goose" Has a Timely Theme

Declared by Cosmopolitan to be particularly timely because of the discussion regarding the rights of a child, now appearing in the daily press, is the release in the near future of "The Wild Goose." Directed by Albert Capellani, "The Wild Goose" is a screen version of Gouverneur Morris's novel that appeared in Cosmopolitan Magazine. The responsibility of a man and a woman to the child they bring into the world is the keynote of "The Wild Goose."

The part of the child is played by Rita Rogan, Holmes E. Herbert, Mary McLaren and Norman Kerry play the leading roles. Dorothy

"Four Horsemen" Wins Pulpit Tribute

The Rt. Rev. William MacCormack, dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, Los Angeles, paid special tribute to Metro's "Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" during the first of his Holy Week sermons, according to a statement from the Metro headquarters in New York. He had viewed the picture at the Mission theatre presentation in Los Angeles. After dwelling at length on the lessons to be derived from the picture, Dean MacCormack concluded as follows, according to Metro:

"I want every man and woman in my congregation to go to see this picture. All I ask is that you wait until the conclusion of Holy Week services."

ROBERT EDGAR LONG

ROBERT EDGAR LONG, for three years General Press Representative for D. W. GRIFFITH, producer of "The Birth of a Nation," "Hearts of the World," "Broken Blossoms," "Way Down East," and other super motion Pictures, has resigned from his association with Mr. Griffith and is now in business for himself.

Mr. Long will act as personal representative and counsel in Advertising, Exploitation and Publicity for Producers, Directors and Artists of the Stage and Screen, Headquarters have been established in Suite 605 Fitzgerald Building, 1482 Broadway, New York City. Telephone, Bryant 6380.

Paramount Releases for April 10th

THE productions released by Paramount on April 10th are "The Witching Hour," a William D. Taylor production, featuring Elliott Dexter, and "Buried Treasure," starring Marion Davies. "The Witching Hour" is a screen version of the Augustus Thomas stage play of the same title. Paramount officials declare that the picture will eclipse the success made by the drama during its Broadway stage career. The cast includes, besides Mr. Dexter, Winter Hall, Ruth Renick, Robert Cain, Edward Sutherland, Mary Alden, Fred Turner, Genevieve Blinn, Charles West, L. M. Wells, Clarence Geldart and Jim Blackwell.

"Buried Treasure" is a Cosmopolitan production which contains lavish settings and an unusual and interesting plot. The picture was produced at a cost approximating $250,000, according to a statement from the Paramount headquarters. Marion Davies plays a double role in this picture. In the supporting cast are Norman Kerry, Anders Randolf, Edith Shayne, Earl Schenck, John Charles, and Thomas Findlay. George D. Baker directed "Buried Treasure."

"Bill and Bob" Series Please Dan Beard

Dan Beard, painter, illustrator and National Scout Commissioner, recently viewed three pictures of "The Adventures of Bob and Bill" series being released by Pathe. The series presents two boy scouts, William and Robert Bradbury, in the role of trappers. In a letter to Pathe headquarters, "Chief" Beard wrote in part as follows:

"I want to thank you for your courtesy in showing me three of the pictures in the movie series of 'The Adventures of Bill and Bob.'

"I certainly believe that they have a value for the entertainment of the general public. The ones you exhibited to me breathe of the big outdoors and a clean and wholesome life, not devoid of thrills."

Pathe officials report a heavy demand for issues of the series by first-run houses all over the country, following their favorable reception at the Strand Theatres in New York and Brooklyn.

Mary Pickford Vehicle Being Cut and Titled

"Through the Back Door," Mary Pickford's next United Artists release, is now in its final stage of preparation, according to word received by Hiram Abrams from Bennie Zeidman, production manager for Mary Pickford. All scenes have been taken, and the work of cutting and titling the picture is now in progress. Gerald Duffy has been assigned the task of writing the titles.

First Nat'l Week in Southwest

"FIRST NATIONAL WEEK" in Southern California and Arizona is declared by the home-office to have gone over with unusual success. 290 theatres in Southern California and Arizona played First National attractions during the week from March 27th to April 3rd, it is stated, and sixty-seven First National attractions appeared on the screens of these theatres during the week.

"The Big Five" were represented by "The Kid," Charles Chaplin's 'six reels of joy,' and "Passion," with Pola Negri. These two led the list in the number of bookings. In third place, "Marshall Neilan's 'Dinty,' James Oliver Curwood's "Nomads of the North," Charles Ray's "Nineteen and Phyllis" and Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven in "Twin Beds," ran neck and neck. Other attractions which are said to have rolled up an impressive number of bookings were Katherine MacDonald in "My Lady's Latchkey," Constance Talmadge in "Dangerous Business," Mack Sennett's "Married Life" and "Love, Honor and Behave," King Vidor's 'Jack-Knife Man," Whitman Bennett's "The Truth About Husbands" and Louis B. Mayer's "The Woman in His House."

It is also announced by the home-office that a number of the First National releases of other years came in for their share of presentations. Among these 'veterans' may be mentioned "The River's End," Marshall Neilan's northwest production, Anita Stewart in "Virtuous Wives," Charles Chaplin's "A Dog's Life," Norma Talmadge in "A Daughter of Two Worlds," "In Old Kentucky" with Anita Stewart, and the Curwood production, "Back to God's Country."

In addition to the sixty-seven feature attractions presented, several of Fontaine Fox's "Toonerville Trolley" series of comedies were in demand.

A noteworthy aftermath to the week was the fact that the ten or twelve days following showed a list of overflow bookings from the week, amounting to a total of nearly one hundred and fifty theatres, declares a statement from the First National headquarters in New York.

Three Los Angeles theatres joined in celebrating the First National holiday week. The Ambassador presented the world premiere of Marguerite Clark's "Scrambled Wifes." The Kinema theatre brought to a close its engagement of Charles Chaplin's "The Kid." The Alhambra theatre presented Sidney Franklin's "Unseen Forces." The campaign throughout the territory for First National week included a series of slides which were sent gratis to all exhibitors who had made bookings for the week. On the opening day of First National Week, a full page ad was carried in the Los Angeles Examiner. This ad listed the entire collection of bookings, showing where each picture might be seen during the First National week.

Assisting Manager Dave Bershon in his campaign-work, were Bill Knotts, assistant manager, Charles A. McVicker, Harry Cohen and E. C. Drane.

"Proxies" Presents Strong Moral

HAVING presented strong moral lessons in "Humoresque," "The Inside of the Cup," "Straight is the Way" and other of its pictures, Cosmopolitan Productions announce that in "Proxies" it has again given the public food for much discussion. "Proxies," directed by George D. Baker from a scenario of his own writing, dwells upon the theme that once given a chance many a man, who has strayed from the straight and narrow path, will "play the game straight." It portrays the efforts of a man and a girl to redeem themselves from their evil past and to serve uprightly those whom they love and respect.

The picture opened at the Rivoli Theatre, New York, on April 10th. A serialization of the screen adaptation of Frank R. Adams's story appeared in the New York Evening Journal, and this, with the interest created among those who read Mr. Adams's story in the Cosmopolitan Magazine, drew crowds to the Broadway house.

Peter, the crook, played by Norman Kerry, is a handsome and original butler in the home of Mr. Darley, president of the Darley Tool Company. Clare Conway (Zena Keefe), his confederate in crime and companion in honesty, is the maid in the same household. When Mr. Darley learns that Peter formerly served a penitentiary sentence, he does not dismiss him, but decides to give him a chance in spite of his past. Mr. Darley's financial standing is threatened by the possession of a proxy for the majority of the stock in his company, which is in the hands of Stover, a former warden of the prison where Peter served a term, and a man who is anxious to climb into society and marry Darley's daughter. He uses his proxy to intimidate Darley and force the marriage with his daughter. Peter overhears the controversy, and decides to save Darley with the aid of Clare. How he does it forms the climax of a fast-moving series of events.

Goldwyn Coast Companies Busy

MARY ROBERTS RINEhart's first original scenario, "The Glorious Fool," went into production at the Goldwyn studios on the Coast last week under the direction of E. Mason Hopper. Helene Chadwick, who was slated to play opposite Tom Moore in Charles Kenyon's original, "Beating the Game," has been switched to the Rinehart photoplay to act the feminine lead. Richard Dix has the part of the "glorious fool." Dix and Miss Chadwick played together in Rupert Hughes' first screen original, "Dangerous Curve Ahead!", not yet released. Others in the cast are Clarissa Selwynne, Kate Lester, Otto Hoffman, John Lince and Theodore von Eltz.

Hazel Daly has been selected to play opposite Tom Moore in the Kenyon photoplay, "Beating the Game," in place of Miss Chadwick. Others in the cast are DeWitt C. Jennings, Dick Rosson, Nick Cogley, Tom Ricketts and Lydia Knott. Victor Schertzinger is directing.

Will Rogers, his director, Clarence Badger, and several members of the "Doubling for Romeo" cast, left on Wednesday of last week for Casa Grande, Arizona, to take the final scenes for that Elmer L. Rice original. They will be gone about a week.

Director Frank Lloyd, and the company making "The Grim Comedian," by Rita Weiman, have been taking scenes in the Morosco theatre, Los Angeles.

Reginald Barker is preparing to direct "Who Shall Judge?", a new Gouverneur Morris original, with continuity by Ruth Wightman. He is also supervising the cutting of "The Old Nest," from Rupert Hughes' novel. Wallace Worsley is making progress on 'Ace of Hearts," another Gouverneur Morris story.

Vice President Lehr has appointed J. J. Cohn production manager to succeed James Johnson who resigned. Mr. Cohn was formerly business manager and has been with the firm four years.

Newcomer Gets Important "Torchy" Role

"Torchy" comedies have already been responsible for popularizing on the screen such young women as Jacqueline Logan, Dorothy Leeds and Dorothy Mackaill. Now another young lady is scheduled to take a prominent part in support of Johnny Hines, the star of the Educational "Torchy" releases. Her name is Helen O'Neil. Miss O'Neil was given a "bit" in "Torchy's Promotion," and her good work attracted the attention of President C. C. Burr of Master Films, which produces the "Torchy" comedies. Result: she has been given an important part in "Torchy's Frame-Up," which is now being filmed.

Pathe Announces April 24th Releases

PATHE headquarters announces the following releases for April 24:

"The Double Game," the seventh episode of "The Avenging Arrow," starring Ruth Roland, presents the serial star in some new hazardous and thrilling feats, according to Pathe. "The House in the Canyon," the fourteenth episode of "Double Adventure," starring Charles Hutchison, gives the leading man new opportunities for showing daring and physical prowess, declares Pathe.

"Bubbling Over" is the title of the new Rolin comedy, featuring "Snub" Pollard. Pathe reports there are amusing situations in plenty in this new release in which Pollard has the role of a henpecked husband.

"The Law of the Woods" features Edgar Jones and Edna May in settings of the Northern Woods, the home of the lumberman. It is a dramatic Holman Day offering. Interesting views of the fisherman's sport, taken by Eltinge F. Warner, are the features of "Fins and Fun," heading the subjects in Pathe Review No. 100.

These are only a few of the interesting scenes, which are too numerous to mention, in the forthcoming releases for April 24th, says Pathe.

"The Heart of Maryland"

Tom Terriss Production of Famous Stage Play Released by Vitagraph Makes Fine Picture

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

The success achieved by David Belasco's "The Heart of Maryland" is one of the cherished traditions of the stage. In giving the screen a version of the drama Tom Terriss has set an example to moving pictures which they would do well to follow. He has preserved the dramatic action of the original. The story moves forward at just the right tempo to keep the interest unbroken. Every incident is told by action, and the scenario writer has followed the original construction as closely as the screen would permit. Given a plot that throbs with life and uses the Civil War merely as a background to a love story that is the center and the inspiration of every foot of film, scenario writer and director have been content to abide by these desirable conditions and have wasted no time on symbolic distraction which has no place in a drama that has sufficient vitality to set its own pace.

"The Heart of Maryland" is entertainment purely. The conflict of human wills is never absent and there is never a false note in the character drawing and the proper unfolding of the plot. The cast, lead by Catherine Calvert, is thoroughly capable, and the mechanical details of the production are right at all times. There is a red blooded "kick" to this picture which forces the closest attention from every spectator Give us more like it!

Tourneur Unit in New York

To Film Scenes of Fifth Ave. for Ass'd Producers' "Bright Lights"

CLARENCE L. BROWN, accompanied by Doris May, Kathleen Kirkman, Mildred Manning and Michael Dart, recently arrived in New York City to take the final scenes for "The Foolish Matrons," in which Hobart Bosworth is the featured player. As all the scenes in which Bosworth is to appear have been taken on the Coast, he has remained in Los Angeles. "The Foolish Matrons," written by Donn Byrne, is scheduled for release by Associated Producers under the title of "Bright Lights." Maurice Tourneur and Clarence L. Brown are co-directing the picture. Wyndham Gitten did the adaptation, and the camera-work is under the supervision of Charles J. Van Enger, assisted by Kenneth G. McClain.

The company made the trip to New York for the purpose of "shooting" scenes along Fifth avenue, where the smart shops, busses and stylishly gowned society people will furnish the atmosphere required for the production. Besides the members of the cast mentioned previously, the following will also appear in the supporting line-up: Charles Meredith, Wallace MacDonald, Margaret McQuade, Betty Schade, Frankie Lee, John Henry, Jr., and "Teddy," the canine screen player.

The story of "Bright Lights" is developed against the background of modern social life. Gorgeous settings and unique gowns are declared to be a feature or the production.

"Quick Return to Normal"

Is Opinion of P. N. Brinch, Who Has Been Visiting Hodkinson Managers

P. N. BRINCH, general sales-manager of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, who has just returned to the Hodkinson home-office after visiting supervisors and branch-managers of the organization, declares "conditions are improving at such a rate as to indicate an almost immediate return to normalcy." He states that the return of thousands to work in the manufacturing districts of the country is being favorably reflected in the increased attendance at motion-picture houses previously hit by the industrial depression.

A growing prestige for the Hodkinson releases is also affirmed by the general sales-manager. "The name Hodkinson has always stood for quality and integrity," said Mr. Brinch, "and the exhibitors have come to respect the Hodkinson policies and its energetic, clean-cut selling organization. And above all, they realize that the type of pictures which the Hodkinson Organization is giving them invariably brings big money into the box office."

Mr. Brinch is declared to have extensive plans for the development of the Hodkinson field staff and expects to make material increases in the selling force in the very near future in order to insure the proper handling of the many massive feature productions scheduled for release under the Hodkinson Banner during the current year.

Stahl Production Nears Completion on Coast

With the coming of "The Child Thou Gavest Me," Associated First National introduces a new producing organization to exhibitors. It is an independent unit known as John M. Stahl Productions, and the pictures, made under Mr. Stahl's personal direction, will be presented by Louis B. Mayer. The cast includes Lewis Stone, Barbara Castleton, William Desmond, Richard Headrick, Adele Farrington and Winter Hall. Mr. Stahl is now nearing the completion of "The Child Thou Gavest Me," only a few of the sequences remaining to be "shot."

Mitchell Lewis Cast for Paramount Role

Mitchell Lewis has been cast for an important character role in support of Betty Compson in "At the End of the World." This picture is from the story by Ernest Klein and has been scenarized by E. Bingham. Penrhyn Stanlaws is the director.

Upon the completion of "At the End of the World," Miss Compson will be starred in "The Ordeal," an original photoplay by W. Somerset Maugham. Mr. Stanlaws will also direct "The Ordeal." Paramount will release both pictures.

International Screens Parachute Jumpers

Unusually striking pictures of daring parachute jumping from speeding Army aeroplanes, were recently obtained by Norman Alloy, International News cameraman, at Chanute Field, Rantoul, Illinois, and are included in International News No. 27, just released by Universal exchanges.

The pictures show five daring Army aviators in action. They are Lieutenant Hamilton, champion altitude jumper of the world; Sergeants Kamensky and Shoemaker, who assist him; and Pilots Carter and Weddington.

"Passion" Wins Praise of Otis Skinner

Otis Skinner, while playing in a legitimate play at Sioux City, Iowa, accepted the invitation of Manager Frank R. Wood, of the Princess theatre, of that city, to attend the matinee showing of "Passion," and wrote a lengthy letter to Mr. Wood the following morning in which he praised the First National attraction. The actor called the film "the best expressed, most eloquently acted picture play in its ensemble, mountings and direction I know, in the whole range of film endeavor."

Realart Unit Returns from the South

Justine Johnstone, Harrison Ford, James Harrison and other Realart players have returned to the Long Island studios after spending some time in Atlanta, Ga., filming exteriors for Miss Johnstone's new picture. The interiors will be made in Long Island. Edward Dillon is directing.

Urban Settings Exhibited at Art Museum

THE ARCHITECTURAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA recently requested Joseph Urban to contribute photographic reproductions of his settings for Cosmopolitan Productions to the League's exhibition, held this month at the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York City. The Urban collection, put on view at the exhibition, includes his settings for Marion Davies' picture, "Buried Treasure," and also photographic reproductions of his settings for "The Bride's Play," another Marion Davies stellar vehicle not yet released. The "Buried Treasure" settings were featured in electric lights in front of the Criterion theatre, New York City, a few weeks ago when the picture was being shown at that theatre.

This is the first time in the history of motion picture art, according to Cosmopolitan, that settings designed for films have been exhibited at the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

Plan Big Showings for "A Certain Rich Man"

It is learned from the Hodkinson headquarters that "A Certain Rich Man," adapted by Benjamin Hampton from the novel by William Allen White for release by Hodkinson, will probably have its premiere at one of the big Los Angeles theatres with special advertising and exploitation. Similar showings will be held in New York and other important centers, it is stated, and it will be several months before the picture will be nationally released, according to a statement from the Hodkinson headquarters.

Set for Educational Week

Great Volume of Prints Available for Showing Week of May 1 to 8

EIGHT THOUSAND, TWO HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-NINE prints of Education pictures are in the hand of exchanges for bookings during Educational week, May 1st to May 8th, and of these more than half already have been booked, according to announcement made this week by the home-office of the Educational Films Corporation of America.

Educational claims that practically every important circuit in the United States and Canada has booked its product, and from a majority of these circuits there have come assurances that the company's product will be shown at every house every day during the week, announces the statement issued. This alone is estimated at bringing the list of runs up to 2,000 theatres.

This drive is not only intended to mark the nearing of the end of the first year of the operation of Educational's own exchange system, but it is preliminary to its announcement of the product for the next year which will continue practically all of its present releases and add a number of comedy and special series which are now distributing through other organizations. According to the announcement from Educational, it will emphasize its slogan "everything for the theatre except the feature."

The product now includes the two-reel Mermaid, Christie, Torchy and Chester comedies, the single-reel Vanity and Gayety comedies, the Bruce Scenics Beautiful, the Chester Outings, Screenics, World Wanderings and such specials as Annette Kellerman in "The Art of Diving," "Modern Centaurs," "The Valley of Ten Thousand Smokes," Babe Ruth—"How He Knocks His Home Runs," and "The Race of the Age." In addition to these there are the Red Cross series, animal studies, cartoon subjects and many novelties.

In addition to selling the product the exchanges are being asked to request exhibitors to feature the short-subjects in their advertising and exploitation. According to Educational, there has been an increase of over 500 per cent. in the demand for its various accessories since the original estimate, which is held to show that theatre owners are showing a fuller appreciation of the value of one and two-reel pictures.

Units Busy in Lasky Studio

Taylor and Melford on New Pictures; Others to Start Shortly

SEVERAL productions are now under way at the Lasky studio on the Coast. William D. Taylor has started work on Henry Arthur Jones' play, "The Lifted Veil," which will star Ethel Clayton. Charles Meredith will be leading man.

George Melford has just started on "The Great Impersonator," with James Kirkwood featured. The adaptation is by Monte Katterjohn.

Cecil B. DeMille is scheduled to start work next week on his next Paramount super-production, the title of which has not yet been finally determined. Dorothy Dalton, Mildred Harris and Conrad Nagel and Elliott Dexter are scheduled to play the leading roles. About April 18 William DeMille will begin work on his production for Paramount, as yet untitled, written by Rita Weiman.

Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle is sailing merrily through the new Paramount picture called "Gasoline Gus," adapted by Walter Woods from the two stories by George Pattullo. Lila Lee is leading woman.

Gloria Swanson is still engaged upon her first star picture, Elinor Glyn's "The Great Moment," scenarized by Monte Katterjohn and directed by Sam Wood.

Wallace Reid has not as yet begun work, but will do so very shortly under Frank Urson's direction in a new story. Betty Compson, under the direction of Penrhyn Stanlaws, started this week on her first Paramount star picture, "At the End of the World," adapted from Ernest Klein's European success by E. Bingham. Miss Compson has a cast including Milton Sills, Mitchell Lewis, Joseph Kilgour, Casson Ferguson and Spotiswood Aiken.

Tom Forman leaves in a few days for San Francisco to make scenes at the harbor and through the Golden Gate for episodes in "Cappy Ricks" stories by Peter B. Kyne, in which Thomas Meighan is to star. A. S. LeVino is doing the adaptation.

First Nat'l. Franchise in Kenosha is Sold

Two important theatre deals are reported in Kenosha, Wisconsin, this week. Three theatres owned by the Charles Pacini estate, "The Majestic," "The Butterfly" and "The Strand," were sold to the Saxe-Dayton Company. The Charles Pacini estate was owner of the Associated First National franchise and several other important film franchises in the city. With this sale went a building site for another theatre which the new owners are planning to erect in the near future. The consideration in this deal was more than $100,000. The Saxe-Dayton Company now controls nearly twenty theatres.

The second deal was a ninety-nine year lease secured by the Fitzpatrick and McElroy Company for the Rhode Opera House at present the largest theatre in Kenosha from Joseph G. Rhode for an annual rental price of approximately $10,000.

Helen O'Neil playing in Torchy Comedies released by Educational Exchanges

"Now or Never" Booked by S. L. Rothapfel

S. L. Rothapfel has booked Harold Lloyd's three-reel comedy, "Now or Never," for the Capitol theatre, New York. Associated Exhibitors declares that Mr. Rothapfel is arranging a special presentation for the picture. This will mark the comedy's first appearance in New York territory. Rothapfel has also closed for the entire first series of Lloyd's three-reel comedies for Associated Exhibitors.

"Now or Never" has already played at the Strand and the Metropolitan in Cleveland, day and date. The Doric and Liberty theatres of Kansas City also have given day and date showings of the comedy. The Tivoli in Baltimore, the Strand in Cincinnati and the Jensen Von Herberg houses in Seattle have also presented "Now or Never." In each instance, the picture scored an unusual success, according to officials of Associated Exhibitors.

"The Devil" Scores in Two Big Houses

The Associated Exhibitors release, George Arliss in "The Devil," scored again in Barbee's Loop, Chicago, and The Stanley in Philadelphia. It is being held over for a second week at the Chicago house. The management in both cases backed the picture with unusual advertising and a prologue.

Del Ruth Wrote Story for Anita Stewart

Hampton Del Ruth is the author of Anita Stewart's new vehicle for First National release, "The Invisible Fear." The story is described to be a mystery-drama. In Miss Stewart's support will appear Walter McGrail, Alan Forrest, Estelle Evans, Hamilton Morse, George Kuwa and Edward Hunt. "The Invisible Fear" was recently completed under the direction of Edwin Carewe.

Realart Engages Exhibitor on Studio Staff

Realart announces that Aubrey Stauffer, manager of many road companies and more recently manager of theatres at Santa Barbara and Bakersfield, Cal., has been engaged to read submitted photoplay material and to assist in titling finished pictures at Realart's Hollywood studios. Elmer Harris, supervising director for Realart, points out Mr. Stauffer's engagement as an effort on Realart's part to select excellent photoplay material.

Huge Dam Being Built for Vitagraph Film

Vitagraph reports that an engineering feat of magnitude is being carried out at Balboa, Cal., in connection with the production of "The Son of Wallingford," the new George Randolph Chester feature for Vitagraph release. According to the Vitagraph statement, a huge dam is being constructed on the Pacific Coast at Balboa so as to convert one of the bays into an inland lake, which when completed will be about twenty-four miles square, it is declared.

ALICE CALHOUN IN

CHARMING DECEIVER

(VITAGRAPH)

An interesting, simple story told with agreeable speed. A very good cast with attractive backgrounds and excellent characterizations. Directed by George L. Sargent.

Here is a star worth watching. Alice Calhoun, only recently come to the screen as a Vitagraph star, is an ingenue who really displays artistic possibilities. In this latest of her vehicles she plays with all the qualities that make screen success a certainty — intelligence, grace, poise, uncommon good looks and naturalness. She is altogether charming.

She appears herewith as Mrs. Don Marston, a young woman who was tricked into marriage with a forger in prison at the time of the story's opening. A letter comes to her brother Frank in a Canadian hospital, where he is recovering from the war injuries, conveying information that the grandfather, who had disowned the mother of the young people when she married against his wishes, had relented and wished the girl and Frank with him in his old age. The girl goes and is followed there by her husband, of whom she tells the household nothing until he escapes from prison and follows her to the old homestead in Connecticut. She persuades him to pose as the brother. Richard Walling, a good friend of the grandfather, a young neighbor, falls in love with the girl. The climax comes when the husband, in a state of intoxication, makes known the real situation. She is about to leave home when the brother is discharged from the hospital and comes to tell the whole tale. The husband, pursued by Canadian officers, takes his life, and the girl is left to the love of Walling.

The picture, while not particularly uncommon of plot, is very well presented in every way and will be liked by adult patrons.

Jack McLean makes an attractive brother. Eugene Acker carries well the part of the husband. John Adams in the part of the grandfather is an unusually good character impersonator. Roland Bottomley, as Richard Walling, is clean cut and exceedingly likeable, and the part of Duncan, an aged servant, is made impressive by Robert Gaillard.

"Reputation" Code Gets Wide-Spread Notice

Universal has conceived what is reported to be a most attractive "stunt" in connection with its national advertising and publicity campaign for Priscilla Dean's latest picture, "Reputation." "Commandments" have been sent out to newspapers over the name, "Priscilla," with the explanation that these maxims form a "code" showing the vital importance of guarding one's good name. Readers have been asked to send in their opinions on the subject of "Reputation" in verse, essay or precept form to the various newspapers. The "reputation movement" has been given much newspaper space, states Universal, and has aroused unusual interest in various localities.

"Made in the Kitchen" Booked by Capitol

Mack Sennett's initial two-reel release through Associated Producers, Inc., "Made In The Kitchen" will have its premiere at the Capitol Theatre within the next few weeks. "Made In The Kitchen" is the first of a series of twelve two-reel comedies to be made during the ensuing year by the well-known comedy producer.

Taylor Graves Is Cast in Gayety Comedy

Taylor Graves, who scored an important success on the speaking stage in the title role of "Very Good Eddie," will make his first screen appearance in a single reel Gayety Comedy which is being completed for Educational release. The picture is being directed by Scott Sydney.

Hodkinson Features on Opening Programs

J. C. DE WALT, the Hodkinson representative in Oklahoma City, reports to the home office that two new theatres of the larger class in his territory will open with Hodkinson releases as the feature attractions of their initial programs. According to Mr. De Walt's wire, the Rialto theatre will open on April 15 with "Down Home," while Louise Glaum's stellar vehicle, "Sex," will be the first feature presented by the Criterion theatre when it opens on April 20. A big style show will be used in conjunction with the showing of the latter production, according to word from Mr. De Walt.

Ceremonial Dancing of Yacqui in Kinograms

Tracy Mathewson, news cameraman, scores another scoop for Kinograms, released through Educational Exchanges, this week, with the first pictures of the Yacqui Indians, exiled from Mexico, in the wierd dances with which they celebrate Holy Week. These supposed savages include in their ceremonies the burning of a figure of Pontius Pilate and a ceremonial for the banishment of evil spirits, declares Educational.

Sports are represented in the current issue with picture of the opening of the horse racing at Bowie, the international yacht races at Monaco, and the Syracuse eight in practice races on Lake Onondaga.

Teaser Slides to Play Up Coming Features

Universal is preparing sets of teaser slides for their future releases, to be used by exhibitors in rousing interest among their audiences concerning coming attractions. These teaser slides will resemble in purpose and use the teaser ads inserted in newspaper columns. The first two slides will contain scenes and teaser captions, the third will definitely announce the title and other details customarily shown on the regulation varicolored slide. The plan has already been tried out in connection with "The Big Adventure," and exhibitors have reported favorably on the results.

Fox to Reissue Three Farnum Features

William Fox announces that he will reissue, with an entirely new line of paper, two of William Farnum's pictures based on stories by Zane Grey. These reissues, according to the Fox announcement, are "The Riders of the Purple Sage" and "The Rainbow Trail." A third reissue on the Fox schedule in which Farnum appears is "When a Man Sees Red."

The new vehicle provided William Farnum by Fox is "His Greatest Sacrifice." Paul H. Sloane wrote the story. J. Gordon Edwards directed. The cast includes Alice Fleming, Evelyn Greely, Lorna Volare (child actress), Frank Goldsmith and Edith McAlpin.

Ferguson and Reid to Star in "Ibbetson"

Elsie Ferguson and Wallace Reid will co-star in a Paramount version of "Peter Ibbetson," which will be released as a George Fitzmaurice production. This is in line with a statement made by Jesse Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, before the start of "The Affairs of Anatol," that his company would not hesitate to use several stars in the production of a worthy story.

The principals of the picture will assemble shortly at the Long Island studio, where the picture will be filmed.

"Proxies" Is Shown at Sing Sing April 13

"Proxies," the latest Cosmopolitan production to be released by Paramount, was shown on Wednesday, April 13, to members of the Mutual Welfare League of Sing Sing. Cosmopolitan officials believe that the picture presented a most appropriate theme for exhibition to the prison inmates. The lesson conveyed in the crook-drama is to "give a man a chance," which is put over without any element of a preachment present. "Proxies" was adapted from a Cosmopolitan Magazine story by Frank R. Adams and was directed by George D. Baker.

Kunsky to Build Huge Theatre in Detroit

John H. Kunsky of the Kunsky Theatrical Enterprises, Detroit, and President of Associated First National Pictures of Michigan, announces completion of arrangements for the erection of the new Kunsky theatre, the Capitol, which is to occupy the greater portion of a city block in downtown Detroit.

Mr. Kunsky will operate the property as a corporation to be known as the Capitol Building Co., of which John H. Kunsky is president and treasurer and George W. Trendle is vice-president and general manager. Seating 4,250 the Capitol will cost nearly $2,750,000.

It is expected the Capitol will open its doors to the public next December.

New Lyons-Moran Film Is "Blue Sunday"

Universal has decided to release the first Lyons-Moran two-reel comedy, made under the new short-subject schedule, as a Universal-Jewel production. The title is "Blue Sunday." The picture is illustrative "of what may happen under puritanical Sunday observance," says Universal. Amusing situations and hilarious action are said to be found in "Blue Sunday." Lillian Hackett plays opposite Eddie Lyons. Joy McCreery is opposite Lee Moran. George French is also in the cast.

Edith Roberts in "My Lady of the Island"

Edith Roberts will appear in another exotic story "rich in the glamor of the South Seas," says Universal. "My Lady of the Island," adapted from the novel by Beatrice Grimshaw, is the title of the new production just started at Universal City. Wallace Clifton did the scenario. Norman Dawn is directing. Jack O'Brien has the leading male role. Fred Lancaster, Arthur Jasmine and Fred Kohler will play the other important roles.

Titles for "Experience" by George V. Hobart

George V. Hobart, author of the stage play, "Experience," has joined the ranks of the scenario department at the studio temporarily. Mr. Hobart will assist in writing the titles for the picture.

Ann May, Joseph Dowling and Mary Anderson in Oliver Morosco's "The Half Breed"

Morosco "Is in to Stay"

Explains Why He Has Launched so Vigorously Into Film Production

IN his first interview outling his reasons for launching so vigorously into motion picture production after having been regarded as a "standpatter" theatrical producer, Oliver Morosco displays as much enthusiasm for the picturized drama as he ever did for the spoken play. "An amazing evolution that is changing the amusement habits of the world" is the way he speaks of "this newer medium of drama that knows no creed, tongue or horizon."

"In earnestly taking up the picturization of successful stage plays, I have been prompted by several motives," said Morosco. "Months ago I foresaw this closer alignment of the stage and screen that is now going on. I have been studying the situation for some time, being attracted probably more closely by the sale of several of my stage plays for picture purposes.

"There was another factor that strengthened my decision to produce pictures. I have been a stickler for certain production methods. I want a Morosco stage play done in the Morosco way on the screen.

"With more than twenty plays now available for picturization and new ones being acquired—I now have seven on the 'waiting list' for stage production—we have a wealth of material that gives us wide variety of selection and fortifies against the 'story famine.' I cite this as proof of our permanency in the production of pictures. I studied this move before reaching the decision for I was determined that once in with my own producing company I was going to "stay in."

"Our first picture, 'The Half Breed' is ready for delivery to First National. We are starting upon our second picture, 'Slippy McGee' immediately."

Educational in Force in "Philly" Houses

Manager C. S. Goodman, of Educational's Philadelphia office, has wired the home office that Educational is represented in the way of releases at all the downtown Philadelphia theatres this week. Educational is represented as follows, according to the statement issued:

At the Stanley is "Ready to Serve," latest of the Chester comedies, featuring Snooky, the Humanzee.

The Palace has Johnny Hines in "Torchy's Big Lead."

"Bang," latest of Mermaids, featuring Jimmie Adams, is at the Arcadia.

"The Reckless Sex," a Christie comedy, featuring Dorothy Devore and Earl Rodney, is at the Victoria.

At the Capital is another Christie Comedy, "Scrappily Married," with Harry Gribbon and Helen Darling, while Educational is further represented on the same program with "The Worst Was True," a Chester Outing.

At the Market Street there is "High and Dry," a Mermaid; and at the Savoy "Ladies' Pets," a Chester. Mr. Goodman reports that in all the daily-change houses downtown Educational is represented by at least one comedy.

Rothacker Makes Film of Rural School

Although W. H. Stafford is one of the "newest" members of the Rothacker Industrial Division, it was he whom Watterson R. Rothacker selected to direct the important four-reel picture of the Chazy Central Rural School which educators say is the finest rural school system in the world.

"This picture will be sent all over the world in order that school officials may copy the Chazy system and we must have a film which, when shown abroad, will be a good advertisement for the American motion picture industry," Mr. Rothacker said to Mr. Strafford.

Mr. Strafford is said to have scored a film which more than justified the confidence Mr. Rothacker reposed in him.

Roscoe to Play Opposite Alice Lake

Al Roscoe has been engaged by Metro to play opposite Alice Lake in her new Metro starring picture, a story by Arthur Somers Roche for which a title has not yet been announced. Mr. Roscoe has just completed work in the leading male role in support of May Allison in "The Woman Next Door."

George Stewart is the only other member of the supporting cast selected for the new Alice Lake picture. Mr. Stewart is a brother of Anita Stewart.

Richard Dix Is Signed by Goldwyn

Richard Dix, recent recruit to the motion picture actors' colony in Los Angeles, has proved so adept as a screen player that Goldwyn has awarded him a two-year contract,

The title of the Eva Novak picture directed by Norman Dawn has been changed to "Wolves of the North." It was originally known as "The Evil Half."

Lucien Hubbard, scenario editor, has offered a prize of fifty dollars to anyone who will suggest a book or magazine story available for pictures, if it is purchased by Universal.

Elmo Lincoln is to be starred in a Tarzan serial.

Lee Moran begins work soon in "Whose Wife is Kate?" by Harvey Thew and Cleveland Moffett.

METRO

The supporting cast for Bert Lytell in "A Trip to Paradise" produced under the direction of Maxwell Karger, includes Virginia Valli, the lead; Brinsley Shaw Unice, Vin Moore, Victory Bateman, and Leigh Wyant. The screen adaptation is by June Mathis.

The final scenes for "The Man Who," starring Bert Lytell were completed last week. Additional Metro companies are preparing stories. The casts will be announced later.

ROACH STUDIOS

Hal E. Roach has Ruth Roland under contract for work in serials for Pathe. Production will be started next week under the direction of W. S. Van Dyke. The serial will be "The Golden Canyon" by Val Cleveland, and the players include Earl Metcalfe, Virginia Ainsworth, Alice Hesse, Harry Girard, Otto Lederer, Bud Osborne and others.

Harold Lloyd leaves for New York next week. His next release is "Among those Present." Another untitled picture has been completed.

Roach has renewed the contract of "Sunshine Sammy" (Ernest Morrison) the little negro.

Robert Eddy, the former director of the Toonerville Trolley series, has been engaged by Roach to direct the Eddie Boland comedies.

Ben Wilson is making the final scenes for "The Kickapoo Kid."

BRUNTON

R. A. Walsh is beginning the production at the Brunton studios of an unnamed original story. The leads will be played by Miriam Cooper, George Walsh, Bertram Crassby, and Noble Johnson.

J. D. Hampton has leased space at the Brunton studios to make four pictures within a year.

T. Hayes Hunter has taken all scenes for the Dial-Hodkinson production, "The Light in the Clearing." Editing is now in progress.

The David Butler production "Sophia Semenoff" is now nearing completion. It is a Russian story by Wallace Irwin.

James Young is nearing completion of Rudyard Kipling's "Without Benefit of Clergy," which is to be a Robert Brunton production for Pathe.

GOLDWYN

The supporting cast for Richard Dix and Helene Chadwick in "The Glorious Fool," Mary Robert Rinehart's original story, being directed by Mason Hooper, includes Clarissa Selwynne, Kate Lester, Otto Hoffman, and Theodore Von Eltz.

Hazel Dawn will play opposite Tom Moore in "Beating the Game," under the direction of Victor Shertzinger.

The Will Rogers company, under the direction of Clarence Badger, has returned from Casa Granda, Arizona, after making the round-up scenes for "Doubling for Romeo."

Director Frank Lloyd and company, filming "The Grim Comedian," are working at Big Bear Valley.

Wallace Worsley, filming "The Ace of Hearts," with Lon Chaney, Beatrice Joy and Joyn Bowers, is making snow scenes at Pine Crest.

Jack Gilbert has been engaged to play in "Who Shall Judge?" the next Reginald Barker production. The story is by Gouverneur Morris.

J. J. Cohn, who has served as business manager of the Goldwin studios, has been appointed production manager by Vice-President Abraham Lehr.

SELIG-RORK

The cast for the first two-reel drama, "The Policeman and the Baby,' includes William Desmond, Elinor Fair and Wallace Beery.

Filming of a Curwood story, featuring Ethel Grey Terry, Lewis Stone, and Wallace Beery is now in progress at Truckee, Arizona.

Production of "The Rosary" will begin as soon as the continuity is received.

VITAGRAPH

Albert E. Smith is here from New York and will start new production with William Duncan and Antonio Moreno.

Earle Williams has finished "The Silver Car" under the direction of Dave Smith.

Larry Semon has completed "The Bakery." Director Jess Robbins is now editing a Western comedy featuring Jummy Aubrey.

LASKY

Wallace Reid is beginning "The Hell Diggers" by Byron Morgan under the direction of Frank Urson. Agnes Ayres plays the female lead. The cast includes Frank Leigh, Lucien Littlefield, Buddy Post and Clarence Gerdert. Upon completion of this picture Reid will go East to co-star with Elsie Ferguson in "Peter Ibbetson," to be produced by George Fitzmaurice.

George Melford is beginning production on "The Great Impression," featuring James Kirkwood and Ann Forrest. The scenario by Monte Katterjohn.

A jungle covering many acres has been built at the Lasky ranch and is now being used.

A big Mexican dance hall set is being used by Cecil DeMille this week.

Our Town had a snow storm.

Al E. Smith has come back to the coast.

Max Linder says the picture business is changing.

An Iowa woman asks if "The Unfoldment" is a story about napkins.

C. Irvine is now sending mimeograph copy from the Max Linder studio.

John G. O'Brien, sometimes called Jack, has come out to the coast.

Roy Stewart was known as the fighting choir boy when he lived in San Deigo.

Rollin Sturgeon, we are told, is considering possibilities for Human Hearts.

Walter Hires has been given a convenient vacation just at the baseball season opening time.

Everybody wants to know if Bebe Daniels really is going to go to jail. Five to four she does.

Eddie Polo has found a vacation at Byron Hot Springs necessary after filming The Seal of Satan.

Imperial Germany and Russia, a press agent tells us, are the best illustrations of censorship.

Mary Anderson will have to forget the name "Sunshine Mary" for her part in "The Half Breed" requires many crying scenes.

Hugh Thompson would like to find a clause in the Volstead act prohibiting actors from playing in rain scenes.

We hear George Larkin is to be starred in two-reel Northwestern Mounted Police Stories.

Now that Gladys Walton has completed "The Man Tamer" she is going to play in "What can you expect."

A cubist sent Claire Adams his impression of her and she thought it was the map of some fortification until an explanatory letter arrived.

Monte Blue is daily showin' 'em he can ride a horse at the Realart. Mary Miles Minter is the spectator in most of these scenes.

The Eason family, Reeves, Littl e Breezy Eason and mother, known professionally as Ginsy May, made a personal appearance at Monrovia the other night and some of the citizens rocked the Volstead act lid.

Dick Schayer is a scenario writer and owns a trick dog. He writes gags into Ben Hampton's continuities so that the dog will have to be employed to do his stunts. Dick brags about it.

Pomona, by a vote of fifty-five, said, "Close the theatres on Sunday." And that's not all, the theatres have something to say and so they are going to close them every day so that everybody can go to prayer meeting and Sunday school every evening.

Bennie Fineman has brought down his foot. No more animals or birds in Katherine MacDonald's pictures. The reason, Katherine insists on buying everyone. Bennie threatens to bring a lion into the next picture.

Reg. Barker maintains that all stories must have a villain so that good can be illustrated by evil, and because the villain is now in bad that he be rechristened "A Tragic Hero."

Harvey Thew and Cleveland Moffett have collaborated in writing the comedy "The Last Day at Tia Juana" which leads to the inquiry "What makes you think Tia Juana has had its last day?"

Assistant Directors' Association installed officers last week and we are advised Treasurer Watt read the financial report, Frank Garrity and Roy Marshall sang, Dick Allen played the piano and a good time was had by all.

After a career of eight years as co-stars in comedy, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, the boys have separated. Lee is to remain with the U, and Lyons has other plans. Because of this change the familiar reference "The Boys" will pass out of the business.

Con Stroheim has caused to be created the shortest street car line in the world. It is run the length of the Monte Carlo Street, six hundred feet in all, and will be used exclusively by Foolish Wives Company.

ABOUT DIRECTORS

CLARENCE BROWN, who co-directed with Maurice Tourneur in the making of "The Last of the Mohicans" and who has been engaged with Mr. Tourneur in the filming of "Bright Lights," will take a number of scenes in and about New York for which he journeyed eastward from California recently. The screen play in production is an adaptation from Donn Byrne's story, "The Foolish Matrons", with Hobart Bosworth as the featured player.

The Leonce Perret production heretofore known as "A Race for Millions," now entitled "The Twisted Man," will be edited by Katherine Hilliker, who also contributed the work of titling "Passion." The foreign flavor in Mr. Perret's photoplay is said to come legitimately in the international character of the scenes in the story, which are laid and were actually filmed in England, France, Italy and some in our own country.

It is interesting to note the activities of a few directors, who were formerly actors. Reginald Barker, for instance, recently reported that William D. Taylor, Scott Sidney, Walter Edwards, Jerome Storm, Richard Stanton and Charles Swickard have all acted under his direction. Along comes Jay Hunt and boasts of having directed William D. Taylor, Frank Borzage, Chet Withey, Richard Stanton, Jerome Storm, Charles Swickard, Scott Sidney, Charles Miller, Jack Nelson, Howard Hickman, Ralph Ince and John Adolfi. Robert G. Vignola was once upon a time under the direction of Sidney Olcott.

From the standpoint of grace and modesty the old-fashioned dances may have their advantages; but when it comes to teaching them, says Clarence Badger, give him the toddle or the alligator glide any day. Perhaps it should be explained that Mr. Badger is now initiating fifty extras in the intricacies of the minuet for the mask ball scene in "Doubling for Romeo," the new Will Rogers picture he is directing. That, in his belief, is sufficient reason for his prejudice.

According to reports from J. Stuart Blackton in London the scenario for the first of his productions featuring Lady Diana Manners has been completed. Lady Diana is expected to return from Nice shortly to commence work on her initial screen contribution. Arthur S. Kane is handling the Blackton-Manners productions in this country.

Director Robert G. Vignola bargains with a native of the Bahamas, to teach E. K. Lincoln and Seena Owen, at his left, to weave banana palm, while exteriors of "The Woman God Changed," a Vignola production for Paramount, were being shot in the Bahama Islands

Philip Bartholomae, whose most recent contribution to the screen is "The Outside Woman," in which Penrhyn Stanlaws directed Wanda Hawley for Realart, is busily engaged in the production and rehearsals of a musical comedy. Bartholomae, it will be remembered, scored several successes as a stage playwright both in the straight comedy field and with some musical pieces, including "Very Good Eddie," "When Dreams Come True" and "Over the Top." Bartholomae is also the author of "The Black Panther's Cub" in which Florence Reed was recently starred by W. K. Ziegfeld.

ABOUT PLAYERS

Earl Metcalfe will be seen in the new serial starring Ruth Roland, for Pathe release, following the work he has been more recently engaged in, the features, "What Women Will Do" and "Mother Eternal."

Following the completion of his engagement in the Robert G. Vignola production "The Woman God Changed," E. K. Lincoln sailed for a pleasure trip through England, Ireland, France, Belgium and Holland, traveling incog. throughout most of the journey. He visited the battle fields of France and Belgium, securing some valuable material for a big production he intends putting under way in the near future. While abroad Mr. Lincoln refused several European offers to star in picture, owing to the limited length of time he allotted the trip. Among his most important purchases were several champion show dogs. It is generally known that Mr. Lincoln in addition to being a versatile actor, is also a dog fancier.

Past performances of screen stars are usually as interesting as the circumstances under which they entered the art of motion pictures. The truth, however, is rarely told. Yet it seems eminently fitting and proper to learn that at one time in her life, Mabel Ballin, who will ultimately appear as the heroine of "Ave Maria," which Hugo Ballin is now producing, pursued an occupation as novel as it is characteristic of the lovely star. She designed babies' caps, in Philadelphia.

Virginia Valli, who has recently become Mrs. Demarest Lamson, in private life, is a new recruit to California, her trip west being one combining the honeymoon and new ventures in motion pictures. The barefoot scenes for "The Man Who" in which she played opposite Bert Lytell, for Metro, were filmed one morning shortly after her arrival. That same afternoon she commenced work on "A Trip to Paradise," the second production of the trio in which she will support the same star. The engagement of Miss Valli to play opposite Mr. Lytell in three consecutive pictures, establishes a record in its line.

Again Helen Chadwick is to be leading woman to Tom Moore. She played opposite him in "Made in Heaven," his last-made picture, and now has been chosen for a like part in "Beating the Game," by Charles Kenyon, which went into production at the Goldwyn studios last week upon the return of Mr. and Mrs. Moore from their Honolulan honeymoon. In "Heartsease," an earlier Moore picture made about two years ago, Miss Chadwick also played opposite the star.

George Bancroft, the stage actor who is making his first screen appearance in Hugo Ballin's "Ave Maria," the story written by a Dominican nun, throws an interesting light on the days when he and Wm. S. Hart appeared together in "The Trail of The Lonesome Pine" before either thought seriously of the movies. During stage waits Hart used to watch Bancroft light matches with a snap of his thumb nail and eventually learned from him the stunt the star later made famous.

Lon Chaney calls himself a Jack of all trades and a master of none. But Wallace Worsley, who is directing him in "Ace of Hearts," Gouverneur Morris' original screen story for Goldwyn, is in a position to know that he is master of at least two.

One, of course, is dramatic art; everyone who has seen Chaney act will agree on that point. The other is wig making; and his skill in that craft will be demonstrated when "Ace of Hearts" is released. For in that picture he wears a wig which, from the first hair to the last, is of his own making. However, lest the actor be swamped with orders for toupees, it should be said that he made it, not for his own amusement, but to satisfy Director Worsley, who had refused all the hairdressers' wigs on the ground that they were too artificial.

"Biggest Yet," Says Famous

Gives Statistics on "Deception" to Show Magnitude of Production

THE following statistics are submitted by Paramount as showing the magnitude of "Deception," the European-made picture directed by Ernest Lubitsch, director of "Passion." "Deception" is soon to be released as a Paramount picture:

Seven months in the making; 200 carpenters; 400 stucco workers; three months spent in building sets alone; 12,000 square yards of canvas; 14,000 sacks of plaster; 200,000 tons of sand; 220,000 pounds of iron; 125,000 pieces of walling stone; 84,000 roof tiles, and 12,000 square yards of paving stone.

"Deception" is said by Paramount to be the most stupendous production that has ever come from European shores, and, in addition to the dramatic appeal of a story of a woman's love behind a throne, the picture promises a lasting revelation in spectacular settings and thrills.

The sets for "Deception," which required the amount of time, labor and material outlined above, are said to represent only a part of the outlay in the making of this production. For months before work was commenced, declares Paramount, the art director for the picture devoted himself to research work studying the styles of architecture, ornamentation and arrangement of British streets of the sixteenth century, which figure prominently in the picture.

Director Ernest Lubitsch personally supervised the making of every scene and directed the acting of the Continental stars—Henny Forten, who takes the leading role of Anne Boleyn; Emil Jennings as King Henry VIII, and Audegede Nissen as Jane Seymour.

Fairbanks' Cast Announced

Production Will Be Started Upon Completion of Costumes for Cast

UNITED ARTISTS announces the completed cast for Douglas Fairbank's screen version of "The Three Musketeers" to be as follows:

Douglas Fairbanks as D'Artagnan, Leon Barry as Athos, George Seigmann as Porthos, Eugene Pallette as Aramis, Boyd Irwin as De Rochefort, Thomas Holding as Buckingham, Sydney Franklin as Boniface, Charles Stevens as Planchet, Negel de Brulier as Cardinal, Willis Robards as De Treville, Lon Poff as Father Joseph, Mary MacLaren as Queen, Marguerite deLa Motte as Constance, Barbara La Marr as Milady, and Adolphe Menjou as Louis XIII.

Work will start just as soon as the costumes are ready for the cast. Edward Knoblock is supervising the preparation of the entire wardrobe which is said to embrace one-hundred costumes. A large costuming company in Los Angeles is engaged in this work. Included in the sets already constructed for "The Three Musketeers" are The Inn, the bed chamber of the Duke of Buckingham and the bed chamber of D'Artagnan, in which role Douglas Fairbanks is expected to give the greatest interpretation of his career.

"The building of the sets and the making of costumes comes as the culmination of the most painstaking campaign of research ever undertaken," says Hiram Abrams, president of the United Artist. "The world's greatest experts and all of the best known and most authentic authorities bearing on that period of French history have been consulted," Mr. Abrams states.

The designing and supervising of all sets is in the hands of Edward M. Langley, art director.

"The Kid" Tops Record Made by "Passion"

FIRST NATIONAL reports that Charles Chaplin's comedy, "The Kid," broke every record at the Kinema Theatre in Los Angeles, smashing even that established by "Passion," another one of First National's "Big Five" which closed a three week run at the Los Angeles palace of Gore Bros., Ramish, and Sol Lesser. On Saturday, the house staff, increased to seven linemen to handle the outside, was able to handle the throng, but on Sunday, the theatre called up Lyle Pendergast, Chief of Police, and begged for reserves to assist in aligning the crowds storming the theatre.

"The Kid" is being shown at regular Kinema admissions and eclipsed in receipts for the two opening days the "Passion" box offices statement by over $2,000,000, it is declared, notwithstanding the fact that the European picture was shown at increased box office prices.

Clearwater, Florida Adds the New Capitol Theatre

With " Dinty " as the photoplay feature, the Mayor of the city and other prominent men, delivering addresses, the new Capitol theatre at Clearwater, Florida, opened its doors to the public on Monday, March 21.

The Capitol is a beauty. It would be a credit to a much larger city. The front follows the old Spanish design, and is attractive, as only terra cotta can make it.

The building throughout is of concrete, as near fireproof as it is possible to make it. The operating booth is a separate concrete room, very large, and equipped with a battery of Powers 6 B machines.

Every modern arrangement, for the comfort and safety of the patrons, has been provided. There are 600 seats, all in the ground floor, with spacious aisles and plenty of room between the rows.

In the orchestra pit a Seaburg Photo Player has been installed and will be used in connection with an orchestra of five pieces.

The Capitol is operated by Mr. H. Pitman, who also operates the Royal in the same city, as well as the Dixie in Dunedin, Fla. Mr. Pitman is an " old timer " in the picture business. He has operated a number of houses on the West Coast of Florida, and everyone of them have been very successful.

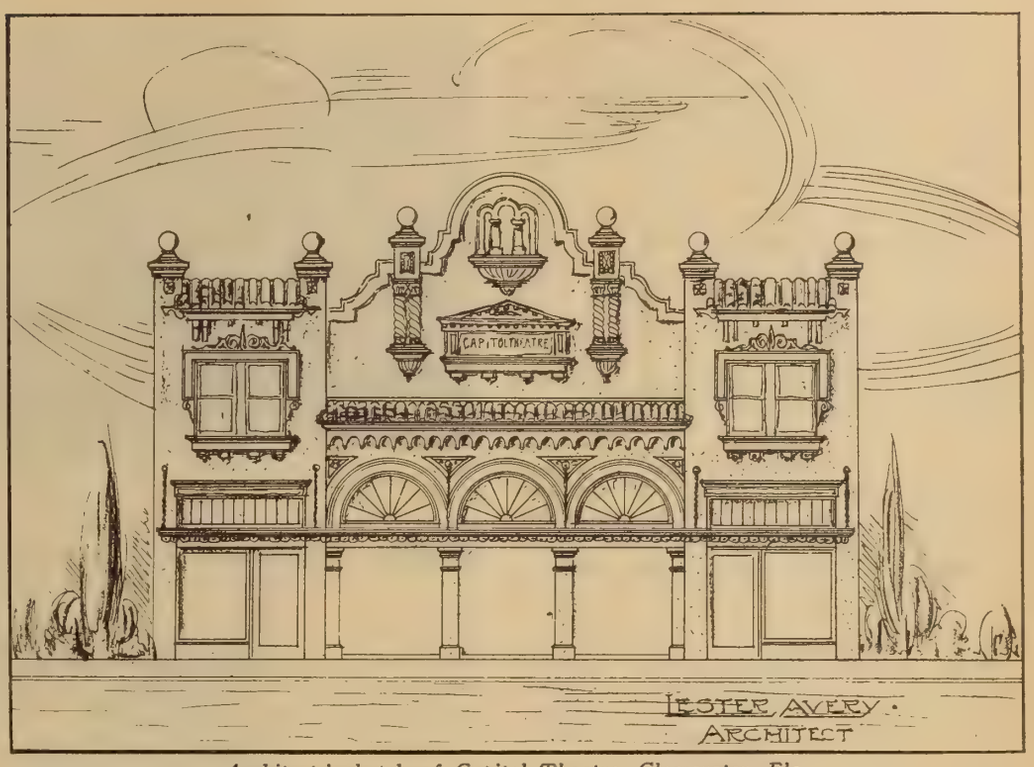
Mr. Pitman says: "Good pictures, good projection, good music, and a clean, comfortable house will get the business." His success proves the value of his motto.

Beaux Arts Enjoys Matchless Setting

Somewhere on this page there is an aerial photograph of the unusual Beaux Arts Theatre located at the famous resort of Palm Beach, Florida. Probably no other theatre in the country can boast of the same sort of setting, the high class clientele. Located as it is in the midst of the playground of society and surrounded on every side either by the beautiful blue waters of the ocean or the lavish estates of the wealthy there is no trouble in understanding the restrictions under which the management must conduct the amusement center. It is best to let Manager Stanley C. Warrick tell the story in his own words.

" We have no theatre lobby or entrance proper. We have a lobby similar to the large hotels, off which the various salons diverge. From this lobby, by a large staircase one goes to our small theatre seating 425 people, on the roof.

It is the location of the theatre, and the exclusive class of people who patronize it that has given the theatre its unique distinction. From the roof, one can see from the many doors, on the one side the waters of the Atlantic, and the other side, the waters of beautiful Lake Worth. It is as nearly an open air theatre as one could have under a roof, with doors that can be closed when desirable. Hence it is always cool, and always well ventilated, making it possible to smoke with no annoyance to one's neighbor, and this is a privilege which is immensely appreciated (especially here where one's after dinner cigar is not to be lightly interfered with) we might incidentally state that the smoking is not entirely confined to the sterner sex.



Architects' sketch of Capitol Theatre, Clearwater, Fla.

As for our clientele, our mailing list, very complete, is like the Blue Book of most communities, and (as one newspaper recently wrote) " A social register of Palm Beach might well be compiled at the Beaux Arts Theatre, and both in the afternoon and evening it is interesting to note the many smart society people who gather there to see their favorites of the screen. The theatre has been a boon to the many in mourning this season, as they can slip quietly in and enjoy an evening there very informally and, not having to dress, it is therefore really quite the smartest rendezvous of these families in Palm Beach, this being one of the diversions custom permits them to enjoy."

Except for our brass framed one sheets at the entrances we have no " front " as most theatres have—and as you will surmise, we place great value on our mailing list—and are equipped to issue daily if we so desire a personal message to every one in Palm Beach. We have a daily change of programme and so far as possible-play " specials "—and for obvious reasons they must be the latest releases obtainable—

What other theatres in the country have a setting equal to the Beaux Arts of Palm Beach, with the ocean and lake on either side and with the estates of the residents nearly surrounding it and just now in the latter part of the season, we are able to get many preleases—as most of the distributors realize that if they are not shown now, they will not be shown at all—as next season they would be too old for our use. There are very few, if any, of the new pictures released to date which we have not shown.

In regard to photos, the best I can do is to send you a postcard of the building, and also a unique aerial one of the building recently taken, which might make something different for you to use. It is very interesting for it not alone shows the building, but the ocean, and the lake, and one of the large hotels in the upper right hand corner—THE BREAKERS. Directly opposite The Breakers, on the lake front below the Beaux Arts, but not shown on the photo is The Hotel Royal Poinciana. The building to the left is a minor hotel, but next to that—not shown—is the estate of E. T. Stotesbury. On the ocean front back of us are the small estates of Charles B. Dillingham, Horace E. Dodge (just deceased), Pierre Lorilard Barbey, John C. King, and of John S. Phipps, and H. Carnegie Phipps. Between us and The Hotel Royal Poinciana, on the lake front, is the ever popular BEACH CLUB, which is to Palm Beach what the CASINO is to Monte Carlo.

The Beaux Arts is the Palm Beach home of the very best of the firms operating on your Fifth Avenue.

Can you imagine anyone at the head of such an establishment—with the finest firms in America for clients, who in turn have the finest families of America for their patrons—and having been located in such delightful surroundings—calling his labors—WORK? Every moment of the day is a pleasure—and I believe it is because it IS a pleasure that we have been so successful in gaining their confidence and their patronage. At any rate—The Beaux Arts is one of the most popular attractions in Palm Beach.

Mr. H. O. Davis, who designed the Mission theatre, Los Angeles. Mr. Davis also supervised the construction and the selection of equipment and furnishings

Rialto Opens in Jamaica, L. I.

In the ever increasing struggle for supremacy in the building of supermotion picture houses, the RIALTO has apparently made its mark.

Jamaica can and does, feel rightfully proud to win out in competition with all of Long Island, as the site for this commodious edifice. The auditorium seats 2,500 persons on its single floor. Large and comfortable lobbies every convenience in the way of retiring rooms for women and smoking rooms for men are provided. Pure air is supplied by a large, efficient ventilating system.

The RIALTO typifies all that is new and modern in the making of better class photoplay houses. Money was spent most lavishly, but money alone could not accomplish so much. It took the combined efforts of the architect, Mr. Edwin C. Georgi, and Treasurer-Manager, Mr. G. E. Mausert, to produce this "Theatre Beautiful."

This house is operated by the Long Island Motion Picture Co., Inc., of which the officers are: L. L. Alterman, president; E. R. Cucurullo, vice president; J. J. Alterman, secretary; and G. E. Mausert, treasurer and manager; L. B. Alterman, director.

The site on which this theatre stands was owned by Mr. Mausert and E. R. Cucurullo, and it was they who conceived the idea of making this large photoplay house. They then went ahead and incorporated the Long Island Motion Picture Co., Inc.

They realized the possibilities there were in building, albeit, building something really big, something so far superior to any playhouses on Long Island that success would be assured.

Their clear foresight and ability to visualize has proven itself in this venture. Mr. Mausert's experience covers a wide field in the motion picture industry. As a manager of the Brevoort in Brooklyn, his fame spread. After seeing the Brevoort firmly established, he took upon himself the task of making the Garden in Richmond Hill, N. Y., a success. A few months of intelligent and persi effort on his part, the Garden was a to Mr. Mausert's chain of successes was then that he took over the RIAL of Jamaica.

The opening feature was "Somet to Think About," featuring Gloria S son and Elliott Dexter, and a Ha Lloyd comedy. Appropriate prologue vocal selection was presented to com the bill.

At the conclusion of the last pe mance, the directors of the corpora received Mr. Mausert in the recep room and presented him with a very pensive and handsomely jeweled watch as a token of appreciation fo accomplishments.

The same high regard the theatre-g had for this theatre has been contin due to Mr. Mausert's policy of giving patrons only the highest class of first photoplays, artistically presented prologues and social entertainers many beautiful lighting effects w compare with the largest and best m politan theatres. The orchestra o pieces are under the direction of Fre Dressell. Selections on the three ma organ are rendered by Mr. K. H. Wa of New York City. Jamaica now h population of 83,999, as against 40,0 the last federal census. An idea of growth of Jamaica may be obtained the increased value of real estate. Fi Street property (the business centre) has a value equal to any Broadway p erty in New York City.

White Glazed Terra Cotta

"GREAT," says an Experienced Exhibitor

Mr. H. C. Miller of the Logan Square Theatre, Chicago, Ill., is an enthusiast about Terra Cotta. He calls it "great" and recommends it to other theatre owners.

Mr. Miller gives very practical reasons why Terra Cotta is a "great" building material for motion picture theatres. He says that his Terra Cotta front attracts patrons by day as well as by night, and brings more business at better prices. Those are important facts for every motion picture theatre owner to consider.

Today more than ever, exhibitors realize how important it is to keep the front of their theatres always bright and alluring. Terra Cotta does this. It is unlimited in range of form and color, so it permits the building of unusually beautiful theatre fronts. And the ease with which Terra Cotta may be cleaned makes it a simple matter to keep it always fresh and attractive.

Small frontage space can be as effectively faced in Terra Cotta as large frontage space. The Logan Square Theatre shows how Terra Cotta makes the most of a small surface area. It is offered as a suggestion to the theatre owner who prefers a simple design or wishes to keep his costs within strict limits.

Terra Cotta is a permanent structural material. It never changes in texture, color, or finish; it is resistant to fire, weather and age.

No matter whether you desire a theatre front that is large or small, plain or highly decorative, Terra Cotta will express every detail permanently, beautifully and profitably.

Write for the brochure, "The Theatre," and see what Terra Cotta is doing for many of the best theatres in America. For your general information, ask for "Terra Cotta Defined." It tells the story of Terra Cotta and shows its uses and advantages. Both booklets should be in the hands of every exhibitor. Address National Terra Cotta Society, 1 Madison Ave., New York, N. Y.

Educational Installation of Projectors

Educators are now beginning to realize the importance of motion pictures in educational work in schools of all kinds, and more and more installations of professional projectors are being made. As evidence of this fact, it is interesting to note the sales made by the United Theatre Equipment Corporation, to educational institutions, as for example: Academy High School, Erie, Pa.; Crafton High School, Crafton, Pa.; Emsworth Public Schools, Emsworth, Pa.; Ford City School District, Ford City, Pa.; Hill Top Y. M. C. A., S. S. Pittsburgh; Industrial Y. M. C. A., Tyler, Pa.; Kiskimenetas Spring School, Saltsburg, Pa.; Pennsylvania Training School, Morganza, Pa.; Salem Public Schools, Salem, Ohio; Signal Corps Laboratory, Washington, D. C.; Tyler County High School, Middlebourne, W. Va.; University of Pittsburgh, 110 State Hall, Pittsburgh.

"Monsoon" Factory in New Quarters

The Monsoon Cooling System, Inc.—"Breezemakers" and ventilation experts—have moved into their new three-story factory building in Brooklyn, recently equipped with the most up-to-date and efficient machinery necessary for turning out Monsoon Blowers in proportion to the increasing demand. The new sales headquarters will open about May 1 in the Longacre Building, 1476 Broadway, New York City, and will be in daily communication with the several branch offices throughout the country.

Simplex Performs for Washington Society

The internationally known Racquet Club at Washington, D. C., furnished the gathering of the cream of the Capitol's society on a recent evening, when William Fox's "Over The Hill" was shown to what can safely be considered the most exclusive audience that ever witnessed the showing of a motion picture program in the nation's Capitol.

The place was the new Willard Hotel, the ball room of which was specially decorated for the occasion, at which fully one thousand people gathered. A special showing of the "Over The Hill" feature occupied the major portion of the program. Two motor-driven Simplex Projectors, operated under the direction of Mr. C. W. Johnson, Chief of Projection for William Fox, comprised the projection equipment, which was housed in a temporary booth located one hundred fifty feet away from the screen, which accommodated a sixteen-foot picture space.

The musical entertainment was furnished by the United States Marine Band, while all around the ball-room were located special boxes and loges, occupied by members of the national government and their ladies, as well as representatives of almost every foreign office and embassy.

Conspicuous among the box-holders were: Vice-President and Mrs. Coolidge, Maj.-General John A. LeJeune, Commissioner and Mrs. Oyster, Col. and Mrs. Charles W. Kutz, Gen. C. C. Williams, William Fox, Col. and Mrs. Henry May, Mr. and Mrs. George Garrett, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. de Sibour, and G. Bryan Pitts, who were all in a box together.

The Floor-Covering for Your Theatre—

Of course, there are a lot of requirements to keep in mind when planning the floors of your theatre. But doesn't Gold-Seal Battleship Linoleum fill them all? Let's see.

In the first place, it is sturdily tough and durable—well able to stand for years the grind of floor-service in the busiest theatre. Second, it can be cleaned easily, quickly and at remarkably low cost. Third, and of interest to your patrons—it is restfully quiet under tramping feet. Fourth, its soft restful color—plain brown or green—blends artistically into any scheme of interior decoration.

Gold-Seal Battleship Linoleum is built to conform to the rigid specifications of the U. S. Navy—built to stand the grinding wear of deck service on our fighting craft. But it is not only built to give this satisfactory service, it is guaranteed to give it.

On every roll of Gold-Seal Battleship Linoleum you will find our Gold-Seal Guarantee—"Satisfaction Guaranteed or Your Money Back"—a guarantee that means just what it says.

And this, after all, is the big point: When you buy Gold-Seal Battleship Linoleum you buy a certain investment in floor-covering satisfaction.

Gold-Seal Cork Carpet

Here is a remarkably durable floor-covering, as restfully silent and yielding underfoot as a carpet of pine needles.

It is made in pleasing soft shades of green, terra cotta, and brown—the surface polished or dull—10 shades in all. Of course the same pledge of satisfactory service, the Gold-Seal Guarantee, goes with it.

Lighting of Motion Picture Theatres

Synopsis of Paper to be Delivered at the Convention of S. M. P. E. by J. L. Stair, of the National X-Ray Reflector Company.

The photoplay is becoming an instrument of culture with practically unlimited possibilities.

With the growing appreciation of the public, the demand for special effects for the presentation of the play is increasing.

Because the theatre is used largely at night, light is one of the best means of making the theatre attractive.

Lighting of the theatre has ceased to be merely a matter of engineering detail. The illuminating engineer and others responsible for the lighting of a playhouse must possess imagination.

The illumination effects should be designed to supplement the drama by producing an atmosphere harmonizing with the play and not detracting from it.

Building Notes from Various Cities

Denver

The America theatre at Sterling, Col., has been reopened after being closed for ten days on account of fire which resulted in 5,000 damage, fully covered. The fire occurred on Sunday night when there was no performance, and did not reach beyond the stage. New decorations, however, were necessary.

Several weeks ago the Rialto Theatre at Sterling sustained considerable loss by fire between the closing of the afternoon show and midnight, which almost completely ruined their equipment. Both fires were probably incendiary.

Joseph J. Goodstein of Denver, announces that he will build a theatre in Fort Collins, Col., to cost $90,000. Arrangements for the purchase of a site costing $30,000 has already been completed. The equipment of the theatre will c $40,000, including an $18,500 organ. Constr tion will begin about June 1, and it is expec that the theatre will be ready for the win season.

Cincinnati

The twenty-seventh link in the chain theatres controlled by Ascher Bros. opened doors to the Cincinnati public for the first t Saturday when the new "Capitol" was d cated. Thousands of persons were on hand one o'clock when Mayor John Galvin admit the first audience for an inspection of the pointments of the theatre, which is said represent an investment of $1,000,000. Mayor was presented with a season pass graved on a gold tablet. The dedication c monies were comparatively brief, chief inte centering in the first program, which typi the management's policy of "a new refinem and culture to the stage and screen with a lightful blending of sound, color rhythm motif."

Chicago

Fitzpatrick-McElroy Company, of Chic owners of the Princess, Bijou, and Theatres, Benton Harbor, and a circuit of th theatres in Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin Indiana, have closed contracts for the constr tion of one of the finest theatre buildings the State of Michigan, at Benton Harbor, fore the close of the year. The new thea will be erected on Fitzpatrick & McElr property adjoining the Bijou on the east will have a total seating capacity of about thousand. The ground on which it will st has a frontage of one hundred feet and a de of one hundred twenty-five feet.

The front of the building on Main St will be of rich design in brick and terraco with ornamental cornice, entablature coping. Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

Excellent Projection Room for Montreal Capitol

ONE of the highly unusual features of the new Capitol theatre, scheduled to be opened in Montreal, Quebec, on April 2 under the auspices of the Famous Players' Canadian Corporation, is the projecting room, a complete view of which is obtainable from the lounge room on the mezzanine floor. The machine will be on a direct level with the screen, structural arrangements having been made to permit this plan. The interior of the projection room is finished in glazed tile and the machines are 3 Type S Simplexes with a Simplex spot and double stereo-nickel-plated. The projectionists and other mechanical attendants will be garbed in white uniforms and the general public will be able to see them engaged in the screening of pictures by means of plate glass windows between the lounge and projection rooms. It is announced that the projectionists in charge of the screening will give information regarding the technical side of the projection to patrons who will desire to know details.

New Reel of Special Construction

A booklet received from the Niess-Waner Co., of Pittsburgh, describes the new reel designed by Mr. Niess-Waner and now ready for sale by the firm bearing his name.

The unusual feature of the reel is the rubber hub with its 33 pair of rubber sprockets. There is no other means of fastening the end of the film to the reel. It is only necessary to lay the film over the perforations, give the reel a twist and commence to wind.

The construction of the reel seems to be of high quality. There are no projecting surfaces and the edges of the reel are curled to prevent injury to the hands of the projectionist. Auxiliary side discs strengthen the sides of the reel and prevent them from dishing. So far as is known these reels are made in the 1,000-foot size only.

Difference Between a "Splice" and "Tap"

J. W., Los Angles, Cal.: What is the difference between a "splice" and a "tap"?

Reply: The two words "splice" and "tap" while having meanings of their own are often used in the same way. Correctly used, a splice is the connecting of the two conductors of the same general size. It is an extension of a circuit. A "tap" is an off-shoot from the main circuit.

Questions on Carbons and Optics

From a small town in Indiana, which shall remain unnamed because the writer requested us to use neither his name or the name of his village comes the following questions:

1. What causes carbon to needle and what happens when they do?

2. What makes carbons flame?

3. How can a side angle throw be remedied? Could it be entirely remedied?

4. How can I test lense for distortion of picture?

Reply: 1. Carbons have a certain critical current capacity beyond which it is impossible to go without producing "needling." The correct current for carbons is about 5 amperes below their needling point. By needling is meant the oxidizing of the carbons.

2. The usual cause for carbon flaming is high voltage. One of the laws of the carbon arc is that as the current increases the voltage decreases. If the current increases and the voltage is not balanced against it, the arc stream takes a longer path and this is known as flaming. Uneven quality or soft spots will also cause flaming.

3. A side angle throw cannot be remedied any more than a downward throw can be arranged to do away with key-stone distortion. In either case the distortion is there although it may not be noticeable to the casual eye. With side angle "conditions" you can file the top and bottom of an aperture plate to compensate for the distortion. You may also tip your screen a few degrees toward the projectors. These schemes will help but will not solve the problem.

Col. Steichen Speaks Before M. P. P. A.

The members of the Motion Picture Photographers' Association at their new quarters in the Gotham National Bank Building on Wednesday evening last were introduced by their president, Mr. Ned Van Buren, to Colonel Edward J. Steichen and Mr. Doty Hobart, speakers of the evening.

Mr. Hobart, as a member of the Scenario Department of the International Studios, spoke of the co-operation between his department and the photographer and advocated making scripts being a regular addition to the latters outfit.

Col. Steichen is a noted artist and photographer and practically the originator of the vogue of "soft focus" in still photography. Col. Steichen spoke as follows:

"To begin with I might say that the people who go to the movies could be divided into two classes: We have the 'rank and file' class (I'll call it), that first went to the movies. But those people seem to have lost their enthusiasm. Something seems to have dropped out of the pictures for them. They say 'What's the matter with the movies?' 'Salaries are too high,' they might say. I haven't noticed it. I don't think these is any reason for asking that the photographers' salaries be lowered. The public seems to consist of the people who pay a small amount of money to go to the movies, for amusement and pastime. There was the tired business man, the tired woman, and last but not least, the tired school boy. It was a relief for him to go to see a picture. Since that time, however, there is a different type of people who go to the movies. The people who used to turn up their noses at the movies, and went only to the theatre. But they too seem to have changed. They seem to be tired of the pictures, and everybody seems to be more or less up in the air. They seem to notice that the pictures lack realness. They observe immediately when something is flourished on the screen that is 'Real.' Animals always make a real picture because they are natural. I am going to refer to three pictures: Broken Blossoms, The Four Horsemen, Way Down East.

"The Four Horsemen with its spectacular presentation, and wonderful settings, is good, but the only time the people feel genuine emotion and get a real thrill is when the town was bombarded. However, the bombs flew at large, and the picture was taken regardless of how a town looked after being bombarded. Each window had a hole in it at the finish of the bombardment, and it looked as if a child did it. In the motion pictures it is these things that should be done real, and it would be a good idea to have an artillery man, (and there are plenty of them) to explain just how a town looks after being bombarded. It would look more natural .

"Stories and acting: In the old type of movies, there were two things only. The 'slap and hit,' and sentimentality. People always liked the happy endings. The heroine was always virtuous. The villain was always bad, and the hero always saved the heroine in the same manner. The people have grown tired of this. Real drama has got to be logical. Take 'Broken Blossoms.' There was real acting. Real settings, real actresses. And a real story. Of all the scenes, the most natural piece of acting was when the heroine was locked in the closet. When the man outside was trying to get in, and shaking the door, it could be noticed that the girl inside the closet really shook, and when a close up was shown, she was really naturally shaking her head so that it seemed to be spinning around. Those are the things which the public notice, and the things which should be considered when taking movies. The high brow world, the people who go to the movies these days will, in 90 per cent of the cases say 'No logic, No beauty, No life at all,' in criticising the movies. It has been suggested that the artist would be able to make a picture, for the movies. The artist's impression of life put on the screen would not make a hit. The impression that should be put on the screen is that the shop girl of New York is just human like other people. People are going to feel more or less antagonistic about stupid things flashed on the screen. I went to the movies the other day with a woman who had only been to the pictures about 4 or 5 times in her life. She has been accustomed to going to high class concerts, has her season subscription to the opera. She asked me, 'Why does the wind always blow in the movies?' This is no longer vital. In motion pictures, they do want motion, but not every minute of the time. It's not natural. Referring again to Broken Blossoms. It is one of the finest pictures, but I don't by any means consider it the last word. It was a good story. Everybody was excellent.

"Photography—America, has a high average for photography. I have just returned from an extended trip through Europe, and the photography over there cannot be placed in the same class as we have here. The only good pictures that you see in Europe are American pictures. They like them because the photography is good. It amuses the audience. The average of photography here is good, but in Europe it is very poor. However, Italy has done some good pictures, and the French have also done some good things, but the average is poor. I would direct my criticisms against photography.

"And now we come to the time where the cameraman or photographer plays his important part in making the picture. I much prefer the word photographer to the word cameraman, as to me, the latter means nothing but a crank turner, and I believe you men to be of the former category.

"The photographer is essentially the medium through which countless millions have to rely for the present popular form of amusement. They have it in them to make or mar the efforts of the director and his players.

"The photographer for some unknown reasons, known only to the producers themselves, have been kept in the background and tolerated merely as a necessary nuisance. I have never noticed any motion picture photographer riding around in Rolls Royces, steam yachts or owning palatial residences, yet their work is equally as important if not more so, than the director and star. The trouble is I think that they have just taken what was handed to them and assumed a satisfied attitude, so whose fault is it if the people have a wrong impression as to who they are, and what they do and get. Their own of course.

"It is with amazement that I learn, that you men have to work without a script. How any man can photograph a production, without knowing it is beyond me.

"The collaboration between director and photographer must be so intimate as to be practically one and the same thing, for in reality the director is almost the photographer. I don't see why photographers should not be directors.

"I have heard people say that a man has to be an artist to be a director, that is to make a production more artistic. There is some difference between making a production and a painting, the average artist has about as much chance of becoming a director as I have of becoming President of the United States.

"The photography in 'Broken Blossoms' was perfect and the lightings exceptionally pleasing, in fact taking it all around it is, to me, the finest picture I have witnessed.

"On the other hand 'Way Down East' apparently another great success from the box office point of view, cannot be compared in any way with 'Broken Blossoms.' The photography in general is of a very poor standard and the introducing of an even worse attempt at color only made it more displeasing.

"It is difficult to realize that these two productions were photographed by the same man. That may have been caused by lack of something; what that something may be I cannot say.

"In the Four Horsemen of the Apolsalypse the photography in general is good, but misuse of the 'soft focus lens' is very apparent. To my mind it just missed the high water mark.

"Being one of the originators in the use of soft focus lenses as applied to still photography, I will take this opportunity of expressing my emphatic denunciation to the indiscriminate abuse to which it is being used by equally indiscriminate photographers and directors of the present day. I would like to see it abolished from the equipment of the motion picture photographer who is not sufficiently versed as to its proper use."

Pantages to Build in New Orleans

Alexander Pantages is here to begin work on his new theatre, which will be erected on Canal Street between Rampart Street and Elk Place.

The vaudeville magnate came from Memphis, where his new theatre was opened. With him are B. Marcus Priteca of Seattle, his architect; Charles Hodkins, Earl Edmonson and Earl B. Newcomb. Mr. Pantages does not attach any titles to their names, simply saying that they accompany him.

Mr. Priteca, who has associated Nolan and Torre as local architects, with his enterprise brought along with him the detailed plans for a splendid six-story building which it is estimated will cost between $1,500,000 and $2,000,000.

Controlling the Lights Used in Film Studios

The control of the arc is accomplished by means of a resistance box which is mounted on the base at the bottom of the lamp standard. The switch equipment on the resistance box consists of a double-pole knife switch and two circuit breakers, which are shown in one of the illustrations. The switches and resistances are made by The Cutler-Hammer Mfg. Co. of Milwaukee and New York. The equipment is operated by first closing the knife switch, which connects the arc lamp in circuit with the resistance. The latter allows a current of 50 amperes to flow which is sufficient to cause the arc to glow. Either one of the two circuit breakers is then closed, shunting part of the resistance and increasing the current to 100 amperes. Closing the second circuit breaker further increases the current flow to 150 amperes.

Should the arc fail to maintain itself or the current supply be shut off, the circuit breakers will trip out, thereby cutting all the resistance into circuit. Upon return of the current, which will be indicated by the glow of the arc, amperes will be maintained until the circu breakers are closed to increase the current 100 and 150 amperes respectively.

The switch equipment and resistance a completely enclosed to prevent persons comi in contact with live parts. The switches a terminals are exposed by removing the shee metal cover, which is accomplished by taki out four screws.

The entire equipment is made very compa and readily portable by the method of carryi the resistance box and the lamp on the sa base.

New Motion Picture Theatre for Niles, O.

Work was started last Monday on the erection of the new $200,000 theatre building for Benjamin Warner, on the site of the old Niles Opera House, on State St.

The old Opera House was gutted by fire last September, but the audience of over two hundred people watching the "Idol Dancer" at six thirty in the evening filed out, when asked to do so by Mr. Warner, under the impression that there was a breakdown in the projection room. The three story structure was a mass of flames within five minutes after discovery of the fire.

The new theatre which will seat a thousand people on the main floor will be of steel and concrete construction, heated and ventilated according to the latest and most approved standards.

Bids were asked for several months ago, but they were too high. With reductions granted the work was immediately started and the theatre will be ready for occupancy within ninety days, weather permitting. Messrs. Stanley & Scheible, of Youngstown, Ohio, are the architects.

The Equipment Editor is always at your service should you need advise in anything concerning his department.

"The Queen of Sheba"

(Fox Production—Ten Reels)

THAT William Fox is showing the way to his contemporaries in the staging of mass-e spectacles cannot be disputed with the pres-ntation of his latest contribution, "The Queen f Sheba." His sense of showmanship seems o be as keen as his pocketbook is lavish—a howmanship noticeable in the manner in which e has incorporated a chariot race for a mar-elously spectacular climax and thereby dis-ounting the outstanding entertainment values f a book which has been eagerly sought by noneyed producers and which has been placed t a million dollars for the screen rights. Whether this chariot race is contrary to history r legend is beside the point. Certainly the roducer is privileged to use dramatic license. Those who see "The Queen of Sheba" will emember it for its chariot race or rather the ippodrome events, just as those who see "Way own East" will remember it for its tremen-ous ice thrill. The spectacle will be talked bout because of its big feature. A passerby ill say to his friend—"Have you seen 'The ueen of Sheba?'" If the latter answers in ie negative, the former will advise him to ttend and get the thrill of his life in the hariot race. It will be "ballyhoo-ed" by ord of mouth in just this manner. In fact ie writer overheard this identical trend of nversation the morning after the presentation.

Director Edwards, who is thoroughly expe-enced in spectacular effects, has constructed huge stadium track, after the manner of ome in its glorious days. Sheba has pre-nted herself at Solomon's court and as a oken of her esteem has offered him four rabian steeds. Challenged by the jealous ashti to enter the race for the approval of ie king, she consents and the stirring event is n. And what a race!

It is a race punctuated by one long extended rill with first one rival in the lead and then ie other. The director has staged the scene ith startling effects. His close-ups and long ots are well timed and placed. One instinc-vely grasps the arms of the seat as the hariots come tearing straight toward the mera. And Sheba wins. The director made n error of omission in failing to catch the nthusiasm of the stadium throng. Tom Mix credited with being responsible for the hip-drome events, and he deserves unbounded raise for the manner in which he has enliv-ed the scene and made it throb with vigorous tion. It is our impression that the chariot isode should have been placed at the finish. oming as it does before intermission one antici-tes something even more overwhelming in rill. The concluding reels given up to ancient ttle falter—not so much because they are in-lequate, but because one expected more from em.

The picture is a spectacle of massive sets hich are conspicuous for color, form and bstance. And giving animation to them is a irring romance tinctured with dramatic in-igue and conflict. The glory of ancient dea is presented in a panorama of colors and nsations. It is a kaleidoscopic canvas opled with figures whose impressions have en left centuries after. While it is mostly series of panoramic long shots, the director ows a few intimate glimpses which enable e to catch the atmosphere—to be enthralled so to speak.

The introductory scenes seem hap-hazardly developed at times, which is probably due to a re-arrangement of the sequences with irre-levant incident eliminated. "The Queen of Sheba" is remarkably rich in detail. It always suggests splendor, regal pomp and ceremony. The cast headed by Betty Blythe in the title role and Fritz Lieber as Solomon is absolutely in character throughout.

It is a spectacle which appeals to the eye. The bizarre costuming, the massiveness of the sets, the physical allurement of its feminine figures, the romance and chariot race—these spell an entertainment the power of which cannot be denied.—LAURENCE REID.

"Turkey Dressing"

(Gayety Comedy-Educational)

"TURKEY DRESSING" has plenty of action but is rather lacking in comedy incident. The scenario has one big point but the process of development is rather slow and after it is sprung the amusement ceases.

At first one is liable to suspect that the idea is trite but a surprise is handed when it swings around and does the unforseen.

A young married woman has kidded her husband into the belief that she is a wizard at cooking. The husband carries his belief to the office and breaks the glad tidings to his friends. In the meantime the wife is informed that the boys are coming to dinner and in her endeavor to "make a hit" with her cooking does what a good cook would not do. In other words the ingredients are mixed in such a way that the palate is sure to be disappointed and when it comes to roasting the turkey—and here is the entrance of some good comedy incident—a piece of soap is slipped into the pan by accident and when the bird is taken from the oven and is surrounded by a juicy white foam, the wife in her anxiety to be a success sneeks out of the house—and it is here that the plot shifts and deliberately steals the bird of another woman which is roasting in the latter's house and in her oven, and conveys it to her own table just in time to have it served to the guests.

But the other woman discovers the thief by following the gravy tracks, enters the stealer's house and breaks up the meal.

"Turkey Dressing" will please and give average entertainment.—FRANK LEONARD.

"Miracles of the Jungle"

(Warner Brothers Serial—Produced by Selig—Distributed by Federated)

AFTER "The Lost City," the Selig wild animal serial of a year ago, one looks for some big thrills in its successor. The standard was set and had to be lived up to. And, judging from the first three episodes of "Miracles of the Jungle," the new fifteen episode Warner Brothers serial, produced at the Selig studios, the mark has been reached.

The very opening shot shows a ruined city in Africa with a score of lions sporting amidst its ancient pillars. It does not take long to introduce the two American heroes and from then on the wild animals provide sufficient excitement. Surrounding the men on all sides and snarling about, they get a thrill out of almost any audience. One scene will bring an honest to goodness gasp of fright. It is a close-up of a lion, (or a clever imitation) hugging a man and clawing at his breast.

The first episode is in three reels and plants the story. Mutiny has taken place on a ship carrying passengers and millions in gold, nineteen years before the story opens. The ship is run aground at the mouth of a river in the dark continent, and the few survivors form a little colony of their own. From this colony the two heroines are kidnapped by the villain (the man responsible for the mutiny). They escape to the ruined city, and the second episode starts them on their flight with the two heroes, with friend villain and a horde of blacks hot in pursuit.

The start of this chase, which, we suppose, is to last until the end, promises a wild animal serial which will give ample satisfaction by its thrills and by its jungle background. As an example of a thrill, in the third episode, a leopard is shot in mid-air as he leaps for the back of an elephant.

In one respect does this serial differ from "The Lost City" and that is in the story. There was no magic, or inexplicable, all-powerful super-villain in the first animal serial. But in "Miracles of the Jungle" there is a "See'er of All," who sees all of life mirrored before him in a magic pool, and who cures miraculously and calls down the lightning and thunder at will. Whether this element of mysticism is a benefit or a harm to the serial is debatable. No one looks for probability in a serial, but a high class audience would rather see the action flow out of the evil, but not super-natural, mind of the villain. Voodooism, enchanted pools and such impossibilities cheapen a serial to some audiences, but make it more fascinating to others.

The cast includes Ben Hagerty, Wilbur Higby, who furnishes some comedy relief; Irene Wallace, Genevieve Berte, Al. Ferguson, the villain; Frederic Peters, a gigantic statue, and John George. E. A. Martin wrote and directed the serial. —MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"One Peek Was Plenty"

(Chester Outing-Educational)

THE great outdoors is featured again in this one reeler, the scenes being taken in and about the mountains, valleys and streams of the Canadian Rockies.

This is just the type of a picture, especially at this time of the year to put the patrons in good humor, for the views are sure to exhilarate and refresh.

The campers with their pack horses take up the trail in the opening scenes and follow their course through a wild and rugged country. Now they are crossing a beautiful stream and advancing along its borders until they reach some dense woods which stand out like giant sentinels, compelling the travelers to gaze in wonderment at its beauty and grandeur and again they are encircling the shores of a crystal lake or advancing over some mountainous route thoroughly imbued with the spirit which the wonderful outdoors has given them. And the animals upon which they ride and the ones that carry the packs picture the same enthusiasm.

When the travelers leave their horses and do some risky mountain climbing the spectator is bound to receive a few thrills for the climbers certainly endanger their lives many times before the peak of the mountain is reached.

Interesting Picture of Crooks and Redemption

WHEN the figure of a crook is the protagonist of a story the popular fancy is to bring about his redemption, thus appealing to one's trust in human nature. While such a figure has been presented in screen plays time and again, the novelty of which has worn off through much repetition, it is always a source of entertainment providing the author has utilized adequate incident and action and remembered to strike a redemptive note. Frank R. Adams' story has sure-fire qualities which have been caught by the director and players with the result that it offers good entertainment.

There is quite a novel development to the story which leads up to a suspensive climax. Where most crooks are redeemed before your eyes, the particular type of this tale has found redemption apart from the actual scenes. He has been redeemed off page or off screen. The only task which is his is to keep to the straight and narrow path. That he wanders in the climax is occasion to furnish a surprise. The hero, a butler, has been taken into the home of a wealthy benefactor. The maid is his sweetheart. Thus introduced we sit back and anticipate some lively adventure wondering just how the author will build an effective climax from a pair of crooks completely reformed. A counter play of romance is offered in the young lady of the house who is smitten with the attractive butler. She adores tall, handsome men and her fiance suffers in comparison. There is no beating about the bush here. Every scene is logically established. When one wants a flashback of the hero's life of crime or what brought him to redemption, one is given this episode at the proper time in the story, without the continuity becoming jumbled. He tells his employer that he discovered an honest life the best—that crooks are eventually caught—that he went straight for the sake of his sweetheart. Meanwhile the man of the house is made the party of intrigue by an unscrupulous promoter.

The big punch comes at a reception to the daughter. The schemer invites himself and the butler is advised to interrupt him after a few moments. He overhears the conversation and discovers the damaging evidence being placed in an inner pocket of his coat. So he stages a fake hold-up for no other purpose than to obtain the papers. This done, he makes his get-away in a melodramatic fashion—to be rewarded for serving his employer so faithfully. The picture carries a healthy punch throughout, the incident being lively, the action keyed with good suspense. The interpretation in the hands of Norman Kerry, Zena Keefe, William H. Tooker and Paul Everton is thoroughly adequate. This is a picture which is almost certain to get over.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

What is considered one of the most delightful pictures of the year is "Proxies," a Cosmopolitan production which will be shown at the ———— theatre next ————. The theme deals with criminology and the reformation of a crook who is determined to live straight and who has a hard time realizing his desire. He manages to do so, however, despite his many obstacles and finally wins out in his great struggle. He actually commits a hold-up and risks imprisonment to save his benefactor from falling victim to the wily schemes of another man to make simultaneously a fortune and to break into society.

There are many thrills throughout the action which takes place in a palatial home in which the hero is the butler. As a result of highly dramatic circumstances, the youth proves himself a real man despite his prison record which is raked up for the purpose of ruining him. This role is played by Norman Kerry, who has appeared in support of numerous stars, and who is well known to picture audiences. Zena Keefe, the leading woman, has a highly sympathetic role. The picture was directed by George D. Baker from a story by Frank R. Adams. The production and character portrayals are excellent.

PROGRAM READER

The maid was a crook, the butler a jailbird, and the charming daughter of the house—well, you won't blame the maid for watching her! And when high finance and high society get all tangled up in a love knot—well it's a thrill-romance that snaps like the crack of a whip! This is the brief outline of "Proxies," a picture of daring adventure—a picture that fairly crackles with zip and surprises. The "X" in "Proxies" stands for the unknown quantity—love. The rest of it stands for thrills and adventure. The picture is a Cosmopolitan production and of the same high calibre as "Heliotrope," "Straight Is the Way," and "Buried Treasure." It was written by Frank R. Adams, directed by George D. Baker, and acted by a cast of clever players.

"WHAT'S A WIFE WORTH?"
(Robertson-Cole)

Sob-Sister Story Is Stressed With False Sentiment

ONE cannot call Christy Cabanne's "What's a Wife Worth?" an accurate slice of life despite the earnest sincerity which is back of the effort. There is an attempt to point a moral here, which is indicated in the inquisitive nature of the title, but the author-director has introduced such a banal theme and characterization that the premise upon which it is founded is often lost. We are introduced to a hero who has had independence enough to run away from home. In a small town he encounters the ideal girl and after a modest ceremony brings her back to his erstwhile residence. His father being on the point of death, the youth doesn't advise him of his marriage because of the former's wish that he will marry a girl in his own station of life.

The figure of the youth is not drawn consistently, because he secrets his bride in the house while he entertains lavishly. Mr. Cabanne has attended more to his dramatic complications than he has to realistic touches, for a brother of the girl the father has selected, discovers the youth's marital relations. To keep him silent he is paid off in hush money. Meanwhile the hero is presented as unduly caddish because of the contrasting shots of his wistful bride pining away from neglect and loneliness. A time comes when the vicious brother of the society girl meets the young wife and spreads evil gossip concerning her husband. And she loses sympathy by packing up her duds and leaving the house instead of coming to some understanding. The wife journeys back to her guardian and has a miserable life, what with a baby to rear and sustain herself properly.

The husband obtains a divorce on the grounds of desertion and marries the society girl without expressing any conscience in the matter. She is painted as exactly opposite in temperament to the runaway bride—a woman devoid of mother love. When her baby dies she suffers no pathos. The first wife comes back into the action and leaves her baby at the house without knowing the occupants. An illogical touch. The deception is played upon the father to make him believe that it is the second wife's. But a happy ending is achieved when the forlorn bride comes back through strong maternal love, the reconciliation being effected after the complications are swept aside. The picture is pitched in a morbid key with nary a balancing note of humor or contrast. Mr. Cabanne has woven the story around the power of mother-love but in stressing the sentiment has overstepped the mark. The offering is well staged and acted.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"What's a Wife Worth?" the new production written and directed by William Christy Cabanne, who was the author of "The Stealers," will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ————. The offering is a comedy-drama of the highest type. While it is calculated to send the audience away with something to think about, it cannot be called a sermon or preachment. It discusses a problem of every-day life and while the title puts the question the story of the picture answers it. The theme has to do with the marriage of the son of a wealthy man and a sweet village girl. Conniving parasites and wealth seekers succeed in bringing about an estrangement and divorce. The boy marries again and the village girl is thrown upon her own resources to care for herself and an infant son. The wealthy father dies and the son's second marriage is a rank failure.

The plot has several interesting developments which eventually lead up to a reconciliation of the boy and his first wife. The picture carries a host of interesting scenes which are dramatically effective and reaches a climax of compelling strength. Mr. Cabanne's cast includes Casson Ferguson, Alec Francis, Howard Gaye, Virginia Caldwell, Ruth Renick and others.

PROGRAM READER

"What's a Wife Worth?" is the title of the picture which will be presented at the ———— theatre next ————. This production staged in excellent taste by William Christy Cabanne, the author-director of the artistic picture, "The Stealers," produces a drama of compelling force which is certain to make men and women in every walk of life think deeply. Patrons will see how a bride was concealed in the home of her father-in-law without his knowledge—how circumstances over which they had no control, parted an ideally mated couple—how man gets and forgets and how woman gives and forgives. The picture has a theme based upon romance—a romance which is fraught with deep emotions. A splendid cast interprets the play—a cast that is headed by Casson Ferguson.

SUGGESTIONS

If you played Cabanne's "The Stealers," you have an idea of what constitutes his latest "What's a Wife Worth?" You can announce that the new picture is of the same high calibre of entertainment. You can bill it as a most engrossing play of a marital mix-up. Bill it as a tale of sunbeams and shadows. Hook up with women's stores exploiting the title—"Is Your Wife Worth a New ————?" Start controversies on the interrogative title. Your artist can get out some effective cards for lobby displays. Snipe advertising containing nothing but the bare name of the picture, without mention of the theatre, will be of incalculable benefit to the exhibitor's box-office. A simple prologue based upon a dance would be effective.

"DIANE OF STAR HOLLOW"

(Producers Security Corp.—State Rights)

A Complex Story, Well Acted and Entertaining Because of Action

THE consensus of opinion of this picture will be, we believe, that it belongs to the higher grade of independent offerings. This can be said despite several apparent faults, the chief of which are an unusually complex story, a super-abundance of titles not very humanly written, and the stress laid upon minor incidents which tend to slow up the motion of the story.

What "Diane of Star Hollow" has, however, is a perfectly efficient cast, plenty of action brought about without straining the logic of the plot, and as its basis a dramatic story. There are two characters in the story who make up a counterplot. The main plot could have been developed without them, and as the human interest and romance they supply is not exceptional, they serve only to befuddle the mind. Counterplots whose connection with the main story is of the slimmest sort harm rather than enhance a picture. The titles are not of the appealing type and the dictionary carries no such word as "unsuspicioned."

A really worth while point in the favor of this production is that it pictures a phase of American life seldom touched upon on the screen. And that is life in an Italian colony in the rural districts. The characters are not of the peanut-stand emigrant type, but rather the middle class Italian who has risen to a higher plane of society. One title chides them for their fanatical religious practices. It will not please an Italian-American audience.

Bernard Durning makes an excellent hero. Avoiding the tendency to be too heroic, he is a normal, clean-cut member of the Mounted Police endeavoring to root out a band of criminals. He falls in love with the daughter of the leader of the band. Evelyn Greeley plays the part, and while not a true Italian type, she has a charming screen personality and adds greatly to the romantic spots in the story. The others are all good types and good actors. The story concerns the round up of the criminals, who, though they were suspected of being horse thieves, turn out to be counterfeiters. The action entertains and the picture works up to a good climax with the capture of the band. There are several beautiful exterior shots. It should have a successful career on the independent market.—Length, 6 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

An unusual screen attraction is scheduled for the ———— theatre on ————. It is "Diane of Star Hollow." This picture was made by the same producers who offered the startling success, "When Bearcat Went Dry," not many months ago. Starring in this latest picture is Bernard Durning, who plays the part of a young sergeant of the Pennsylvania Mounted Police.

The picture is filled with interest from beginning to end. The story concerns the activities of a band of counterfeiters and their eventual round-up by the Mounted. Filmed in a wild and mountainous country, there is an admirable background for the thrilling action.

Also in this picture is Evelyn Greeley, who played opposite Durning in "When Bearcat Went Dry," and who here has an attractive role as the daughter of the leader of the band of counterfeiters. She, with Mr. Durning, are an ideal pair of screen lovers, and through their work in this picture, the romantic strain is developed to the highest degree.

"Diane of Star Hollow" is one of those rare productions which reach the screen which carry the audience heart and soul into the atmosphere of the story. It is a picture you will not want to miss. It will be shown at the ———— theatre for ———— days beginning ————.

PROGRAM READER

It is seldom that such an unusual picture as "Diane of Star Hollow" reaches the screen. It faithfully carries the audience into the atmosphere of its story, which is laid in the mountainous country of Pennsylvania. Bernard Durning, well remembered for his work in "When Bearcat Went Dry," plays the leading role and in the cast also is Evelyn Greeley, who played opposite Mr. Durning in his former success. Together they see to it that the romance is not forgotten in a picture that abounds in thrills and excitement.

"Diane of Star Hollow," it is expected, will meet with unusual favor when it appears at the ———— theatre on ————. The public have long been waiting for a picture that is "different," and "Diane of Star Hollow" is all of that. It has all the ingredients of a sure-fire screen success—action, thrills, romance, pathos and humor, and at the same time a logical, clean, and absorbing story.

SUGGESTIONS

"Diane of Star Hollow" has the same two principals who played in "When Bearcat Went Dry." If you have played this picture it would be well to mention this fact, also stating that the same producers made the two pictures. Bernard Durning is now a director, but he has played in several pictures recently as a star. Try to get over the atmosphere of the story in your ad copy, mentioning that it concerns the activities of the Mounted Police. The title has not a poetic sound, but certainly an appealing one, and the stickers illustrated in the press book should be useful.

"THE OATH"

(Mayflower-First National)

Rather Disappointing in Spite of Faultless Production

"THE OATH" is rather disappointing in spite of the fact that the plot is unusual and that it has been splendidly acted, excellently staged and very well directed. Why the production misses fire does not seem apparent unless one is to examine closely the way the story has been developed.

Basically as picture material this is a mystery story founded on the "Who committed the murder?" idea, but the mystery part of the tale is given small development, with the hero, whom the audience knows positively to be innocent of the crime for which he is arrested, because he is the hero, the only one ever connected with the affair. Also the love interest is obvious, since the story concerns two couples married soon after the picture begins. The only question then is how will the scenaroist get the two estranged couples back together again, and this is a long time in the telling, involving a trial for murder in which Conway Tearle is acquitted on the perjured evidence of his friend, while his wife remains silent.

There is a trace of an underlying thought in the picture that when told in William J. Locke's novel, "Idols," from which this was adapted, no doubt overshadowed the circumstantial evidence part of the story; but this has not been and could not be made an integral part of the photoplay. Even as the picture stands there are too many titles, most of which were absolutely necessary to explain what the scenes were about.

This is a drama without a villain and a mystery story with a murder never explained. It is because of this apparent paradox that as a picture "The Oath" presents shortcomings.

However, it is quite possible that the splendid production and the popular cast may make up for the faults mentioned and in consequence audiences probably will find the picture interesting.—Length, 7806 ft.—J. S. Dickerson.

THE CAST

Minna Hart ..... Miriam Cooper
Israel Hart ..... Robert Fischer
Hugh Coleman ..... Conway Tearle
Gerard Merriam ..... Henry Clive
Anna Cassaba ..... Ricca Allen
Irene Lansing ..... Anna Q. Nilsson

Adapted from the novel "Idols," by William J. Locke. Edited and titled by Ralph Spence. Directed by R. A. Walsh.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Announcement is made of the booking of "The Oath," an adaptation of William J. Locke's famous novel, "Idols," for the ———— theatre for a ———— days' engagement beginning ————.

"The Oath" is a First National attraction directed by R. A. Walsh with an all star cast of unusual talents and reputation.

In the leading roles are Miriam Cooper and Conway Tearle, while in supporting parts are to be found Anna Q. Nilsson, Henry Clive, Robert Fischer and Ricca Allen.

The picture is a strong drama presenting a problem that perhaps always arises when a Gentile marries a Jewess, with the dramatic incident supplied by the fact that the wife's father is murdered and the husband accused of the crime on circumstantial evidence. Among the features of the picture is an English court scene most painstakingly produced.

The picture has been most artistically produced and stands as a perfect example of what an all star production should be. Each role is played with a skill that sets a new standard in screen acting.

"The Oath" is one of First National's "Big Five" productions and is presented as a super feature of real worth.

PROGRAM READER

The ———— theatre announces for its feature film for the engagement beginning ————, "The Oath," a Mayflower-R. A. Walsh production adapted from the famous novel by William J. Locke, "Idols" and one of First National's "Big Five" series, along with "The Kid," "Man—Woman—Marriage," etc.

"The Oath" is a combination of a problem play and a mystery story. The problem is built on an instance of a Gentile marrying a Jewess and the mystery part of the picture is in connection with as to who murdered the wife's father, of which the husband is unjustly accused.

The picture has many well constructed dramatic climaxes and will hold the attention of the most hardened audience.

SUGGESTIONS

Make much of the novel from which this picture has been adapted with extra emphasis on the all star cast and R. A. Walsh as director. Play up the "Big Five" idea linking the picture with the other First Nationals of the quintet, especially "The Kid" and "Man—Woman—Marriage." If you don't think your patrons object to English stories there is an opportunity to exploit the English court room scene with perhaps a prologue built on it. Stage plays that have such scenes are "The Butterfly on the Wheel" and Barrie's "Legend of Leonoria." Both are obtainable from booksellers, from which good ideas may be obtained for an original number.

CATCH LINES

Another "Big Five" production that equals "The Kid" and "Man—Woman—Marriage" in point of entertainment and originality. A big picture from a great novel enacted by a notable cast.

A great picture from a world famous novel, "Idols," by William J. Locke, directed by R. A. Walsh and enacted by an exceptional all star cast.

Presenting the age old problem, shall the Jew and Gentile marry? A vivid dramatic story of four people whose lives were linked by love and tradition.

Simple Heart Interest Picture Carries Some Appeal

ONE can always bank upon a story in which is incorporated a juvenile hero as something which carries a strong heart interest appeal. Wise is the author who can point a sufficient contrast between a brutal parent and his tender offspring. By simply stressing the conflict the drama is made effective with those patrons who indulge in sentiment. The first reel of this offering seems unnecessarily frank in pointing the contrast. A deal of "close-up" action is presented with a brutal father known as "Whisky Joe," deliberately going out of his way to punish his ragged child. This is all very effective in emphasizing the pathos of the youngster's life, nevertheless, it is unpleasant to witness.

The lad and his dog run away to be adopted by a kind family. Before this is accomplished some incident is offered concerning the tiny hero's adventure in a box-car and with a group of tramps. The unkempt gentry are lugged off to a courtroom by a comedy sheriff and the boy tugs at the heart-strings with his tale of torture. The next element introduced is the romance with his benefactor failing to respond to the subtle advances of a girl also a figure of adoption in the same house. The brutal, drunken father takes to the ties and houses himself in a deserted shack. When he goes begging for food the author's discretion allows him to call at the new home of his boy. With the grown-ups all away he steals the family plate and kidnaps the child. The girl spies him and going to the rescue is about to be made a victim of the brute's lustful nature, when the hero appears and saves the two orphans.

The picture is incidental in action, though there is a semblance of continuity in the scenes. The tiny star and his white bull terrier, the railroad atmosphere, the dominant note of heart interest—these are sufficient to compel attention of these who are free from hard-boiled attitudes. Reeves Eason, Jr. (commonly known as Breezy) is a precocious youngster before the camera and plays his part to the manner born. He is one of the few child players who is able to interpret juvenile character without impressing the spectator with the idea that he is being constantly coached. He is never camera conscious. "The Big Adventure," as a title, is sort of misleading, but it carries enough dramatic values to satisfy the onlooker. There is not much to it and it is quite overdrawn, but it serves its purpose. The supporting cast is adequate.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

Directed by Reaves Eason.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Breezy" Eason, the four year old youngster, who is causing a sensation through his marked talent, will be the principal attraction at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week in "The Big Adventure." The story deals with a little waif of the slums who runs away from a brutal stepfather and gets into an amazing tangle of adventures. He hops a freight train accompanied by his faithful dog, Mickey, and the spectator next finds him hobnobbing with a party of tramps in a neighboring town. When the latter are arrested and taken to court, the waif is permitted his liberty upon the condition that he is adopted.

A young lawyer takes him out to his home and places him under the guardianship of his sister. There it is that the youngster meddles in a love affair between his benefactor and an orphan girl living in the house. When he is kidnapped by his stepfather, the girl goes to the rescue. But she is made a victim until the lawyer takes matters into his own hands and effects their escape. The picture is marked for its human touches which punctuate the action in nearly every scene. The star's father, Reaves Eason, has given the picture adequate direction. The supporting cast is excellent.

PROGRAM READER

A kid and a dog will be featured in "The Big Adventure," the Universal picture which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— and ————. For those who like kids and dogs (and who doesn't), it will be a delightful entertainment. It is a picture of a tiny waif who manages to find happiness with his dog despite the brutality of his stepfather. The action takes him on a freight train when he runs away from home, places him in company with a group of tramps, permits him to be adopted by a kind family, allows him to meddle in a love affair, and finishes by showing him rescued from a cruel adventure. The picture is well filled with human touches and sends out a sympathetic chord in its presentation. Breezy Eason, declared to be one of the real talented juveniles of the screen, is starred.

SUGGESTIONS

You can get out some effective posters on black compo board describing the merits of this picture. A good stunt would be to erect blackboards around your lobby and dialogue written on them in the vernacular of a boy ignorant of good spelling, etc. Twisting the letters about will invite attention. Have your artist paint a likeness of a ragged boy and a bull terrier. This would be a good exploitation idea too. Another good stunt would be to have an artist draw the outline of a foot and under it paint the sign: "Breezy Eason, Jr. (His Mark). The blackboard looks like the best bet, and it can be filled with funny drawings supposed to represent a youngster's idea of drawing. Use the idea for newspaper space also. Bill it as a most interesting heart interest drama presenting a wonderful child actor.

CATCH LINES

Come and see the child wonder, Breezy Eason, Jr., in "The Big Adventure." A picture of heart tugs and juvenile adventure.

"WHAT HAPPENED TO ROSA"
(Goldwyn)

Mabel Has a Mediocre One Here

IT'S a difficult task trying to find a point of interest in Mabel Normand's latest picture, "What Happened to Rosa?" The comedienne who has established a healthy following through her ability to burlesque life, an ability appreciated by those who have witnessed her in some past successes, has a sorry time trying to put over a woefully weak comedy effort. It may be that there are patrons who will find amusement in the offering. If so they will be picturegoers who are easily satisfied. The story is so palpably pointless—so devoid in incident and action—so hopelessly overstretched—that it doesn't seem to have a chance with the majority who patronize the screen. In fact it is quite juvenile in theme and characterization, relying entirely upon a single-track plot which is stretched to the limit to keep it going.

Given half a chance the star can always score, but the burden of "What Happened to Rosa?" nearly overwhelms her. The principal figure is a drab clerk whose days spent behind a department store counter, and whose nights, dragged out in a furnished room, are sufficient to make her an unromantic figure. She dreams of an ideal and taking advantage of a customer whose profession is fortune telling, she is told that she is the reincarnated spirit of a Spanish senorita. If she will believe in this hokus-pokus romance will come to her. So the star is permitted to flit from one disguise to another. It is all very simple and naive. The interest is never sustained because the plot is so frothy. Miss Normand indulges in some familiar slapstick when she cuts up a caper or two, but the tiny thread of story is so tender that she never has a chance to get into character.

The pointless plot will be appreciated when the spectator takes into account the steamboat excursion and the star's efforts to find romance. She goes attired as a Spanish senorita, jumps into the water, exchanges clothes with an alley ragamuffin, and bounces into the hero's office. This is the height of juvenile high jinks. After locking herself in an inner chamber she spies her Carmenesque costume, which was picked up by the doctor when she took the plunge, and arranging a quick change emerges as the senorita again. Thus the hero discovers that she is the girl who charmed him on the boat. One can see the end approaching from the first reel in this picture of spineless incident. The offering is the last of the star's Goldwyn releases.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Mabel Normand, the Goldwyn comedienne, will make her appearance at the ———— theatre next ———— in "What Happened to Rosa," a picture calculated to rouse the risibilities of an audience because of its consistent vein of humor and its laugh provoking incident. The star plays the part of a department store clerk whose drab existence behind the counter in the daytime and in her poorly furnished flat at night prevents any romance coming to her. Her imagination colors her life however, and as she scans the magazines she wonders if she will ever fall in love with a dark, handsome man. A seeress visits the store on a bargain day and leaves her card.

The girl taking advantage of it calls and is told that romance will come to her if she will believe that she is a Spanish senorita in the spirit. The clerk finds the correct costume and attends a masquerade ball on the excursion steamer and actually falls in love with the man of her heart. The picture is a quaint little study in romance and affords the spectator plenty of amusement. Miss Normand contributes a colorful performance and is well supported by Hugh Thompson and others. Victor Schertzinger directed from a story by Pearl Curran.

PROGRAM READER

She had never known romance. Working all day behind the stocking counter in a department store wasn't conducive to entertaining romance. And going home of a night to a furnished room didn't help matters much. So the girl conjured up romance from her imagination. She was told by a seeress that she was the reincarnation of a Spanish senorita and if she believed herself as such romance would come to her. And the girl believed and fell in love—fell in love with a dark, handsome man. This is by way of explaining the story or synopsis of Mabel Normand's latest photoplay, "What Happened to Rosa," which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. It is a charming, quaint study in romance—a romance tinctured with a fine flavor. And the star contributes a colorful interpretation.

SUGGESTIONS

You can bill this as an appropriate study for the Goldwyn comedienne. Bring out that it offers a quaint romance—one born from the imagination. Present stills of the star in her various disguises here. Tell that she will afford much amusement. You can stage a prologue in imitation of the Capitol, New York. This theatre staged a setting after a department store counter on bargain day with an ensemble of clerks, floorwalkers, and customers, bustling about singing an appropriate number. Use appropriate music with a Spanish theme dominant throughout. Ask your patrons in circular letters or through a teaser campaign if they believe in fortune tellers. Immediately following state that Mabel Normand believed in them to her advantage.

CATCH LINES

The fortune teller told her she was the reincarnation of a Spanish senorita and that she would have a lovely romance. See Mabel Normand in "What Happened to Rosa."

tures of the presentation. When this pistol shot was fired, so great was the tension in the audience that several women screamed and the picture was forgotten for almost a minute.

Such experiences as these have caused us to eliminate all "effects" except on comedies, and it is a question whether most comedies should be treated as lightly as they are. Comedies, however, are another subject. We are now dealing with features. . . .

Musicians are apt to make a mistake in thinking that their audience hears every number that is being played and that if the number is used too frequently the audience will complain that the same thing is being played over and over again. For as a matter of fact, if the proper setting is played to each picture, the audience won't know what is being played because the music is so thoroughly in harmony with the thought back of the picture that it doesn't attract attention to itself and becomes a part of the picture.

In viewing a picture, a musician should realize that certain scenes are taken to bring out a certain part of the story. Frequently, wonderful scenes are made which are most elaborate, but which are used simply to bring out one small but vital part of the story. We refer particularly to ballroom scenes. Very few, if any, ballroom scenes are taken just to show a lot of people dancing. When you stop to think of it, it would be very uninteresting just to see a picture of a lot of people dancing. Now these wonderful ballroom scenes are invariably taken to show some subtle dramatic emotion that is vital to the story. The musician should carefully note such action and give it full support because if dance music only is played on such scenes, it is almost sure to cover up the dramatic action and make it weak and, in fact, keep it from registering at all. Here is a place where the average musician is carried away by the beauty of the scene into playing some wonderful dance number by "what's-his-name" and it is more often a serious mistake than otherwise.

Paramount cue sheets are prepared with the sole object of giving the story of the feature the kind of support that makes the story seem real, that enables every slight dramatical bit to "register" to its full, and when these cue sheets are lowered literally, it will be found that the attention is never attracted to the music of itself, but on the contrary is wholly on the picture—WHERE IT BELONGS!

Paramount cue sheets always carry a substitute column which enables any musical director to choose his own selections instead of the numbers specified, but tells him what kind of music should be used.

The references made above to musicians, temperaments and mistakes are not made in a spirit of criticism but rather in a spirit of endeavoring to show that a musician, in order to play the pictures properly, must forget himself or his ideals and give the picture the front stage.

E. Henry Silas, Organist, Garden Theatre, Charleston, South Carolina

Born in Paris, in 1865, and comes of a widely known musical family. His mother, a vocal and instrumental instructress, was for many years connected with the Grand Opera in Paris (Classes d' ensemble); as accompanist. The late Madam Marchesi solicited her aid as accompanist, admiring her perfect work. Edward Silas, of London, was the uncle of Mr. Silas, composer, and practically the private organist of Queen Victoria during his lifetime.

Mr. E. Henry Silas, from a child of seven, developed a surprising faculty for memorizing and improvising music, to the dismay of his mother; who, being a scholar of the old school, objected to liberties being taken with the compositions of the masters. His mother was his instructress during her lifetime. Later, Mr. Silas studied medicine and was finishing his course, when military law compelled him to join his Colors. Mr. Silas served five years in the French Army; three years in the Military Band of his cavalry company. In recognition of good services, the French Government sent him as Assistant Commissioner to Chicago, to the World's Fair, in 1893. At the conclusion of the exhibition, Mr. Silas decided to make his home in America. Trying business life for a time, and finding himself unfit for any work other than his vocation—music—Mr. Silas returned to his old love, and is today considered one of the best artists in his profession.

More Cues For Short Reel Subjects

In slightly different style, please note how I am trying to give the conductor full liberty and yet a quite explicit set of instructions for the quaint reel, "Thrills."

"THRILLS"

The musical director will be in his glory in this picture. It is an opportunity such as he adores. He can, if he is so inclined, use his ideas of imitation to the limit. Here is an instance where it would be perfectly agreeable to imitate every single move in the film. No matter what happens, it can be exaggerated with a musical trick in this case. Of course, the pianist has the advantage over the big orchestra in this respect, because he can "go the limit," without writing an elaborate score.

What I wish to do in this particular synopsis is to enable the director to see his opportunity rather than indicate anything hard and fast (although it could be used just as it is).

FOR A BIG ORCHESTRA

I want to organize a group within the orchestra—say some second violins, violas, a 'cello, a bass, drums—this group to play a "neutral growl" all through the film. The director can write a "growl." What I mean is a single phrase that agitates like below. Now, no matter what else is done, the growl, monotonous, almost maddening (surely to the men who play it) must be continued. It must be loud enough to be very prominent. It must be flexible—thus the conductor must swell it, diminish it, chop it, agitate it, dull it, as the picture indicates. Thus, in the first situation, adapt it as below to bring out its sickening stomach sensation. In the skating episode, snow falling, hundred miles an hour, put it as below: In shooting rapids, it is to be staccato, etc. It can be made awfully funny and can get the audience up on its feet.

Against the background just indicated, all the ideas can be used as follow herewith for

SMALLER ORCHESTRA

"They call this the top." Bring out your jazz hounds and let the saxaphone shriek——taking the climaxes with a long whop; play the fiercest craziest, jazzy ragtime (at your own discretion).

At title "Ski-jumping," "Ride of the Valkyrs" (Walkure), speeding it up and up to the climax of the "One Hundred Miles an Hour." At title "Thrills and Bumps" play "Funeral March of a Marionette," (use the bass drum freely). At title "Sky Sign Building"—dead silence of everything—all through this episode. (This effect will be truly startling and will create an intense suspense.)

At title "Retarding Wild Waves" climax from "Flying Dutchman" overture. (Use the wind backstage.) At title "Marooned" use Grieg's "Ase's Death." At "Fireman Life Saving Method"—return to "Ride of the Valkyrs."

At title "Candidate for the Hereafter" return to "Funeral March of a Marionette" (make it very much accented and ritardo, also burlesque as much as possible).

At title "Felling a Smoke-Stack" revert to "Ride of the Valkyrs," but instruct the drummers and tympanists to rumble up to a big climax where the chimney falls.

At title "Destroying Booze" use "Drink to me only with thine eyes" (burlesque) with a sudden bang on drums at blow-up.

From title "Dynamiting" use Valkyr music right to end of locomotive crash—using plenty of drums and cymbals.

At "America" play the national anthem to the end.

Note.—Use lots of ritardos, accelerandos, and pauses at every thrill—where they fit best.

FOR SMALL ORCHESTRAS

Substitute—Instead of "Valkyrs" music use any music that mounts to a climax—thus, Rachmaninoff's C minor Prelude (middle part).

Instead of "Ase's Death" music of solemn, such as "There she goes, on her toes, all dressed up in her Sunday clothes."

Instead of "Dutchman" use Rachmaninoff's C minor Prelude.

Instead of "Ase's Death?" music of solemn, still, minor strain.

Stage setting of the Capitol theatre, St. Paul, used in connection with the engagement of Katherine Stang, violinist. Lowell Calvert is managing director

For goodness sake be warned against the extravagance of cheapness!

The important thing about any purchase is not what you get for the purchase price. The "cheap" purchase is usually the most extravagant.

Simply and briefly: The relation of first cost to final economy is the important thing.

Producers, distributors and exhibitors generally concede that Rothacker Prints are the most desirable from the standpoint of screen brilliancy, security, service and general satisfaction. As a matter of fact, the many savings in Rothacker Prints and Rothacker Service soon cancel the slight difference in first cost over less beautiful and less durable prints.

There are many who still believe that Rothacker Prints are "too expensive" but actually this is not the case. You will probably be very much surprised to learn how little more Rothacker Prints really cost.

POSTER EXAMPLES

NOTHING short of a mirror could equal a RITCHEY poster in revealing the full beauty of Kay Laurell's face and form. The advantage that the RITCHEY poster has over the mirror lies in the fact that the poster can be displayed in the exhibitor's lobby. So displayed it is bound to attract every person to whom a beautiful woman appeals, – and the appeal of feminine beauty is practically universal. The one, three, and six sheet from the set for Kay Laurell in "Lonely Heart" are reproduced herewith.

This is the girl whose beauty tore the world in twain—whose fascination gained her a crown—whose royal romance shook an empire to its foundations—whose story will be remembered as long as men and women love!

"Dece

A DRAMA that rolls up the curtain of time, and there, alive, are the loves, the intrigues, the pomp and power of the two most romantic figures ever born in the history of the world.

THE WOMAN: A dream of alluring beauty, winning a king, dethroning a queen, dividing a kingdom!

THE MAN: The most irresistible wooer in history! Husband of eight wives! Bluff King Henry VIII, with his roaring laughter, his wild pastimes, his regal glory.

For ten years you have watched the growth of the motion picture. Deception is one of the screen's great masterpieces.

REVEALING the intimate secrets of the royal romance that changed the course of civilization. The love picture unforgettable, moving through scenes that in sweep and splendor have never been approached in motion picture art.

Made by Europe's foremost director, the man who created "Passion." With a cast of 7,000, headed by Henny Porten, the screen's greatest emotional actress, and Emil Jannings, the king of "Passion."

Seven months in the making. Whole cities, cathedrals, palaces, abbeys, built on a stupendous scale.

And throbbing through all the gigantic splendor and spectacle is the heartbeat of the girl who came to be the mother of a queen!

DAVID WARK GRIFFITH'S "DREAM STREET"

A Dramatic Comedy Suggested by Characters of Thomas Burke

Things We Can Prove And Defy Anyone To Disprove

TO THE EXHIBITORS:

This day of high competition leads to aggressive battles in advertising, through the press, word of mouth and every possible means of communication.

What follows is not an idle statement:

Four years ago, the Washington Herald said: "Griffith is the only producer who can put his pictures into the theaters at two dollars, and have them so satisfy the public that he can keep his pictures there."

This is as true today as when it was written, despite all words to the contrary.

Anyone who has the money to spend can bring pictures into New York, advertise them heavily; and if they do not meet the public's approval, continue at a loss as long as the money holds out.

But from one end of the country to the other, "THE BIRTH OF A NATION," "HEARTS OF THE WORLD" and "WAY DOWN EAST," have had profitable engagements in each and every city played, including New York; and these ARE STILL THE ONLY pictures that have done this. If you think otherwise, YOU ARE BEING DECEIVED.

"DREAM STREET," Mr. Griffith's latest picture, has met with exactly the same reception as his other plays. "HEARTS OF THE WORLD," when first shown, did not make a big impression. The critical comment said it was not another "Birth of a Nation."

Even the men who had managed "The Birth of a Nation" refused to manage this play because they said it would never be successful. Yet, until the war suddenly ended, it was one of the most successful plays ever produced. Almost as successful as had been "The Birth of a Nation."

When "Way Down East" came out, the same criticisms were made—that it was not another "Birth of a Nation." They were waiting for the Ku Klux Klan to come, and did not see the climax that was to be as powerful to the people as the famous ride.

And now with "Dream Street" the same is said again, only this time it is compared to "Way Down East" which the critics NOW accept as a classic; apparently forgetting what was said when it was first shown.

"Dream Street" is not another "Way Down East." It is an entirely different picture. But the great masses, including the swaggerest people from Fifth Avenue and the equally important people of other streets, not so well dressed, have flocked to see it. Up to the sixth night (when this is written) more people have been turned away than from any picture in history. True, the Ku Klux do not ride to the rescue, nor is there a great ice flow—but there is SOMETHING. Perhaps even greater than these.

There Is A Grandeur About "Dream Street" That Floods The Heart

It appeals to the highest decencies and the cleanest longings. It awakens Faith—and Hope—and Love—and brings a serene certainty into the hearts of the public.

As the astute critic for "Variety"—Mr. Rush, says:

"It will have a following as great, if not greater, than anything Mr. Griffith has done."

Mr. Weller, of the N. Y. Review, finds it: "A sparkling gem—a thing of rare distinction. Other pictures seem like trash when classed with Mr. Griffith's; and 'Dream Street' is a masterpiece."

"In popularity, it should be a 'Main Street' of the films."—N. Y. Sun.

The proof of this picture's power is not based only on the Broadway showing, where its success is truly sensational.

It has been tried in the picture theaters.

In Middletown, New York, the second night drew within fourteen dollars as much as the second night for "Way Down East"—and this was the last week in Lent.

At Yonkers, after the matinee showing, thousands of people clamored that night for seats—hundreds stood and not a person left.

It is, indeed, a picture for the people, high and low.

The Players Know That Secret Language of the Screen

In the leading roles are:

Ralph Graves as James "Spike" McFadden, who conquers the girls with his golden voice, and the men with his bold fists, and reigns king of the district.

"I have seen no better screen actor than Ralph Graves. He has dash, youth, facial expression and wonderful magnetism."—Alan Dale in N. Y. American.

Miss Carol Dempster as Gypsy Fair—the dancing girl, who is gentle, brave and gay, swift and restless as a bird—with velvet eyes and lyric body.

"Miss Dempster easily attains first rank as a Griffith leading lady."—N. Y. Telegram.

"She is youth personified, a type with intelligence."—N. Y. Journal.

Charles Emmett Mack, hailed as the greatest of recent Griffith "finds," appears as the younger brother, weak, wistful, glorious with talent; but capable of——

DAVID WARK GRIFFITH'S "DREAM STREET"

The Story

is laid in a large city; probably London, with its fogs and mysterious streets of adventure.

It is a dramatic comedy. The players walk the dim streets, perhaps with their faces turned to the Evening Star.

Love and great dreams are there; startling action and bursts of strange adventure.

The Many Sets

More than in any picture Mr. Griffith has made.

"The sets should be the envy of any producer in this country or of any other."—N. Y. Post.

"Interiors have soft, elusive corners. Exteriors have the touch such as artists achieve in great paintings."—N. Y. Telegram.

"Again Griffth is the master at making scenes which hold the eye and command interest."—N. Y. Times.

The Photography and Music

"The witchery of the very beautiful scenes is increased by the musical scoring."—N. Y. Globe.

"The photography is so beautiful you wonder if you have ever seen such wonderful effects, certainly only in Mr. Griffith's pictures."—N. Y. Tribune.

Achievement!

Few authors have so richly contributed to the progress of the screen drama as has Marion Fairfax during the past six years —and fewer have been so closely identified with the actual production of their writings.

The pen of this noted writer and dramatist has played an important part in the success of productions by Marshall Neilan, William De Mille, Mary Pickford and Lasky pictures.

"Dinty," "Go and Get It," "Bob Hampton of Placer," "The River's End," "Through the Back Door" and "The Honor of His House" are but a few of these record-breaking attractions.

As a dramatist a half dozen Broadway successes were her creations. Her work for Charles Frohman, Winston Churchill, Maxine Elliott, Henry B. Harris and other eminent exponents of the drama assures for Marion Fairfax Productions that solid foundation on which can only be built the structure of genuine screen entertainment.

Philadelphia Has Proved Again that "Dream Street" is a $2 Show

Opening with nine reels at the Chestnut Street House, the first showing was truly a triumph in popularity.

It stands today a tried and successful road attraction, strong enough for runs in the regular theatres.

But the Exhibitor, just as Mr. Griffith has always planned, will get the first opportunity in his territory, through release by the United Artists Corporation.

Philadelphia's Critics say:

"Another Griffith to hang in the screen's art gallery."—Philadelphia North American.

"Inspired, dignified, distinctive, full of incident, humorous, superb in photography, it commands interest."—North American.

"The picture is amply worth a place in that gallery where 'The Birth of a Nation' hangs."—Philadelphia Inquirer.

"Touches the heart of every beholder, for a love that is transcendent animates the tale; and presents a new aspect of the greatest of human emotions."—Philadelphia Record.

"The scene between the two brothers is perhaps the strongest emotional acting that the local screens have had."—Philadelphia Ledger.

"FOR TIME REMEMBERED IS GRIEF FORGOTTEN"

When "Way Down East" was first shown, memories of other Griffith triumphs were so vigorous that some critics could not accept the new with the enthusiasm they had for the old. Such phrases as "proceeds too slowly," "illusion of reality destroyed," "undesirable impressions," "manufactured enthusiasm" scattered through the reviews.

But Here Is the Public's Answer to These Criticisms

Just What— And Why?

¶ Just what and why is trade paper advertising?

To be frank, we don't believe many executives in our field really know; and in some cases, having employed advertising managers who do, they restrict these men's ability to produce best results.

Our query as to why advertising has recently been cut has met, in almost every case, with the answer: "Because the other fellow has cut his."

From which we take it that the advertiser advertises because, and as, the other fellow does.

Which is one and a weak reason.

* * * *

Trade paper advertising is a simple matter.

It doesn't consummate sales; it never did.

The field sales force does that; always did, and always will, with any product.

But trade paper advertising puts force in the sales force. It introduces the salesman, argues for him, backs him up, gives him a surer footing, holds up his morale.

It can be written so as to sell pictures to the public through the exhibitor.

It supports many editorial departments which schedule and merchandize pictures.

It is selling service straight through.

* * * *

We take the stand today, so far as MOTION PICTURE NEWS is concerned, that it is not a question of whether or no the advertiser should use it but only how he can use it to hi best advantage—to his profit.

It costs nearly half a million dollars a year to produce thi paper. The exhibitor wants it, pays for it, uses it, files it. I is the strongest, straightest avenue to him. No one can argu otherwise.

The advertiser who isn't using this avenue to his fulles opportunity is simply not selling his picture as successfully a he can. He isn't backing his salesman.

* * * *

Some advertisers are doing this—not watching the othe fellow—and they are talking prosperity.

Attention: Mr. J. D. Williams, Manager.

Gentlemen:

It has come to my attention that stories are being circulated in the various territories to the effect that MR. CHARLES RAY has decided to place the pictures produced by him and in which he stars with some other distributing organization than First National at the termination of his present contract with you.

Such statements by anyone are absolutely false. They have no basis in fact whatever.

In presenting all of MR. RAY'S pictures produced by him for First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc. I am well informed as to his attitude. I know it is his intention not only to renew his contract with First National if satisfactory arrangements are offered next fall, which he feels is the proper time for considering this matter, but to continue with you as long as business relations shall be mutually satisfactory.

You are authorized to use this letter and the facts in the form they are given in any manner you see fit.

Yours very truly,

VOL. XXIII APRIL 30, 1921 No. XIX

Take the Initiative

THE exhibitors of a city in New York State found themselves, recently, in a jam with the local churches.

The trouble was started by a leading evening paper. The paper was carrying about thirty thousand dollars a year in exhibitor advertising, but saw fit to extend little or no cooperation and at times to take a "highbrow" editorial dig at pictures.

The exhibitors, at length, met, discussed the situation and decided to transfer their advertising bodily to a progressive morning paper.

At this juncture the evening paper entered into an open campaign of antagonism—the usual uninformed and unfair attack against pictures. The Ministerial Association of the city was called upon to take measures which would rid the city of what were styled unfit pictures.

The exhibitors, without waiting, invited the Ministerial Association to a joint conference. The conference was arranged. A reporter of the evening paper pushed his way into the meeting but was invited to leave by the Ministerial Association.

At the opening of the conference, the exhibitors asked for suggestions and evidenced unanimously a spirit of open-mindedness and conciliation.

They, however, laid down the following tenets:

Pictures are here to stay.

They must be commercially successful.

If any regulation is needed it need be only local.

Local regulation may be satisfactorily had through a spirit and practice of understanding and cooperation between the theatres and churches. The exhibitors asked for this cooperation.

They would be glad, they stated, to meet frequently with the clergy, discuss bookings, and consider suggestions. They would run pictures asked for by the Ministerial Association and suggested that, in this event, their pictures be recommended from the pulpits of the city.

The upshot of the conference was most satisfactory. Today complete harmony exists and the newspaper which started the rumpus has reversed its tactics.

There are other towns in the country where the same sympathetic relations have been established between the theatre, churches and women's and civic organizations.

And there are few localities where this contact cannot be had.

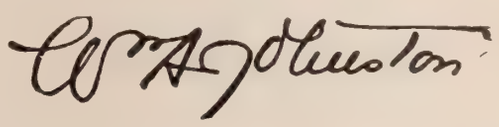
The exhibitor, however, as we have pointed out, must take the initiative. When the other side takes it, there is always trouble for the simple reason that they approach the exhibitor uninformed or misinformed about pictures and the public taste for them, about censorship, about the exhibitor's business problems.

To our mind the matter of local regulation—local option we might call it—is the immediate answer to state censorship. And it is the exhibitor's answer.

There is a public demand today for some sort of regulation of pictures. Those who favor regulation, however, find themselves supporting censorship, when they don't understand what it means, don't realize its falsity, its menace and don't know that local control everywhere is possible and can handle every element of the situation.

This, as we say, is the exhibitor's answer to censorship. It is also his answer to the problem of Sunday closing.

But it is more than that. It is his way to take a solid and prominent place in his community, a place he sooner or later must take. He is handling the greatest of all mediums of expression. He is a moulder of public opinion. His responsibilities are great—greater even than those of the school teacher, the editor, the preacher. He must work with his public, be right in the center of it so that he can constantly know and reflect its spirit, its aims and its best requirements.



Our Real Stand on the Tariff

THE New York Globe in a recent editorial says that "the proposed tariff on films is a tariff on intelligence."

The Globe refers to the recent success of the German-made pictures, "Passion," "Deception" and "The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari," and says that any effort to protect the American motion picture industry against European pictures of such artistic excellence is an effort to keep "Los Angeles unintelligent and inartistic."

"Publishing," says the Globe, "is an industry, but we do not see printers and publishers walking about exclaiming: 'We must have protection against Mr. Wells and Mr. Galesworthy and Mr. Bennett. They do better novels than our American authors and throw us out of work.'

"The Germans have worked toward the artistic and the motion picture trades propose to prevent them from bringing a class of films here which might stimulate our producers to do better work."

The Globe is right in its contention, but wrong in its premises. The American producer, distributor and exhibitor takes no such stand at all against European film.

The stand the industry does take on tariff legislation, as pointed out in a recent newspaper statement by Wm. A. Brady, is just this: If Germany insists upon shutting out American films, as Germany practically does at present, then we must protect ourselves by reciprocal legislation.

That is the protection we want, not protection against art competition.

The New York Times says: "Mr. Willam A. Brady's statement on the proposal to put a heavy tariff on moving pictures imported from Germany is sensible. At present, he says, German restrictions keep out the great majority of films made in America; and until Germany gives a fair chance to American films America might retaliate. Further than that, apparently, he would not go."

WM. A. JOHNSTON.

Samuel Goldwyn Returns from Europe May 1

Samuel Goldwyn, president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, will be back in New York, May 1st, after a European trip which included England, France, Spain, Italy and Germany.

Mr. Goldwyn went abroad in February to become acquainted with the latest developments in motion picture conditions in England and on the Continent, and to perfect arrangements for a wider distribution of Goldwyn pictures on the foreign market. He met Arthur Ziehm, manager of foreign sales for the Goldwyn Company, in Berlin, and together they visited the principal studios of Germany, Italy and France.

Pathe Closes Biggest Year in Its Career

The closing of the fiscal year of Pathe Exchange, Inc., on February 28th, discloses remarkable gains in the volume of business of this pioneer distributor, it is stated by that organization.

According to statements just made public, Pathe Exchange, Inc., business for the year just closed was $14,700,000 as against $9,800,000 the previous year, and $6,275,000 two years ago, showing a gain of 135 per cent over the receipts of two years ago, and 38 per cent over those of one year ago.

MY DEAR MR. JOHNSTON: May I take this opportunity of congratulating you on the editorial published in the Motion Picture News on April 23, entitled "Fight! Fight! Fight!" You have hit the nail on the head.

The motion picture industry and all its branches must, in the future, come to some sort of an agreement whereby "unified and harmonious consolidation of every branch within this industry and every individual within each branch" shall work for mutual protection.

Very truly yours,
WM. A. BRADY.

Eddie Lyons in New York

Eddie Lyons, ranked for years with the front rank of screen comedians, is in New York for a brief stay preparatory to launching his own producing company. Lyons is planning a series of short comedies of a high class nature and release arrangements are to be concluded while he is in New York.

For nine years Lyons has been known to theatregoers and picture patrons as the front portion of the popular team name "Lyons and Moran."

"My present plans," he declares, "are based upon the belief that there is a big field for clean, fast moving short comedies, produced with all the time and thought that is given to longer subjects." The comedian-producer is stopping at the Claridge.

Wisconsin Exhibitor Wins Blue Law Test Case

A test case of the Wisconsin blue laws was made recently in Lancaster, Wis., when William Tracy, manager of the Gem theatre at Plateville, Wis., was arrested through the activities of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, charged with operating a motion picture performance on Sunday. Although the feeling seemed to be antagonistic to the defendant, the trial ended with a jury disagreement. Mr. Tracy continues to operate on Sunday.

Mr. Tracy's case was taken care of by the Wisconsin Exhibitors' Association through the Joint Legislative Committee of the Wisconsin Motion Picture Industry and Allied Crafts, whose attorney, R. A. Hess, took personal charge of the defense. The trial is regarded as a victory for the picture interests, as this section of the state was considered a stronghold of the reformers.

Adoption of Ohio Plan for Irish Relief Urged

Exhibitor chairmen of the various state committees which are conducting campaigns through the motion picture theatres for the relief of Ireland's hungry women and children, have been requested to adopt the Ohio plan as the surest method of securing the necessary funds.

The moving picture houses of Ohio have placed at the disposal of the committee one capacity audience. This means that the committee shall sell tickets at $1.00 each for the benefit of relief in Ireland, these tickets to be good at any moving picture house in the state cooperating with the American Committee for Relief in Ireland during the first week in May. The entire dollar is to go for relief. The response in Ohio has been very gratifying. The tickets are now being issued and sent out to the Ohio relief organization, as well as as to the Knights of Columbus and the American Association, whose cooperation is expected.

The Chairman of the Motion Picture Division in Ohio is Emanuel Mandelbaum.

The following exhibitors have accepted appointments as regional chairmen in their respective states and are now organizing their working committees: H. C. Farley, 214 Montgomery street, Montgomery, Ala.; Eugene H. Roth, California theatre, San Francisco, Cal.; Thomas Vicroy, Tabor theatre, Denver, Colo.; S. A. Lynch Enterprises, Hurt Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.; Oscar Ginns, Du Pont theatre, Wilmington, Del.; A. H. Blank, Des Moines theatre, Des Moines, Iowa; Eugen V. Richards, Saenger Amusement Co., New Orleans, La.; Charles W. Whitehurst, New theatre, Baltimore, Md.; H. B. Varner, Lyric theatre, Lexington, N. Chaplin Series in Baltimore Causes Legal Action

According to reports from Baltimore the first run exhibitors of that city including Loew, the Nixon-Nirdlinger circuit and Charles Whithurst have started injunction proceedings against Associated First National. It is claimed by the plaintiffs that First National is endeavoring to abrogate their first run contracts on the Chaplin series in Baltimore. The plaintiffs also state, according to A. M. Seligman, of the Victoria theatre, Baltimore, that they will follow up the injunction proceedings with reprisals throughout the territory wherever excesses have been charged over the regular contract prices.

Bill Hart in Accident

Bill Hart, pioneer exchange man, well known around the New York territory, reports that he will be back to his desk within a few days, after an absence for the better part of a week, due to being run down by an automobile. Mr. Hart suffered contusions and a bad shake-up, but not serious injuries.

Clayton Censorship Bill Is Passed by New York Legislature

Governor Holds Public Hearing April 26

WITH Assemblyman Walter F. Clayton, of Brooklyn, father of the Clayton censorship bill, declaring among other things that the morals of New York state were not on a par with those in states where motion picture censorship prevails, the Lusk-Clayton bill was forced through the Assembly at Albany, N. Y., last Saturday night, five hours before the annual session concluded, by a vote of 102 to 38. That the bill would pass there was no question of doubt, for a Republican caucus of the assemblymen, taken Friday night, had shown a vote of 92 to 17.

The bill now goes to Governor Nathan L. Miller for his final consideration.

There was no indication Saturday as to when the measure would go to a vote. Shortly after 7 o'clock, Speaker Machold stated to the Assembly that a vote would be taken on the measure. The chamber quickly filled. Assemblyman Clayton was the first speaker. He outlined the provisions of the measure. There were constant interruptions.

Assemblyman Wells was the next speaker. He said that he was in favor of the bill and that it was time that the state stepped in and limited the type of pictures which were being shown.

"Do you know that there is a board of review?" yelled some one.

"Yes, but they don't know their business," came the reply. It was then disclosed just how Assemblyman Clayton came to introduce the bill. It appears that he was taking a walk one night with Mr. Wells, and as they passed a motion picture theatre Assemblyman Clayton inquired if motion picture censorship would not be a good subject for legislation. His companion replied in the affirmative and right there and then the seed was sown.

Assemblyman Orr, Socialist, speaking against the bill, said that while he realized that his words amounted to nothing in view of the Republican caucus of the night before, he wanted to go on record against the measure.

"If you think that you are perfecting manhood through any such measure as this," he said, "you are making the mistake of your life. We should have less laws and more enforcement. There is now a law that will take care of any obscene pictures. Why not enforce it?"

Assemblyman O'Connor said that he was against the bill.

"This continual interference with one's business has got to stop," said the speaker.

GOVERNOR NATHAN L. MILLER was asked last Monday at Albany, N. Y., as to when he expected to announce the appointment of the Motion Picture Censorship Commission.

The Governor replied: "I have not yet signed the bill. I may find some difficulty when I come to look it over."

Asked if there had been any requests for a hearing on it, the Governor said that such matters were handled by Mr. Stagg. Interrogated on the matter, Mr. Stagg pointed to a huge mass of correspondence, much of which was made up of requests for hearings on certain bills, and said that he had not yet had time to sort out the requests.

Governor Miller, in response to public appeal, will hold a public hearing on the Censor Bill, April 26th, at 10 A. M.

"We all know well enough that censorship in other states has not worked out. This idea of safeguarding our morals through three men doesn't appeal to me."

Question after question was fired at Assemblyman Clayton. Some one referred to the board of review.

"Who pays this board?" yelled one assemblyman.

"There is no pay attached to it," said Mr. Clayton. "That's why they don't do their work any better. There are no pictures in New York state that are really censored. The board is only a fake Nothing comes from its suggestions, otherwise salacious pictures would never be shown. This bill of mine has been drawn with the interests of the children of New York state at heart. We are seeking to protect their morals and likewise to protect the womanhood of this state."

"Are the morals lower in New York state without motion picture censorship than in states where censorship prevails?" asked Assemblyman Antin of Mr. Clayton.

"I would say so. Yes," responded Assemblyman Clayton.

"Does Assemblyman Clayton, casting aspersions on his own state, have the data to back up his statements?" inquired Mr. Antin.

To this Mr. Clayton replied that none was necessary.

Assemblyman Ullman of New York said that he would vote against the measure on the grounds that the best censorship in the world is the court of public opinion and that he did not believe that any three men could be found who would ever agree as to just what constituted a sacrilegious or inhuman scene.

"This is just the entering wedge. Next year you will see something else and the year after, something more of the same type."

Assemblyman McLoughlin said that he was in favor of the bill and went on to tell some of his reasons. He declared that more than one girl, having seen the life of a cabaret dancer portrayed in attractive ways upon the screen, had followed that life instead of becoming a wife and mother. Those sitting near him said that this was altogether too far fetched for argument.

The longest argument against the passage of the bill was made by Minority Leader Donohue.

"I am not in favor of censorship," declared Mr. Donohue. "I prefer one of public opinion. I want to ask Mr. Clayton if he has so far failed in his duty as a father to his children that the state shall now step in and dictate as to just what those children shall see in the motion picture theatre. If they are going to censor movies, then it is time that they bought clothing for many works of art. I know tonight there are many assemblymen in this chamber, who if they were allowed to vote of their own free will, would cast their ballots against this bill. I have talked to these men. I know the sentiment which exists in their hearts.

"But on the second floor there is a man who has said that he desires this bill to pass. They subordinate their own judgment to his demands. This bill should never have become a party measure, should never have become the football of politics. It should have received the consideration to which it was entitled without the stigma of politics being attached. It is far too great a measure to have been buffeted about and jammed through at this last moment because of the fact that some party desires to rule with an iron hand."

Shortly before 9 o'clock, after two hours of wrangling, the bill went to a vote. Seventy-six votes were necessary in the New York State Assembly to insure passage. Few Republicans broke away from the party rule and the bill was passed with votes to spare. It was noticeable, however, that not a single applauding hand marked the announcement that the bill had been passed. The crowd filed slowly from the Assembly Chamber, and the grind of less interesting bills was resumed.

"Indorsers" Should Be Encouraged

IN the recent session of the Indiana State legislature, one of the most powerful influences against the passage of censorship laws was an organization known as Indiana Indorsers of Photoplays.

The organization, voluntary in character, views pictures at their regular showing in theatres and then gives public expression to its opinions. The theatre owners, of course, need not carry out the recommendations made, but, it is said, a fine spirit exists between the exhibitors and the organization and they work readily together.

Said Miss Louisa N. Connolly, education expert of Newark, N. J., in commenting upon the Indorsers, "There is no better criticism of a photoplay than that of the audience itself, an American audience, I might say. No small group of educators can tell the people what they like and what they don't like. I have such faith in the American public that I do not think that any theatre can succeed if it does not cooperate with such indorsers as there are here in Indianapolis, where the indorsers are the people and go with the audience to see the films instead of by private showing.

"I do not approve of private exhibits of pictures before the film is given to the public of a city. If the film is a bad film the people will express their disapproval of it or certain scenes, which, if cut, would render the picture good. And from the audience the censors can get the proper viewpoint and notify the exhibitor as to what should be cut."

WM. A. JOHNSTON.

Accounting of Souvenir Book Sales Is Sought

Albert L. Griffith, brother of D. W. Griffith, the motion picture producer, is made defendant in an action brought by Robert Edgar Long, formerly general press representative for the Griffith interests, to effect an accounting in connection with the sale of "Way Down East" souvenir books, now being sold in theatres where "Way Down East" is being shown.

Mr. Long, who designed the souvenir book, claims to have had a partnership agreement with Mr. A. L. Griffith. The defendant is known in the motion picture industry as A. L. Grey, having recently changed his name from Griffith.

Paramount's Sales School Will Open on May 1st

Candidates for the next sales school, to be conducted by Paramount at the home office, must be between the ages of 25 and 35, according to the announcement of Fred Creswell, director of the school. The new class will start as soon as possible after May 1, and its personnel will be enrolled entirely from outside of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation with a few exceptions. A special effort is being made to enroll students who have gained their selling experience in other lines of business.

Found Club to Study Great Photoplays of the Day

About a dozen members of the Palmer Photoplay Corporation of California have founded in New York City the Palmer Scenario Club for the study of the greatest photoplays of the present day, with the idea to encourage among its members the writing of high-class scenarios, conforming to The Standards for Motion Picture Productions as issued by the N. A. M. P. I. The Palmer Club is using Community Centre, P. S. 184, as its headquarters, through the courtesy of the Department of Education, New York City.

Coast Bankers Aiding

ON his last trip to the Coast, Watterson R. Rothacker was impressed with the interest Los Angeles bankers are now taking in the motion picture industry.

"They are lending not only their moral but also their financial support to worthwhile productions," said Mr. Rothacker. "This movement is headed by Mr. Flint, vice-president of the Los Angeles Trust and Savings Bank, who right now is doing some wonderful work toward stabilizing the industry. Mr. Flint has made a very careful survey and analysis in regard to production, and in my opinion he is the best informed banker in the world on this subject. Not only is he a firm believer in Los Angeles as the film capital of the world, but he sincerely believes that Los Angeles will be the future distribution center of the world, and has taken some very practical steps toward that goal.

"Mike Levee, vice-president of Brunton Studios, was very enthusiastic as to the prospects for the balance of 1921. He believes that production will proceed on even a greater scale within 90 days. In fact it is the consensus of opinion among the knowing ones on the Coast that the future will be bright indeed.

"Sol Lesser and associates are doing some wonderfully constructive work, adding steadily to their chain of theatres and developing First National enthusiasm to the Nth degree.

"I found Louis B. Mayer activities becoming daily greater at the big Mayer Studios. Mr. Mayer promises some big news shortly in regard to forthcoming John M. Stahl productions and some very interesting news about other new productions."

Recently the Kans City Censorship Committee adopted a pla whereby a woman censor would be place in each precinct of the city. This add tion to censorial methods already in forc riled the theatre owners, and immediate the machinery of the city council was s agoing.

An amendment to the motion-pictu ordinance was proposed, providing tha twenty instead of fifteen signers would b necessary for the "objecting petition and, more important, that the signer should be taxpayers. This latter provisio would eliminate 90 per cent of the wome

On Wednesday of last week, proponen of censorship flocked to the city counc chambers, where they anxiously awaite action on the proposed amendmen against which they had lodged spirite protests. Then came the joke of the sea son. In the reading of routine busines by the clerk, none of the delegations rea ized the ordinance in which they were in terested was before the house until afte it was announced—"Ordinance passed."

Then came the storm. Protests wer heaped upon protests, but all in vain, whil the exhibitors departed in high spirits.

Morris Kohn, president of Realart Pic tures Corp., who has just returned to Ne York from a tour of key cities in th Eastern states, reports that he finds pic ture conditions in the East similar to thos prevailing in the Middle West, which h describes as "twenty per cent of normal.

Mr. Kohn states that a change in th general situation is expected in the fal and that most exhibitors are looking t that time for important developments.

"Birth of a Nation" Booke for Capital Theatre

S. L. ROTHAFEL announces that he has procured for presentation at the Capitol theatre the week of May 1, D. W. Griffith's masterpiece, "The Birth of a Nation." It will be remembered that this was the first American motion picture spectacle ever produced and offered at regular theatre prices.

"The Birth of a Nation" was the first photodrama to be accompanied by a synchronized score, but this phase of motion picture presentation has made such rapid strides during the past few years that there is no doubt that Mr. Rothafel's musical presentation will greatly enhance the dramatic value of this historical classic.

Theatre Bills in Pennsylvania Legislature

"Equal Rights," Receipts Tax and Billboard Tax Pending; Salary Increase Beaten

PROPOSED legislation in Pennsylvania affecting the motion-picture industry is taking concrete form, as the session, which is expected to close before the end of April, is rapidly approaching the period for final adjournment. Keenest interest centers upon the "equal rights" bill which would give negroes the same privileges as whites in theatres and other places of public entertainment or accommodation.

This bill has passed the House finally and is before a committee of the Senate which planned to hold the final public hearing of the measure on April 19. Already there have been several public hearings and large delegations of colored persons have repeatedly called at the capital to bring pressure in favor of the measure. It is vigorously opposed by many other interests, however, and has become one of the main political issues before the legislators. There is considerable doubt about its fate at this writing.

Other important measures affecting picture theatres, which are figuring conspicuously in the deliberations of the Solons, include the bill placing a one per cent. tax on the gross receipts of the amusement places of the state. It is now before the Senate, having passed the House finally. Whether this measure, which has been energetically fought by the theatre interests, will be adopted either in its present or an amended form, depends largely on the disposition that finally is made of the pending anthracite coal tax bill. The coal tax bill, if passed, would yield a large amount of extra revenue to the state, which revenue is sorely needed to carry on increased expenses of government. If this source of revenue is established, the motion picture theatre interests are hopeful that the gross tax on theatre receipts will be found unnecessary as a revenue raising measure and that the gross receipts tax bill will therefore be defeated.

If, however, the coal tax bill fails of passage, the theatre interests will make a firm fight for the amendment of the theatre gross tax bill, to reduce the amount of the tax or otherwise to make it more acceptable to the amusement interests. As the measure stands now it even taxes the receipts on a day that a theatre operates at a loss, and is therefore branded as grossly unfair.

The House has passed the bill placing a five per cent. tax on billboards, which includes bill boards used for advertising motion picture theatres, and that measure, too, is pending before the Senate. It seems likely that it will be adopted by that body, particularly if some of the other proposed revenue-producing bills fail of adoption.

The measure which would place an additional tax per foot on the examination of films by the state board of motion picture censors, seems to have been sidetracked in a committee pigeon-hole from which it is not likely to be brought forth.

Although the Pennsylvania House, by the most decisive vote of 37 ayes to 129 nays, defeated the bill of Senator William C. McConnell, of Northumberland county, which would have increased the salaries of the state board of censors and their subordinates from a total of $37,000 a year to $81,000, an effort was made last week to revive the measure. The date upon which it was defeated in the House was April 6, and under the legislative rules the House had ten legislative days after that date in which to reconsider its vote and place the bill back on the calendar. An effort to do this was made by Representative Albert Millar, of Dauphin county, but only 56 members voted in favor of reconsideration and 63 against it. This action had apparently killed the measure for this session, but as soon as Senator McConnell heard of the House's action he introduced a slightly different bill, in most essential details the same as the defeated measure, in the Senate body. There are a few changes but the censors' salaries are increased from $3,000 to $4,000 a year and most of the salary increases of the defeated bill are provided for in the new measure. Well-informed lobbyists say that even if the new bill passes the Senate there is little likelihood of the House approving it, in view of the decisive vote by which the House defeated the original measure on this subject.

Several new bills have just appeared in the Pennsylvania Legislature designed to prevent theatre ticket speculating.

Wisconsin Exhibitors to Convene May 10th

Urgent Call Sent to Exhibitors of State to Meet at Hotel Wisconsin, Milwaukee

IN conformity with the policy accepted at the last annual meeting of the Wisconsin Exhibitors Association, which was held at Milwaukee in August 1920, to hold the next annual meeting thirty days prior to the National Convention, the call is now being sent out from State Headquarters at Milwaukee, by Executive Secretary W. F. Baumann for the state meeting to be held in Milwaukee on May 10th and 11th, at the Hotel Wisconsin.

Since its inception last August, at which time the old organization was completely reorganized, the Association has progressed wonderfully. The membership has increased to such an extent that at the time of writing this, there is scarcely a single city in the state of any considerable size that has not a membership in the Association. Much constructive work has been done in every department of the organization, and it is expected that the coming State Convention will be the largest ever held in the history of Wisconsin.

One of the principal reasons that a record breaking attendance is expected at the convention in May, is the fact that for the past eight months the Association has been keeping in close touch by mail and other publicity with every exhibitor in the state. Every exhibitor has heard about the Association and its work through the mails—even if he has not yet joined the organization. Another reason for expecting many more to be present than at any other state convention heretofore is the fact that the reform elements have conclusively demonstrated the fact that they are out to control the motion-picture industry of the State of Wisconsin.

Right now in the two houses of the legislature there are three different bills pending, one on censorship, one on regulating the price of admission and still another prohibiting the sale of tickets when no seats are immediately available for the purchasers of such tickets. What the passage of these bills means to the exhibitors of the State, everyone of them knows. Therefore, it behooves every exhibitor to firmly resolve that nothing under the sun will be permittted to interfere with his attending the two-day convention at Milwaukee in May, declare the association officials.

While the matter of legislation is entirely in the hands of the Joint Legislative Committee of Allied Motion Picture Crafts, and while that Committee has been doing and is doing all in its power to fight adverse legislation, the problems now being encountered by the joint committee are of such vital importance to every exhibitor, and are assuming such alarming proportions in Wisconsin, that it is pointed out the committee must have the absolute and undivided support of every exhibitor in the State to be able to successfully combat the menace.

Experience in the past has taught the officers of various state associations of exhibitors that there are too many in the business who will let "George do it," but the time has come now and the majority of the exhibitors have already begun to realize it that "Genial George" cannot bear the burden of all the "stay at homes" any longer.

Robertson-Cole Executives Resign April 16th

ADVICES from the Robertson-Cole headquarters, New York, announce the resignation from that organization of Alexander Beyfuss, who has been connected with the Robertson-Cole Division of Films; Arthur Hoerl, who has been in charge of the publicity and advertising; and J. L. Merrick, field manager. The announcement declares the resignations became effective April 16.

First Nat'l-Loew Suit in Ohio Is Ended

The long drawn out law suit between the Loew theatres of Ohio and the First National Exhibitors Company of Ohio, which has kept the Charlie Chaplin, Norma and Constance Talmadge and Charles Ray pictures out of Cleveland for the past nine months, was settled on April 16th when the Court of Appeals confirmed the Common Pleas Court which decided in favor of the Loew interests.

Under an agreement which the Loew interests cited in court, the Loew theatres were to get first run of pictures of the four stars in Cleveland. Other down town theatres were, according to the agreement, to follow four weeks after the first run.

W. W. Hodkinson Returns to New York Office

W. W. Hodkinson, head of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, has returned to New York after a "swing around the circle." During the last three months he has visited practically every town of any importance in the United States. A great deal of his time was spent on the West Coast, where he conferred with the heads of various producing units.

Artistic Layout Attracts Favorable Comment

A layout that has been characterized by experts as one of the most artistic displays in advertising, as well as in film circles, is the four page, three color insert by Paramount which opens this week's issue of the NEWS. Critics have pronounced this one of the best examples of good motion picture advertising that has ever appeared in the trade papers. Incidentally, it marks the first time in many months that Paramount has issued three-color advertising; and the reversion to this elaborate display is due entirely to the bigness of the subject, for "Deception" has been pronounced the most stupendous subject ever filmed, justifying the additional advertising outlay. The four page insert's art work was designed and laid out by A. M. Botsford, Patrick Kearney, and Vincent Trotta of Paramount's advertising and art departments; and the copy was prepared by Mr. Botsford, Mr. Kearney and Russell Mitcheltree.

Heads R-C Publicity

C. Seymour Clark, newly appointed director of publicity for Robertson-Cole

ROBERTSON-COLE has announced the appointment of C. Seymour Clark as director of the publicity and advertising department. Mr. Clark is an experienced publicity and advertising man, having been executive secretary of the Bureau of Special Campaigns of the American Red Cross at Washington, D. C., for the past three years in charge of publicity and advertising for the money and membership campaigns.

In this capacity Mr. Clark has been responsible for the Red Cross posters and other publicity material and supplies which have attracted wide attention and comment.

Mr. Clark was selected by Henry P. Davidson, chairman of the Red Cross War Council, to go to Geneva, Switzerland, to organize the publicity department of the League of Red Cross Societies, composed of the Red Cross societies of thirty-two different nations.

His most recent connection has been with Herbert Hoover of the European Relief Council Campaign, to raise $33,000,000 for the relief of the children of Europe, to which the motion picture industry cooperated so generously.

Mr. Clark is a former newspaper man and has been the publisher of daily newspapers in Ann Arbor, Michigan; Hornell, N. Y.; Fort Smith, Ark., and other cities, and was for ten years a branch manager for the Western Newspaper Union in Kansas City and Cincinnati. While connected with the latter organization, Mr. Clark handled publicity and advertising, and brings to the Robertson-Cole organization several years of newspaper, advertising agency and marketing experience.

New R. I. Law Cuts Standing Room Privileges

By a bill which passed the Rhode Island State Legislature on April 13th the receipts of moving picture theatres will be materially cut owing to a restriction being placed on the standing room privileges. There has been much agitation for a recoding of the building laws, and the theatres, although practically every house in the city comes up to the requirements of the old building regulations, which were strict.

Ask Pictures Be Regulated in Austin, Texas

A committee of citizens headed by J. Gregg Hill, president of the Travis County Humane Society, and Rev. W. R. Minter, a Presbyterian minister, appeared on Thursday of last week before the city council of Austin, Tex., and appealed that the city authorities adopt some form of censorial regulation of motion-pictures exhibited in Austin. Petitions reported to have been signed by 391 men and women were presented to the council by the committee.

Cheering News from Coast for the Independents

WORD received from the Coast this week shows a notable increase in activities of independent producers, especially in the short-subject field. It is likely that many of these new productions are destined for the state-rights market. The cheerful outlook as reflected in the latest advices from Los Angeles has added materially to the general optimism growing in independent circles.

Spencer Productions, which recently organized, announces the engagement of Helen Holmes, Jack Connolly and Edward Clapham as members of the cast for its first picture, "The Ghost City." This picture has been adapted from the novel, "The Torrent," by George Rix. William Bertram is the director. The sale of this picture is to be handled by C. O. D. Blanchfield, Superba Theatre Building.

The Allen Russell Productions announces the completion of a five-reel mystery, entitled "The Tell-Tale Eye." Betty Finley plays opposite Mr. Russell in this production. This subject is being sold on a state right basis by C. O. D. Blanchfield.

Ellis Parker Butler's "Philo Gibb" stories are to be made into a series of comedies. The cast will include Victor Potel, Dorothea Wolbert, Otis Harlen, Harry Todd, Howard Crampton, and Ruth Handforth. Webster Cullison is the director and manager of production. The first release will be titled "The Hounder of the Tankervilles." Production work is being conducted at the Francis Ford Studio.

Another new company named Beverly Syndicate is making a series of two-reel feature comedies. The first is titled "Chubby and the Mermaid." James Clemens is directing. The featured player is Lincoln Stedman. The cast includes Catherine Meyers, Jack Richardson, Dora Dare, Madge Hunt, and Hugh Saxon.

Press Is Uniformly Laudatory of "Deception"

The press criticisms of "Deception," published during the week in the New York dailies, have been uniformly laudatory to a high degre of the production. "Deception" opened at the Rivoli theatre, New York, on Sunday, April 17th. The following excerpts are typical of the commendation showered upon the Paramount picture by the press reviewers. The New York Times writes:

"Here is a real story told so that intelligent people can enjoy it. Here is sturdy evidence that the screen is for adults as well as for children. Here is a work that holds the alert interest almost continuously despite the fact that it is historical. Many people shy at the historical in entertainment, fearing that they may be bored or that they may accidentally be educated; but they needn't avoid 'Deception,' unless they object to a real story of real people.

"Rich, colorful, dramatic, 'Deception' is a photoplay for those who want genuine realism and can do without simpering heroines and pretty heroes, mechanical plots and sentimental happy endings."

Allan Dale, dramatic critic of the New York American, declares:

"Although 'Deception' dealt with Henry's amours, and although everybody but Henry must have wearied of these at the court, there was not a dull moment in the affair at the Rivoli. It proved to be one of the most fascinating and convincing pictures I have ever seen. All the details were so remarkable —the tournament, the revels, the arrival of the little Elizabeth, the marriage ceremony, the coronation, the festivities and the banquets. It lasts at least a couple of hours and you are ready for another reel or so at the end.

"Altogether 'Deception' may be set down as something distinctly unusual and gripping. The crowded events roll by without effort; the story is without side issue of irrelevancy. It is all extraordinary real."

The New York Tribune says:

"We consider it a masterpiece. Nothing better has ever been seen on the screen than the performance of Emil Jannings as the brutal king. And Henny Porten is absolutely convincing as the unfortunate Annie who was more sinned against than sinning."

Chamber of Commerce in Important Session

THE New York Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce entertained the trade press at its regular luncheon on Tuesday, April 19th, at the Hotel Astor, New York. It was decided to hold the installation of new officers at the dinner scheduled for May 3rd or May 10th at the Ritz-Carlton for the members of the M. P. T. O. Chamber of Commerce, their wives and guests. Invitations will also be extended to the members of the F. I. L. M. Club to attend this dinner.

The Hoy Committee reported that ninety cases of exhibitor-exchange grievances had been submitted for the consideration of this body. Of these, forty had been decided in favor of the exhibitors and fifty in favor of the exchanges. Chairman William Brandt called attention to the fact that this committee is the first of its kind to be established in the country. Its success has led to the adoption of similar committees elsewhere. Chairman Brandt also reported that representatives of the Chamber of Commerce had held a meeting with the publisher and editor of the Brooklyn Daily Eagle and that as a result of this meeting the Eagle, which formerly had supported the movement for censorship, had reversed its attitude on this question.

Representatives of the Chamber of Commerce have also interviewed the publishers of "Live Topics" and have secured their promise not to include mention of Henry Ford's name or the Ford organization in their publication.

Provide the Weapons

THE exhibitor is confronted today, and increasingly will be, with a number of problems brought about by the various reform movements, radical and otherwise

He will want to know what to say about censorship, to his local legislator, newspaper editors, clergymen, etc., what to say about Sunday closing, how to approach the local clergy, women's and civic organizations; how to win their cooperation and ward off their prejudice and misguided activities. Some exhibitors are fully equipped with this information, others are not.

Considerable information has been printed, and is available, on censorship but the other pressing situations have only been handled intermittently by the trade press.

A series of tracts should be prepared dealing with each of these problems and placed in the exhibitor's hands. Bulletins can be added from time to time, giving additional information and arguments.

This, it seems to us, is fundamental and highly important.

We suggest, as a practical way of procedure, a committee of Trade Paper Editors or the Advertiser's Association or both to prepare these booklets and have them distributed as soon as possible, through all the available organizations and avenues.

WM. A. JOHNSTON

Recent Incorporations in New York State

Want Harrisburg Theatres Closed Memorial Day

Harrisburg Post, No. 27, American Legion, Harrisburg, Pa., has adopted a resolution requesting the city to refuse any circus or theatre the privilege of giving exhibitions in that city on the afternoon of Memorial Day, the ruling to take effect in 1922.

The Ringling circus was in Harrisburg on May 31, 1920, which was the Monday following Memorial Day, and this year it returns on May 30. The Legion members contend that the circus and theatre exhibitions detract from the memorial services and parade held by the former service men.

Censor Ordinance Dies in Chicago City Council

The Timothy J. Hurley censorship ordinance, providing for a paid municipal board of three moving picture censors, died automatically when the term of the old Chicago Council ended on April 11th, as the judiciary committee of the council, which had held extensive public hearings on the proposed ordinance, failed to bring the ordinance out of the committee before the demise of the old council.

The ordinance proposed to take censorship of pictures away from the police department, although it was admitted both by the reform element and motion picture interests, that the police under Chief Fitzmaurice, were giving satisfaction as censors.

Pictures for Distribution by Warren under Way

THE recent announcement of the formation of the F. B. Warren Corporation to engage in the world-wide distribution of motion-pictures has been followed by the receipt by Mr. Warren of a great number of congratulatory letters from theatre-owners and film men in the United States and Canada. Much interest centers in the production output to be handled by the new company.

Mr. Warren has made no definite announcement concerning affiliations established with producers, but it is learned that active production for distribution through the Warren organization is already under way in both Los Angeles and New York. The first completed picture will be ready by the middle of May, according to Mr. Warren, and by the end of August ten pictures will be in the hands of the branch offices for booking by the exhibitors.

It is also announced that several powerful financial groups are supporting the production units whose products will be distributed by the Warren system. These financial interests, according to the statement, have "no interest whatever in the distribution."

The establishment of branch offices and the organization of their operating personnel are at present being carried forward.

O'Reilly Sees Possibility of Constructive Tie-Up

In acquiring greater power, President O'Reilly of the New York State association, has a plan which may result in exhibitors linking themselves with automobilists, hotel proprietors and persons interested in recreational work, in the formation of a gigantic organization which will be a factor along legislative lines, and in many other ways.

In discussing the project before leaving Albany last week, President O'Reilly said that while the New York state association had the power of the screen, that it lacked in numbers. In equalizing this, through cooperation with automobilists and others, Mr. O'Reilly believes that he has found a solution which will make itself felt in the future. President O'Reilly will make a trip through New York state during the coming summer, and call on all exhibitors.

Mayor Lunn Dined by A.M.P.A. Flays Censorship

A ringing echo of the recent censorship battle at Albany was carried to New York when Mayor George R. Lunn of Schnectady addressed members of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at the Cafe Boulevard, April 14.

"I am opposed to censorship for the same reason that I am opposed to suppression of the press," he announced. "I have absolutely no sympathy with the fanatics who would close up a theatre, but never think of touching the scurrilous literature that abounds or the publications in whose pages scandalous divorce stories are printed side by side with a plea for the suppression of the screen.

"The motion picture industry is just at its beginning, and if it is to attain its full growth and realize its maximum possibilities for service, it must be allowed to develop unhampered by foolish, dogmatic and unthinking regulation.

"Tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth in your advertising. Make it stand for the picture. I am a rabid fan and during my experience I have never discovered a single instance where a producer gained anything by placing in the advertising something that is not in the picture."

Late News from the Coast

THE Public Morals committee of the California Assembly has indefinitely postponed the hearing of the Colburn Motion Picture Censorship bill, which was written from the present Pennsylvania censorship bill.

E. R. Hough, business manager of the Robertson-Cole studios, announces that the plant will be closed for thirty or sixty days. Over-production is given as the reason. All contract people and heads of departments are to remain with the company.

The Herald Company, organized by Jean Perry and Z. A. Stegmuller, have leased space at Universal City to produce a series of eight pictures starring J. P. McGowan, who will also direct. Dorothy Wood is to play the lead.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 220 SO. STATE ST.

Mr. Hall, of Centralia, of Hall & Griffin, owners of the Grand theatre of that city, and widely known to exhibitors and exchange men throughout the state, is in the hospital, where he will undergo an operation.

Harry Weiss, of Superior Screen Service, announces the appointment of K. L. Eagon as Indiana salesman, with headquarters at Indianapolis.

W. C. Brimmer has been appointed Chicago manager of Vitagraph, vice M. F. Tarbell, resigned, and George Tail, assistant manager, in place of C. R. Lindau, resigned. Mr. Brimmer has been for some time past connected with Vitagraph as a city salesman and has made a splendid record. Mr. Tail also has been with the organization for some time as booker and through his well earned promotion has made an opening for Harry James, of the shipping department, to be advanced to booker.

The Park theatre, Indianapolis, Ind., has changed its policy. It will now be conducted as a high-grade moving picture show. The opening production for April 24 will be "Madonnas and Men."

Joe Myberg, representing the producing units of the National Exchanges of New York, was a Chicago visitor April 15. Illinois motion picture men who were in the city last week include Leo Bernstein, Capitol theatre, Springfield Ill.; A. Sigfried, Bijou theatre, Decatur; Rex Lawhead, Lincoln Square theatre, Decatur; and Peter Pinkleman, Princess theatre, Quincy, Ill.

The open season for fish is now on, according to John Bobeng, of the Armitage theatre, who has invited a number of the Chicago Isaac Waltons to accompany him on a fishing expedition this week, the party including Verne Lynch, of the Tiffin theatre; George Fricke, of the Home theatre; Harry Weiss, of Superior Screen Service, and Frank Heinen, of the Crescent theatre.

Harry Sherman dropped off in Chicago for a few hours last week en route from Los Angeles to New York. He states that he plans to start releasing on or about May 15th and will have some pictures which will go over big.

The 600-seat Adams theatre on Adams between State and Wabash, in the loop district, is rapidly nearing completion and is scheduled to open its doors on May 18th. It will seat six hundred people and will be booked by the Vista Amusement Company, owners of a string of southside theatres in Chicago.

F. G. Hellen, general manager of the Starland Amusement Company, of Anderson, Indiana, is suffering from a severe case of pneumonia and is confined to the hospital at Anderson.

J. Obreshke, owner of the Star theatre at Whiting, is having plans drawn for a twenty-two hundred-seat theatre to be erected in Whiting this summer. This will be one of the largest and best equipped houses in the state, according to architect's designs.

Arthur Lowy, of the Illinois and Indiana Film Service, has opened an Indianapolis office at 144 W. Vermont street, that city, with Clarence Phillips in charge. Mr. Phillips is well known in Chicago film circles, having been associated with Goldwyn and other exchanges in the Windy City.

Harry Manning has been appointed office manager of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's Chicago exchange. Ralph Bradford has been engaged as city salesman for this organization. Tom Kilfoil, travelling auditor, has left for Minneapolis and Des Moines, after installing efficiency methods in the Chicago exchange. He will return to Milwaukee later on to supervise the opening of the new exchange which Famous Players is planning in that city.

F. W. Fisher, who is interested in motion picture houses in La Salle, Jacksonville and Kewanee, has opened the Majestic in Madison with pictures. The premier performance was a big success, being attended by the Lieutenant Governor, Senators and legislators, as well as prominent society people. "The Inside of the Cup" was the feature chosen for the opening of the house.

Selected Films, Incorporated, have secured the services of Bob Smith as southside representative.

Ralph O. Proctor spent a day in Chicago April 14th and left for the coast the same evening. Proctor, it is understood, plans to go into production in a large way on the west coast.

Extensive bookings of Kineto Reviews, handled by Superior Screen Service in this territory, are reported by Harry Weiss and Fred Aiken of Superior, including week runs at Bijou Dream, Lubliner & Trinz's Circuit, Ascher Brothers' Circuit and the Schafer Theatre Company's chain.

"Peck's Bad Boy" Due at Strand Apr. 24

"PECK'S BAD BOY," starring Jackie Coogan, will be given its premiere showing at the Strand Theatre, New York City, on Sunday, April 24th. Following its week's engagement at the New York Strand, the picture will be shown for the next week at the Brooklyn Strand. Joseph Plunkitt, the managing director of the Strand, is planning an elaborate and novel presentation for the picture, it is stated.

"Peck's Bad Boy" is a five-reel comedy. Irvin S. Cobb edited and titled the production, and the author is declared to have added many humorous touches in his titles which will serve to reinforce the comedy appeal of the picture. Sam Wood directed the picture. Besides the youthful star who is featured, the cast includes: Doris May, Wheeler Oakman, Raymond Hatton, Lillian Leighton, James Corrigan, Charlie Hatton, Gloria Wood, and last but not least "Queenie," Jackie's canine pal.

Moe Mark, in speaking of Peck's Bad Boy" said: "I think little Jack Coogan shows wonderful ability in the new picture. It gives those who witness it a clear insight as to exactly what the little fellow can do before a picture camera and I feel that Jackie shows to every angle that he is exactly what people acclaim him—the wonder boy of the films."

The fee to the property occupied by the Irving Park theatre at Irving and Crawford, has been sold, but this does not affect the lease which has eight years more to run, and operation of the theatre will be continued under the present management.

Sig Faller, manager of the Bijou Dream theatre, will leave for a three months' trip to visit Germany, England and France, on July 1st. George Paul, of the States theatre, also is planning a three months' trip to Europe and expects to depart at an early date.

V. T. Lynch is back on the job again after eight weeks' absence from the Tiffin theatre due to illness. Incidentally, while at the hospital, he had plans drawn whereby the Tiffin theatre will be enlarged from eight hundred to twenty-five hundred seats.

Fitzpatrick & McElroy are planning a new theatre at Harvey, Illinois. Likewise John Ohamnus, owner of the New Brookline theatre in Chicago, has taken over the property at Harvey, owned by H. Ruby, and will remodel it into a first-class theatre. This will give Harvey two new theatres.

New pictures taken on by Superior Screen Service through the National Exchanges are "Welcome Children" and "Behind the Mask," the former featuring Sidney Franklin and the latter featuring Hedda Nova and Lieut. Pat O'Brien, also twenty-six Moranti Comedies through the National Exchanges. Superior states it had the best week last week since it has been in the business and that reports from the country show that the factories are slowly opening up again and that while some exhibitors are laying off the very high priced film, they are demanding some medium priced pictures. This is especially notable in automobile sections of Indiana where theatres depend on the automobile industry for their trade.

Another Chicago newspaper has gotten behind the Motion Picture Machine Operators' Ball. Tommy Maloy, T. J. Reynolds and J. J. Sullivan, made a deal with the Evening American whereby the newspaper will run a contest for three weeks preceding the ball. The Journal will publish masked pictures of screen stars who will be present at the ball and movie fans are to guess as to their identity. The Chicago Journal for two weeks has been conducting a beauty contest whereby some Chicago girl will get a job with Christie Comedies. Some of the contestants were at the Rothacker studios for tests and Watterson R. Rothacker gave the operators a number of trailers for screening at the local theatres. The ball will be at the Arena, May 5th.

Lew Cody, who has been making personal appearances in Jones, Linick & Schaefer houses in Chicago, left this week to attend the First National meeting at West Baden, Ind., but will return to Chicago in time to mess with ten thousand gobs at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station Friday. Mr. Cody is very popular with the bluejackets and they some time ago extended him an invitation to be their guest at "chow."

Al Holah, Chicago salesmanager for Associated Exhibitors, reports extraordinary business on "The Devil," which has already been sold for every key city in the territory. The big Arliss feature had two weeks at Barbee's and will play at two other loop theatres, the Bijou Dream and the Rose, before it leaves the downtown section.

Aaron Jones is vacationing at French Lick Springs, where he is putting in most of his time on the golf links, and will return to Chicago about May 1. His partner, Adolph Linick, has just returned from the West Coast and is to go abroad in June.

Ben Beadell has been appointed resident manager of Associated Producers' Chicago Exchange and assumed his new duties Monday, taking the position made vacant by the resignation of Sidney Goldman.

Mr. Beadell is a veteran of the picture business and enjoys the friendship of probably more exhibitors than any other film man in the Chicago territory, his geniality, square shooting and business ability having endeared him to the trade throughout many years of service in important positions with various companies.

Virginia Dale, of the Chicago Journal, or, as she is known in private life, Mrs. H. S. Johnston, has booked her passage for Cherbourg early next month.

While in Europe she will study the movies for the Journal, of which she is the moving picture critic, and will send home a series of articles.

This trip is notable, as it again makes prominent the growing importance of motion pictures in the opinion of the daily press, Miss Dale being the first movie critic to be sent overseas by a metropolitan daily.

National Woman's Christian Temperance Union's Sabbath Observance Week, which was followed by an anti-cigarette and anti-tobacco Sunday, failed to create any stir in Evanston, Chicago's north shore suburb, where are located national headquarters of the W. C. T. U., or in Chicago, pastors of churches generally ignoring the request of the organization to preach on these subjects and other bodies generally failing to fall in line with the campaign.

W. A. Steffis, J. J. Campbell, and B. W. Wilson, all of Minneapolis, attended the Illinois Exhibitors' Alliance convention this week and also took the opportunity of renewing their friendships with many Chicago members of the industry. Mr. Steffis and his party arrived Sunday morning from the northern city and stayed over until late in the week.

Sharrard Assistant to Charles R. Rogers

ANNOUNCEMENT is made from the Robertson-Cole headquarters that George M. Sharrard has been made assistant general-manager of the Robertson-Cole organization. In his new capacity Mr. Sharrard will work under Charles R. Rogers, the newly appointed general-manager.

In June of 1918, Mr. Sharrard became associated with the Select Pictures Corporation. While with this company he was placed in charge of the contract department and later became efficiency manager. He next became associated with Arthur S. Kane and from the Kane organization went to Realart where he organized the department of mail sales. He was at the head of this department when he received his appointment as assistant general-manager of Robertson-Cole.

EXHIBITORS' REPORTS ON NEW RELEASES

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATERS

FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY

The Gilded Lily—

Superb production. Well directed, extravagantly conceived and a good audience picture. (West.)

Held up well for a two week run. As a whole big picture from every angle. (West.)

Star is popular and in consequence picture went over all right. (West.)

Straight Is the Way—

Good picture, good cast. Slightly improbable story but good entertainment value. (West.)

The Witching Hour—

This was only a fair picture and fair puller. (East.)

Forbidden Fruit—

Pleased those who saw it but not enough saw it. (West.)

Gradually built up as run progressed but not as big as anticipated. (West.)

The Love Special—

Our patrons called this a fine picture and it did big business. (West.)

A good picture. Drew good business second run. (East.)

Buried Treasure—

Interest holding picture lavishly produced but failed to pull during its run at this house and we played to poor business. (Middle West.)

This picture flopped and was pulled off in middle of week run and another film substituted. (East.)

Dollar-a-Year Man—

Unfortunately, Fatty Arbuckle does not live up to his fan's expectations of him. This is no worse than previous feature-Arbuckles I've played—but it was no better, and business was poor. (South.)

Went over great. Fine audience picture. (West.).

The Kentuckians—

A picture that proved to be about as uninteresting as its title. Had it not been for Bobby Vernon in "Hey, Rube!" the week's attendance at my house would have been a flat failure. (Middle West.)

Good average business. (East.)

Proxies—

Positively the worst business in several years. Nothing about it to arouse interest. (East.)

The Passionate Pilgrim—

Nice picture—receipts at Parkway fine—at Wizard fair. (East.)

What Every Woman Knows—

A splendid production with a title that is a business getter. A capacity house at my theatre for a week's run. (Middle West.)

The Easy Road—

An ordinary story put over by the star's personality. Business was good. (East.)

What's Worth While?—

Too long drawn out and tiresome. Did nothing that had not been done before, and was considered far below usual standard for Lois Weber picture. Took it off after three days to very poor business. (South.)

FIRST NATIONAL

Nineteen and Phyllis—

Plot neither original nor of exceptional interest. The star is the big attraction. Ray is up to his usual standard. (Middle West.)

Good picture that did well for us. (West.)

The Passion Flower—

Business excellent, as it always is when I play a Talmadge picture. This was more favorably commented on than anything Norma Talmadge has played in a year. Colorful, vivid, and realistic. (South.)

My Lady's Latchkey—

Katherine MacDonald is well liked by women patrons, so business was fair, due to patronage of feminine contingent. (East.)

The Woman in His House—

Pleasing picture but barely met average business. (East.)

Go and Get It—

Mama's Affair—

Only average picture, but it took well with our patrons and we played to excellent business. (Middle West.)

Man, Woman, Marriage—

A somewhat rambling story. Chief interest centers about the lavish scenes. A good box-office attraction. (Middle West.)

The Kid—

Went over extra big. Capacity business every day and they liked it. (South.)

Sowing the Wind—

A winner for fair. Booked it for one week and held it over for a second week. Just as big second week as first. (Middle West.)

REALART

The Little Clown—

Very good little picture that did well for me. (West.)

Out of the Chorus—

Nothing extraordinary about the picture, but Alice Brady is always a sure bet here. Showed in conjunction with Buster Keaton in "Neighbors." A good house all week. (Middle West.)

Ducks and Drakes—

Bebe Daniel goes her former productions one better in this picture. A snappy production that brings results at the box-office. (Middle West.)

All Souls Eve—

Played this on a double bill with "Plaything of Broadway." The two make a pleasing program well liked by our patrons. (East.)

UNIVERSAL

Outside the Law—

Went across big. Drew fine attendance and receipts dandy. (East.)

Regarded acting and production as superior to story, but it pleased our audiences and we had a splendid week with this picture. (Middle West.)

The Smart Sex—

Our audiences called this poor. Business was not up to average either. (Middle.)

ASSOCIATED PRODUCERS

The Small Town Idol—

Picture lived up to the advance notices given it by critics and we played to splendid business during its run. (Middle West.)

Attracted capacity business for week's run. (East.)

Lying Lips—

Did well for us and got favorable comment from the audiences.

HODKINSON

East Lynne—

Stormy weather held down attendance on this picture but those who saw it were pleased and we are holding this excellent picturization of the famous stage play over for a second week. (Middle West.)

His Own Law—

An ordinary picture that brought fair business. (East.)

FOX

Over the Hills—

Attendance keeps up pleasing but not particularly gratifying. Ends run on 23rd. (East.)

Blind Wives—

Old story very well done by a capable company and exceptionally well directed. Had a big Sunday and business satisfactory, but not unusual, the rest of the week.

ROBERTSON-COLE

The Mistress of Shenstone—

A really good picture. Can't complain about business this week. (Middle West.)

SELZNICK

World's Apart—

They liked this one and business was excellent. O'Brien is winning back the popularity he so nearly lost in his former namby-pamby roles. (South.)

The Chicken in the Case—

Great—A laugh every minute—Biggest Sunday in several weeks, and kept up like that all during the engagement. (Middle West.)

UNITED ARTISTS

The Nut—

Went over big for full week.

METRO

Without Limit—

Rather interesting, and business was very good. (South.)

Cinderella's Twin—

Fair picture. Business just fair.

STATE RIGHTS

Kazan—

Fair picture that did just a fair business. (West.)

Wonderful picture—Tremendous big opening, and growing daily in popularity. One of the biggest attractions on the market.

The County Fair—

A gold mine—a knockout. Second week at my house and still going at full blast—a capacity house daily. (Middle West.)

A bad picture with little appeal. Business was not up to standard. (East.)

VITAGRAPH

Black Beauty—

Two weeks to big business. They seemed to like it first rate. (West.)

PATHE

The Devil—

Fair picture that just did average business. (West.)

Forsyth Originates Novelty for Frederick Picture

The lobby of the Forsyth Theatre, Atlanta, during the three day run of "Roads of Destiny," recently, was one that not only attracted attention, but held it.

In the center of the lobby stood an immense, old-fashioned sign-post, weather beaten and worn with time. The signs pointed "North," "East," "South," and "West," all a little battered and sagging.

Against the sign-post stood a beautifully modelled figure of Fate, in the traditional flowing draperies, and with her Scroll under her arm, looking on at the drama passing before her. Near Fate, a cut-out of Pauline Frederick, in a light summer frock, and a big hat stood, as if not quite decided about the road to take. A cut out of "Lewis" stood under the "North" banner, with outstretched hands, pleading for the girl to follow his road; a cut-out of David stood at the other fork. And over all, brooded the figure of Fate, with her inscrutable smile.

It was a simple and inexpensive, but an eye-compelling lobby, and it attracted some excellent business throughout the run, and Frank Hammond, Manager of the Forsyth, was quite pleased.

Grauman Publishing Fan Magazine

Sid Grauman, managing director of the Grauman theatres, Los Angeles, is another exhibitor who has adopted the policy of getting out a weekly magazine devoted to the interests of the Rialto and Grauman's theatres and especially designed to appeal to the movie fans of Los Angeles as a magazine as well as being a program.

The magazine is something which no other Los Angeles house has as yet offered its patrons. The magazine contains live reading matter and suggestions from patrons are heartily invited as a means of making it more readable. A mailing list of considerable size has already been obtained.

Small Towner Builds Model Lobby Display

On the opposite page is a cut showing a lobby display for "Isobel" designed by L. L. Devereaux of the firm of Devereaux and Tippel operating the Loyalty theatre, International Falls, Minn., which to our mind is the highest type of small town exploitation of its kind to ever come to our attention.

The cabin on top of the canopy is built of real logs. The trees are the real article procured from the nearby pine woods. The cut-outs were obtained from the 24's and 6's. The mounted 3's and 6's appearing directly in front of the theatre are surrounded by frames made of real logs. By stringing lights around the cabin through the cut-outs a very splendid illumination was obtained at night, which added to the realistic appearance of the entire whole.

Beaumont Theatre Decorates for Moore Picture

Manager Barr, of the People's theatre, Beaumont, Tex., exploited his showing of "Hold Your Horses," by following out a lobby suggestion made to him by Miss Jean Darnell, Goldwyn's exploiter in the South.

Out of a piece of beaver board fourteen feet high and six feet wide was cut a horseshoe and a shamrock. The stem and three leaves of the shamrock were painted green, while the horseshoe was silvered. Placed in the entrance to the lobby, the great horseshoe and shamrock stared passers-by in the face and they all stopped to look at it.

In the center of the shamrock was a large head of Tom Moore, wearing the New York street sweeper's helmet. On the top leaf of the green shamrock, which projected a foot or two above the top of the arch of the horseshoe was painted in large black type the name of the star, while the title of the photoplay was printed across the top of the horseshoe and down each side.

"Hold Your Horses" posters, stills and enlargements helped to make the lobby most attractive.

Rialto, Denver, Tries Out Hand Painted Lobby Displays

The Rialto theatre, Denver, Colo., is the latest house to adopt the hand painted idea for lobby decorations after one experiment which proved an artistic and financial success. The hand painted lobby designs were tried out for the first time when Paramount's "The Witching Hour" was played at the house.

Here is Manager Joseph L. Plunkett and his New York Mark Strand birthday cake used last week as a stage setting for a vocal number by the Mark Strand quartette and in celebration of the theatre's seventh anniversary. The singers' heads were disclosed when the petals of the prop flowers dropped down

Danville, Pa., Takes First Lesson in Exploitation

Danville, Pa., spruced up considerably and took its first lesson in motion picture exploitation coincidently with the appearance of Eli M. Orowitz, Paramount exploiter for the Philadelphia territory. Orowitz came to Danville to exploit "Something to Think About," which was scheduled for an early appearance at the Luna theatre.

The exploiter took advantage of the coming spring season to obtain the cooperation of retail merchants in window displays, using the opportune time of year as an excuse for preaching a lesson on tidying up show windows, although it wasn't stated in such crude form.

The exploitation man had secured the best locations in town; and the windows he selected spread the doctrine of "Something to Think About" in full width streamers. Fashion shops, millinery stores and provision emporiums alike shared in the exploitation campaign.

An intensive newspaper campaign was also conducted, the Danville Evening Press featuring a double truck advertising tie-up which Orowitz had solicited from local merchants.

Garbrach Uses Local Talent in Prologue

Ames, Iowa, is a little city of only 10,000, but it is a college town, and when Manager Joe Garbrach, of the Ames theatre, played "Twin Beds," he made a hit with the "Rah-Rah!" boys.

In this particular instance, he had two miniature beds made, and mounted them upon pedestals, one on either side in his outside lobby. They attracted attention.

As an introduction, he used a prologue, employing local talent and some bedroom suites loaned for the occasion by an enterprising furniture store. During the nine-minute prologue the actors, students from the colleges, used lines from the stage play.

Good Advertising at Small Cost at Wichita Falls

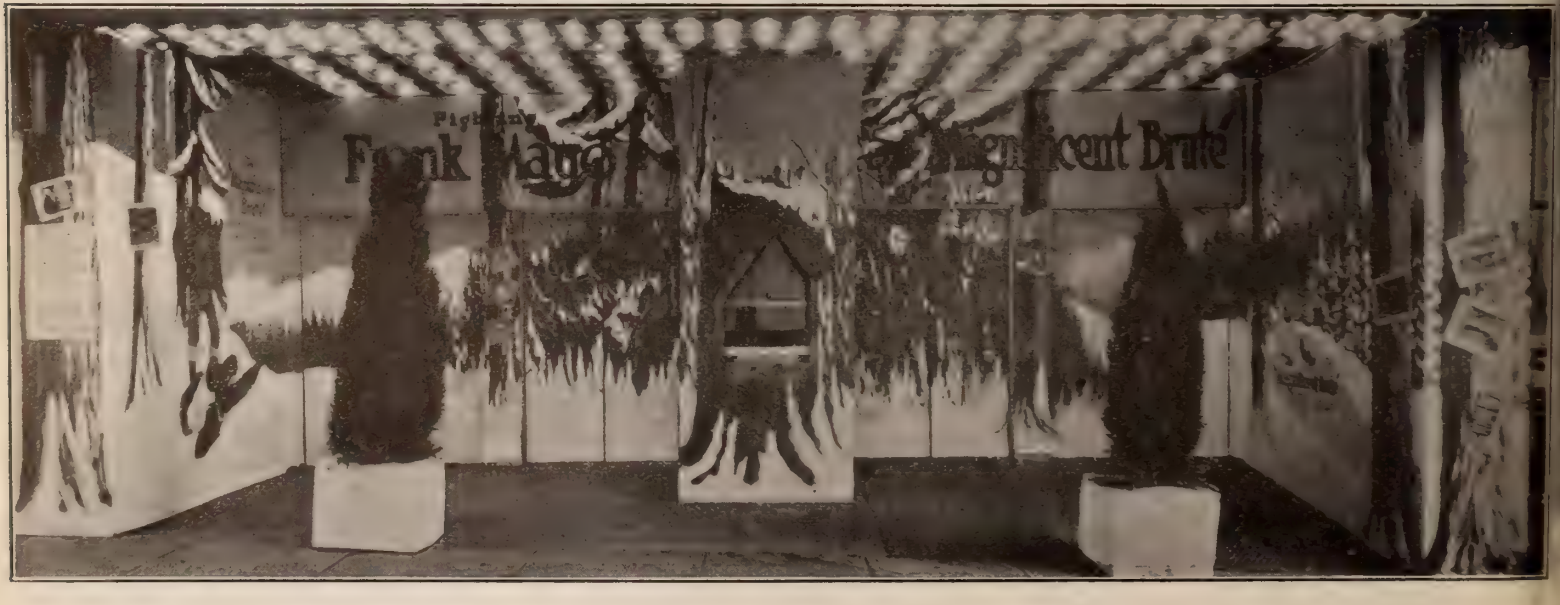
Robert Sparks advertising manager for the D. F. R. Enterprises, Inc., operating a string of picture houses in Texas, recently effected a business getting exploitation tie-up for "The Gilded Lily" showing at the Palace theatre, Wichita Falls, Texas, when he induced the local Studebaker car agency to furnish a machine for driving about town as illustrated in the accompanying cut.

Three usherettes of the theatre played the roles of the chauffeur and footman and the girl impersonating Mae Murray, costumed by a local store. The only cost to the theatre was the painting of the streamers used and a bunch of lilies.

Chambers Gets Results with Teaser Campaign

Stanley Chambers, manager of the Palace theatre, Wichita, Kansas, whose extensive use of big space in newspaper display advertising has brought widespread exhibitor attention to his theories on this subject, recently showed Wichita that he also realized the value of small space in teaser campaigns.

Mr. Chambers used a neat teaser campaign to herald his presentation of "Not Guilty." The campaign consisted of nothing more than the use of the title in small space with a line or so of interest-whetting illusion. But it brought the business.



Here is the way the Clemmer theatre, Seattle decorated the lobby for the showing of "The Magnificent Brute"

Canadian Paper Helps Put Over "Dinty"

Canada is just as susceptible to Amerian exploitation ideas as is this country tself, according to the results which H. N. Jernberg, manager of the Allen theare, Winnipeg, found incident to the exploitation campaign he put over for "Dinty."

Through the circulation department of he Manitoba Free Press, the cooperation f the newsboys circulating that newspaer was obtained. In addition to selling he greatest number of newspapers, the ewsboys who yelled "Dinty" the greatst number of times and the loudest were iven long-term passes to the theatre.

The climax of the campaign came when Mr. Jernberg arranged for a parade of ight hundred boys. The kids carried baners announcing the showing of "Dinty" t the Allen theatre. This selling campaign rought great results.

Baltimore American Aids Press Agents

Two unique exploitation stunts were put over in Baltimore last week. One was manouvered by Wells Hawks, advance agent for "Over the Hill," showing at the New Lyceum theatre, and the other by Martin J. Porter, publicity agent of Hippodrome theatre, where "Dice of Destiny" was given.

The Baltimore American each morning publishes in its columns a half-page miniature newspaper entitled "The Junior American," which is edited by a Junior Press Club of high-school boys under the direction of Arthur F. McCullough. Hawks and Porter gave the youthful reporters a treat to their shows and arranged with Editor McCullough to have criticisms appear in "The Junior American."

The stunt served to test the ability of the youths to report on motion pictures and brought to each picture a review of nearly half a page. The articles appeared over the names of the writer's.

Franklin's "The Kid" Prologue

Unique Stage Setting Built at Shea's Hippodrome Buffalo

HAROLD B. FRANKLIN, managing director of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, put on an excellent prologue last week when he presented "The Kid." Inasmuch as a lot of the action of "The Kid," takes place in an alley, Mr. Franklin conceived the idea of reproducing a Buffalo waterfront alleyway on Hippodrome stage. He sent a photographer along the city's harbor district in search of a typical alley scene. The photographer was successful in procuring a view at the foot of Fly street. The photo was given to the Hippodrome art staff and stage carpenter and within a few days the alleyway was built.

Of course an alleyway, no matter how colorful, is not a very appealing stage picture, so Mr. Franklin added the color with the addition of a quartette of well known local soloists. Three of the members were dressed as newsboys and bootblacks and one as a policeman. When the curtain was unveiled it disclosed three of the quartette playing "Nubian Polo" with the cop entering the scene. Instead of arresting the arm of the law became friendly with the boys and all agreed to sing. What followed was one of the most delightful bits of musical entertainment heard in the Hippodrome in a long while. The boys sang popular songs, with the Hippodrome orchestra accompanying them and the audience insisted on recalling the four song birds for many encores at every performance.

In advance of the presentation of "The Kid," Mr. Franklin placed a number of his inimitable hand-drawn advertisements in the local newspapers, which attracted the attention of all Buffalo. The program cover was an eye-catching one as was the big ad used in the press on opening day.

In the Hippodrome lobby Mr. Franklin placed a number of unusual frames announcing "The Kid." Along the top of the marque he erected three large signs showing the time of the various screenings and telling of the fact that performances began a half hour earlier every day during the week. "The Kid" smashed box-office records at the Hippodrome.

Showing the lobby decorations, including a special painting which the Leader theatre used to exploit "If Only Jim"

"Faith Healer" Campaig at Indianapolis

A clever, well rounded exploitatic campaign and an attractive lobby fro were the outstanding features that a tended the introduction of "The Fai Healer," at the Isis theatre, Indianapoli Ind.

Oscar A. Kantner, Paramount e ploiter, was responsible for the exploit tion campaign, which followed sound co servative lines in enlisting the co-oper tion of the local papers and the merchan of the city. One of the best example of profitable co-operation was obtaine from Indianapolis' leading musical sto which gave an entire window to the m tion picture.

The tie up aroused considerable notic because of the artistic arrangement of th window. The title of the picture, "Th Faith Healer," was arranged in lette two feet high to form an arch over th display of pianos which the store wa boosting. This was supplemented by cu outs from the posters and advertisin cards. A basket of flowers furnished a attractive front for the window.

The lobby of the Isis theatre had bee given careful attention as part of th elaborate program for a fitting presenta tion of this picture.

Prospective Patrons Selec Name for Theatre

Joseph Stern has obtained columns c free publicity and aroused a great deal c interest among his Roseville, N. J., town men in his new theatre, now under cor struction, by allowing his prospectiv patrons to select a name for the propose edifice.

Twelve hundred and seventy-six sugges tions were received, from which was se lected by popular choice, the "Rivoli," a the name of the new house.

Lieber Campaign Interests School Children

"Ole Swimmin' Hole" Exploitation at Indianapolis Gets Educational Authorities' Co-operation

WHEN Ralph Lieber, manager of the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, booked "The Ole Swimmin' Hole," he decided to direct his exploitation campaign especially toward the school children.

Despite the fact that there always has been an iron-clad rule in the schools of Indianapolis against the circulation of any kind of advertising in the classrooms, either verbally or by printed matter, Mr. Lieber decided to make an effort to get "The Ole Swimmin' Hole" advertised before the youngsters.

At a special meeting of the Board of School Commissioners, in which even the newspaper men were excluded, Mr. Lieber managed to get a letter through the closely guarded doors of the school board to the president of the organization extending them a cordial invitation to attend a pre-release showing.

The letter also asked them to set a definite time for the showing. In this way he felt that he would at least receive a reply to his letter.

The next morning the president of the board called with the information that they would view the picture at noon. Every member of the board attended the showing and so far everything had gone well, but getting the picture brought to the attention of the children was another matter.

Knowing that the board had previously been the center of considerable agitation for more wholesome entertainment on the screen in Indianapolis, Mr. Lieber took advantage of this situation by asking them if they "were sincere in their desire for a higher standard of screen amusement." Naturally this brought a hasty reply in the affirmative, which opened the way for the ultimate goal of Mr. Lieber's efforts.

"If you are," Mr. Lieber said, "there is one way in which they can be obtained. If good, clean, wholesome entertainment can be made to make more money than any other kind of pictures, then the theatres will book nothing but pictures of the highest standard.

"Your board, which deals directly with more than 70,000 school children in this city, can make such pictures as 'The Ole Swimmin' Hole' the most profitable investment of all for the theatres if you will get behind them and have the teachers in all the classrooms of the city endorse this picture as the kind of entertainment the children ought to see."

They did.

Every principal of the nearly 100 grade schools in the city the next day received a letter from the president of the board instructing them to request the classroom teachers to recommend "The Ole Swimmin' Hole" to the pupils.

And, on top of this, following another private showing for the benefit of the Parent Teachers associations, virtually every member of that organization, which comprises the majority of the parents of the school children of Indianapolis, was asked by those who attended the pre-review showing to do everything possible to back the production.

The backing of this organization on previous productions has proved of great value in several instances.

The members of the Indiana Board of Motion Picture Endorsers also viewed the picture in advance and through the courtesy of the three high school papers managed to have a special announcement made calling attention to the wholesomeness and entertainment value of the pictorial version of Riley's classic.

Representatives of the three Indianapolis newspapers also were given an opportunity to see the picture in advance of the showing, which permitted them to run reviews the day before the opening, which resulted in an unusual business at the start.

Barbee Pulls Novelty "Devil" Stunt

Chicago Exploitation Brings Many Free Newspaper Stories

MOTION PICTURE exploitation in Chicago, as everyone conversant with the situation knows, is almost entirely confined to the newspaper column because of the unusually strict police regulations, which prohibit any "ballyhoo stunts" of any kind.

The same police regulations, however, were used by Wm. S. Barbee, president of Barbee's Loop theatre, to engineer the most successful publicity stunt put over in Chicago in years—last week. In fact it was the help of the police department itself which turned the trick for "The Devil," which was showing at the theatre.

Thousands of Chicago loop shoppers observed the erection of a scaffold outside of the fourth floor windows of a building on one of the busiest corners of the city, with varying degrees of curiosity. At high noon, when the scaffold had been completed, two pretty girls dressed in artists' smocks and accompanied by a scarlet-clad man, costumed as "The Devil," popped forth from a window to the scaffold and busily engaged themselves in painting an immense sign announcing the opening of "The Devil," at the theatre, a block distant.

This performance was repeated daily for several days until the noontide crowds on the corner became so great as to obstruct traffic. On the fourth day, the police captain in charge of the district issued orders for the arrest of the pseudo devil and his fair assistants. This was responsible for far more publicity than Mr. Barbee had hoped for.

The burly captain of the law, far past his day of physical agility, found his way to the fourth floor windows of the building at the command of his superior officer, therefore. He, with typical politeness, suggested to the young ladies and their escort that they come in from the gaze of the interested public and permit the traffic to proceed on its way undisturbed. They, just as politely, refused. Upon which the policeman decided to use force. When an immense foot, followed by a gigantic leg stepped out of the window and reached for the scaffold, which was suspended by ropes from the roof, the girls, giggling with glee, wiggled and wobbled the temporary framework so that the policeman's foot missed it entirely and he nearly took a plunge to the street. Again he tried, with a like result. The roars of the crowd could be heard for blocks as he attempted each expedition. He then resorted to strategy—jumping from one place to another until he got the fair painter unawares—(and by the ankle) and hauled her unceremoniously into the office building. He fished for the other one successfully and jumped out onto the scaffolding to remove the last source of public interest, "The Devil's" replica. Evading the policeman's brawny grasp, the object of his pursuit slid "like the devil" down a rope—and into the waiting arms of a second minion of the law, where he was detained until his fair assistants reached the sidewalk.

Then all three were bundled into the patrol wagon and taken to the police station. Here the Celtic sense of humor of the police captain resulted in their release after a short lecture.

The police reporters had been tipped off to the coming event and without exception they realized the humorous attributes of the story, which received a page one play in six out of the possible seven newspapers.

The plans and details of this stunt were arranged and executed by Irving Mack & Company, who are specializing in this work in Chicago territory.

This shows the Chicago police "catching the devil" as explained by the accompanying story relative to the exploitation of "The Devil" at Barbee's Loop theatre

Canton Visited by "Mysterious Lady"

Manager A. Bernower of the Alhambra theatre, Canton, put over one of the most comprehensive and successful publicity campaigns recently in connection with "Prisoners of Love." Bernower tied his exploitation to every known medium of advertising. He secured the cooperation of the department stores who carried in their regular display ads, a story about a mysterious lady who would be at their store at such and such a time, and the identification of whom would entitle one to a prize of $15. Every day, the mysterious lady was to be found at a different store, so the announcements shifted daily, but were continuously before the public. The newspapers, especially the Canton Evening Repository, gave considerable space to the stunt, other than in the movie section. The paper also conducted an essay contest in connection with the picture. It was to be confined to one hundred and fifty words on the subject: "Can a Girl's Own Instincts be Relied Upon to Find and Choose the Right Man?"

Thousands of answers poured into the Repository office. The mysterious girl was finally located on the day preceding the opening of "Prisoners of Love," in front of the Market Arcade, at Market Avenue, where previous announcements had said she would mail a letter at 1:45 P. M.

The prizes were $15 first prize; $10 second prize; $5 third prize and thirty pair of passes for the remaining prizes.

Bernower says he has never pulled an exploitation campaign that was so much talked about as this one was.

Bergum's Decorations for "Brewster's Millions"

This is the lobby of the Garden theatre, Des Moines, Iowa, showing how Manager Dan E. Bergum decorated for the showing of "Brewster's Millions."

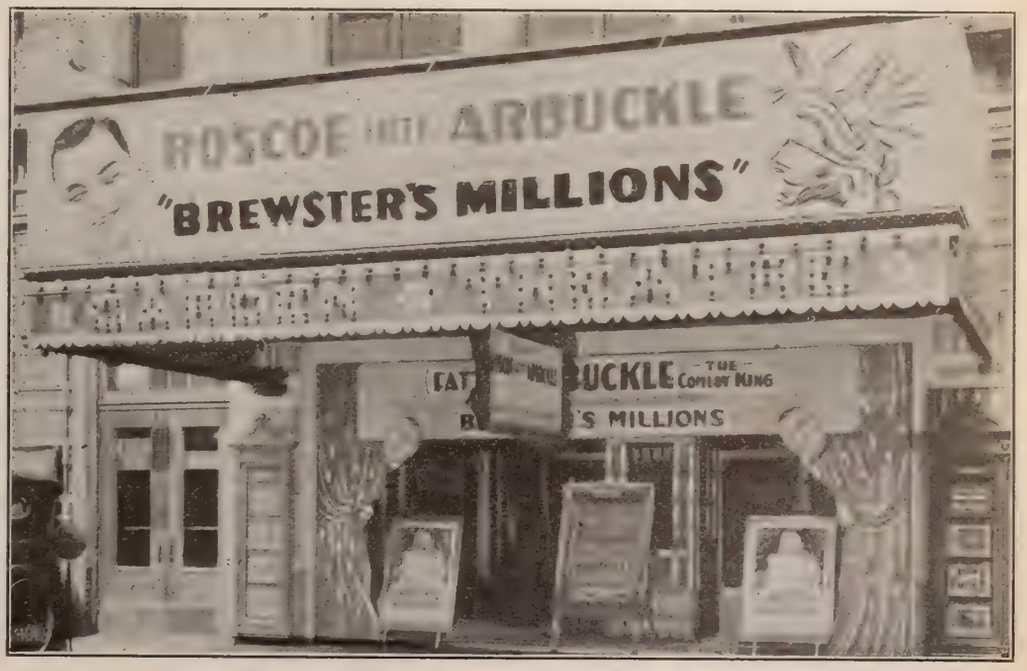
The entire lobby was made from the material obtainable at any Paramount exchange, with the exception of the light frame work. The heads used on the drapes were taken from the six-sheet, the banners on the canopy were reproduced from the twenty-four sheet and the one sheets were made from the regular lithograph one sheets.

Another of Jess Day's Lobby Displays

Jess Day, manager of the Palace theatre in Des Moines, is a great believer in lobby displays. For that reason, on nearly all of his bigger pictures, he arranges a specially built lobby of no small dimensions. The above is the lobby used by Mr. Day on "O'Malley of the Mounted."

The large cut-out in the center was a six-sheet cut-out and the lower part of the figure was hand-painted. The rest of the lobby was by hand.

Extra space in the newspapers and the bill boards furnished the balance of the exploitation.



This is the way Dan Burgum, manager of the Garden theatre, Des Moines, decorated his lobby for the showing of "Brewster's Millions"

Questionnaire as Exploitation Novelty

A questionnaire was the means employed by Frank L. Browne, manager of Clune's Broadway theatre, Los Angeles, to arouse unusual interest in "The Plaything of Broadway."

His idea was to have the people tell him, instead of telling them, what the picture and star were. In order to do this, however, it was necessary for him to tell them first.

The solution of this apparently ambiguous problem was accomplished by a questionnaire which was in the form of a postcard and read:

$10 REWARD

Will be paid for the best answers to these questions. Second prize, 4 loge seats; third prize, 4 reserved seats; fourth prize, 2 seats.

Who is Justine Johnstone?

What film company is she with?

Is she a blonde or brunette?

What is the name of her next picture to be shown in this city?

When is it to play Clune's Broadway theatre?

How many people will pay to see it the first day?

Mr. Browne got out 25,000 of these cards, which were placed in stores, apartment houses, hotels and homes. Naturally all of the questions except the last could be answered by Mr. Browne. On that the guess of his patrons was nearly as good as his own, because the contest closed the day before the picture was shown and he had no means of knowing just how many paid admissions there would be. But it was a good stunt to arouse curiosity and interest—and it kept the telephones ringing continuously.

Mr. Browne followed up the questionnaire campaign with newspaper advertising and other displays and these were rendered particularly effective because of the interest created through the little postcards. It is safe to say that the patrons of Clune's Broadway, together with a very considerable number of other people in Los Angeles, could give the life history of Miss Johnstone as well as much interesting data on her pictures as a result of this stunt.

Thatcher Stages Highly Original Prologue

H. J. Thatcher, manager of the Strand theatre, Salina, Kansas, one of the leaders in artistic presentation, even though his city is only about fifteen thousand inhabitants, recently presented a prologue for "A Small Town Idol" that created no end of favorable comment among Salinains.

The prologue was entitled "The Temple Dancer," and many various lighting effects were used in its presentation. The opening scene showed the King seated at his throne with two of his favorites, blue lights being used on the opening. Then to the strain of a weird Oriental dance a dancer slowly appeared in the doorway to the left, descended the marble steps bearing an incense bowl. She approached the throne, placed the incense before the king and then went into the dance. As she approached the throne the foot lights were brought up bright red, and the entire setting was flooded from the booth by a lavender flood, and the border lights remained blue, giving it a beautiful effect. The dancer in a white spot.

As the dance waxed faster the king's favorites tried to draw his attention to them again, only to be pushed aside. The finale of the dance came when the dancer fell exhausted at the feet of the king, to slowly regain her feet and advance with the incense bowl before the throne, after which she exited through the balcony as shown in the accompanying cut.

Sid Grauman's Prologue on "Chickens"

Closely linking picture and prologue with stage settings and songs has been practised successfully for a long time by exhibitors, but Sid Grauman of Los Angeles went a step or two further in connection with the presentation of a prologue to "Chickens."

Mr. Grauman not only duplicated a scene from the picture where MacLean drives his car through a barn door, but also the prologue actors took for many of their lines several titles from the picture.

The stage setting showed a typical farmyard with a "garage" well in the foreground. A contented looking cow is shown in a corral adjoining the "garage," and she munches her cud peacefully, and digs deep into a barrel for more fodder as the prologue is presented. Three dozen chickens cluck around in happy fashion in a pen nearby, and the usual assortment of farm machinery, harness, rakes and hand plows as well as small implements are scattered about.

The performers are dressed in typical farmer garb, and the numbers include vocal and instrumental selections, a girl with a banjo playing "Way Down on the Farm," the title of the prologue being one of the features. A juvenile dancer and half a dozen singers who render the old fashioned melodies typical of two generations ago give a realistic and pleasing atmosphere to the entire setting.

Plunkett Has Original Prologue Plan

New York Mark Strand Theatre to Stage Twelve Minute Musical Comedies

JOSEPH PLUNKETT, managing director of the New York Mark Strand theatre, presents a new type of prologue this week in the "original musical prologue" being staged for "The Sky Pilot."

In the broadest sense, Mr. Plunkett's new idea aims to "harmonize color, lyrics, melody and illusion," but basically it is one of the most courageous bits of exhibitor enterprise on record since it means nothing more or less than producing a twelve-minute light comedy opera, of which both the lyrics and music were originated and composed especially for that particular prologue.

The setting for Mr. Plunkett's "Sky Pilot" prologue represents a scene just outside of a small western town's main resort for cow-punchers. Stage properties such as saddlery, hitching posts, water troughs, etc., lend to the effect of the scene. A rosy glow of sunset is cast over the stage.

The action starts when the group of cowboys seated on the veranda of the saloon notice the approach of a man garbed in the costume of a preacher. The quartette sings its greeting in a rather skeptical tone. The "sky pilot" replies. A novel bit of music is introduced when the cowboys give the stranger the "horse laugh" when they learn that he is a preacher. However, this tempo suddenly changes when one of the punchers, rebukes the boys for telling the pilot he is out of his enviroment, and declares that:

"The pilot's Johnny-on-the-spot,
Because he came in the neck of time,
To marry me to that girl o' mine."

Then the theme brings out the fact that one of the group is a lovesick cowboy, whose affection for "Gwen" is the biggest part of his rugged life. The quartette song "Gwen" is indeed a pretty number, and in view of the popularity of girl songs at present, stands a good chance of becoming well known.

During the action of the prologue, the scene changes from sunset to dusk to moonlight. As the curtain descends, a shaft of moonlight is peeping through the trees. The love-sick cowboy is dreaming of his love, with the sky pilot attempting to console him as the curtain closes.

With regard to his decision to "ban" the spoken word from his prologues, Mr. Plunkett declared that: "The motion picture is correctly called 'the silent art.' It is wordless—and because of that it is so wonderful. I do not believe that the prologue which allows speeches of the nature of skits, and acts, has a proper place in a motion picture theatre.

"My conception of motion picture presentation is the harmonizing of color, sentiment, melody, lyric and illusion into a composite whole that makes the audience entirely forget just what the nature of the prologue is. I have been studying various means by which this effect could be secured for many months. Out of the process of elimination came what I believe to be the evolution of prologue art to the ultimate. And that was brought about by beautifying light opera with colorful effects, and human-interest pantomime. That is precisely what the original musical prologue will accomplish."

The lyrics and music for the original musical prologue for "The Sky Pilot" were written by Paul M. Sarazan of Associated First National. Mr. Sarazan worked in conjunction with Mr. Plunkett, with the idea of not only originating something that could be used at the Mark Strand on Broadway, but a creation that could be offered as a tangible proposition to exhibitors throughout the country. That Sarazan succeeded is shown by the fact that First National's press sheet on "The Sky Pilot" will prominently display the musical prologue as presented by Mr. prologue score will also be compiled in a Plunkett, in addition to giving complete stage directions, light effects, etc. The small folder for exhibitor use. It will be supplied free of charge.

Music and the Picture

What About Jazz?

By Charles D. Isaacson

A GREAT many exhibtors and musicians have written to me again and again: What about jazz?

I have never said a great deal on the subject in all this time that I have been writing to the readers of the NEWS. But I may very often have given some pointed and undeniable impressions concerning my personal feelings on the matter.

Now I want to speak my mind on the subject of jazz and syncopation and all that goes under the heading of popular music. Music publishers, song-writers and kings of the moaning saxophone, pay attention!

Whatever I may think personally of jazz, whether I like it in my home or not, whether I consider it elevating or degrading, valuable or vulgarity, makes not the slightest bit of difference in the music department of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS. And for myself you may substitute any authority in the musical world, and his personal feelings, likes or dislikes would make not the slightest bit of difference.

Naturally with my peculiarly constituted temperament and ideals, I should like to be the means of raising taste, but as I have so often said, my readers here haven't any time to take away from their business of making money and building patronage, to think about movements for humanity.

The matter before the house is this:

What about jazz for the motion picture theatre?

This question is not related to the one which might ask, "What about jazz for the concert hall, the home, the vaudeville theatre, the burlesque house, the hotel, the Sunday school." . . . Just the motion picture theatre, which is peculiar unto itself.

The other day I happened to pick up the Cosmopolitan Magazine, and there on the first page I saw an editorial by George Ade on "Music Lovers." The famous humorist was in his best vein. He poked fun at the overly musical musician, and asked: "Why is it that whenever you see a girl whose face looks as if she had just bitten upon a lemon that you say she must play the piano very well?" He declares, "None of us would like to live with a person who knows music too well, or with a girl who had been thoroughly conservatoried."

He goes on to say that "because a man confesses to a liking for old hymn tunes and minstrel airs is no reason for him to be ashamed, yet just because a man is a jazz hound is no reason why he should sneer at the fellow who gets a kick out of the Boston Symphony Orchestra." . . . What George Ade did was virtually to jazz up a lot of arguments I have been giving out to the poor unfortunates who have been forced to listen to my talks on music. Thereupon I took my pencil in hand and wrote to several of my friends among the musicians and asked them what they thought of jazz, etc. . . . The letters have been coming back, with answers from critics, pianists, violinists, opera singers, and others. And what they don't think of jazz for publication is a crime. But nearly all of them add a postscript to the effect that in off moments they can indulge in a jazz debacuh with delightful and shameless abandon (not for publication'. One of the loveliest letters came from a lady who follows the profession commonly or generally known I believe as "coonshouting." Her name is Sophie Tucker, and what she doesn't think of all these highbrows who can't come down to earth and jazz it, isn't to be put into ordinary words. Miss Tucker says that jazz is an art, and she points to herself as an example, and she threatens that if she's ever given a call to sing in those dry, uninteresting, sleepy grand operas she'll shimmy all over the stage and jazz every bar. That's what she threatens.

Every once in a while when I tell my opinions about music of different kinds, I get into trouble with somebody. The rea great musicians somehow or somewhere ha a lurking suspicion that I'm a queer duck, lo ering the dignity of art; the really down-t earth harmony hounds of the syncopation st prise, say that I am spoiling their game a running them and their starving children the poorhouse. You see I believe that wha ever serves to awaken a love for what beautiful, though it be the most slo bery ditty ever written, has accomplish a purpose. Whatever serves to do har whether it be the chords of immortal Wagn or the charnel housekeeper who preaches su gestiveness in the guise of a dance or a so —is bad. A very bad bad is worse than a li tle bad, and the dispensers of syncopated a banal vulgarity are worse than the same broc in grand opera, where the purpose is slak over with a costume of beauty. A fine good better than a cheap good, and the songs Schubert which are immortal are infinitely mo important than the well-meaning simple fiv and-ten-cent-store writers.

Music is on levels, and the higher the lev the better for the listener. But it's all wro to sneer at everything which isn't in the line immortals, just as much so as it's ridiculo for the devotee of jazz to laugh jeeringly the master works.

For myself, the cheap music might just well not exist. I confess to a falling for ce tain forms of captivating jazz, just as a tho oughly conservative gentleman might adm that he takes a "snack" once in a while. could do without the jazz, but Lord knows couldn't get along without the other music.

To me the test of music is its sincerity. Di the composer mean something truly? Did h just decide to write some notes or was he move by a deep impulse? If he means truly what h wrote, then he's a whole lot better than a be ter educated musician who meant nothing b jumbled a deal of high-sounding phrases. Fo me, it's better to hear a simple song like Bar lett's "A Dream," than some mystical sound ing but insincere highbrow composition. O course, when you read Beethoven and Moza and Chopin—there's the greatest of all. I have said elsewhere, and I'd like to repeat here the following axiom:

"There is much music of composers lon dead, music now living; and music of compose now living, music long dead."

Most jazz to me seems vulgar, plainly an obviously and intentionally a call to the lowe instincts in man; and it is as plain as can b that music can be itself or perverted into pan dering appeals.

Yet, the motion picture musical director mus forget his high aims and forget his desire t be a maker of taste—when it comes to th question of his box-office.

Jazz must be considered irrespective of it vulgarity, its pandering tendencies, its lowe ing of taste. It must be considered in its plac

That I practice what I preach will be ob served in a study of the musical indication which I have made in the past for the Brook lyn Strand, and more recently for the Kinet

WHAT THE MAKERS SAY ABOUT PICTURES

Cathrine Curtis, screen artist, producer and executive head of the Cathrine Curtis Corporation

Striking Contrasts in New Hawley Vehicle

Contrasts in the appearances of the principal player in different phases of the story and contrasts in the character of the sets used are declared to be a feature of Wanda Hawley's new starring vehicle for Realart release, entitled "The House that Jazz Built." Miss Hawley plays the part of a woman who changes in appearance from slim to stout back to slim as the story develops. The star's make-up to suit the parts is said to be "a marvel of camouflage."

The over-furnished apartment of a lazy wife, the beauty of interior decoration of an artful woman's house and finally the orderly home of a wife regenerated from habits of slovenliness are declared to present striking contracts. Penrhyn Stanlaws was the art decorator.

"The Four Horsemen" in Two More Cities

Metro Pictures Corporation has completed arrangements to present the Rex Ingram Production, "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," within a month at the Garrick theatre, Detroit; and the Sam S. Shubert theatre, Pittsburg.

These exhibitions will bring the total number of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" companies to five. The picture is now at the Astor theatre, New York; the La Salle theatre, Chicago, and the Mission theatre, Los Angeles. The picture was moved Sunday matinee to the Astor theatre, New York.

Other premieres are being planned for the near future in other large cities of the country. Among the first of these to be given opportunity of witnessing "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" are St. Louis and San Francisco.

Big Laboratories Combined

Hollywood Plants of Rothacker's and Joseph Aller's Amalgamated

TWO dominant figures in the film laboratory field join forces in the new Rothacker-Aller Laboratories, at present operating on Melrose Avenue in Hollywood. From now on Joseph Aller and Waterson R. Rothacker are business associates.

The Rothacker-Aller Laboratories is a corporation controlled by the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, with Mr. Aller as the resident head. The officers of the Laboratories are: Waterson R. Rothacker, president and treasurer; Joseph Aller, vice-president and general manager; and J. Wesley Smith, secretary.

Mr. Aller was born in Russia. He finished his education in a New York Technical school. He entered the photographic business in 1898. From 1904 to 1913 he was laboratory superintendent for the American Biograph Company. Until D. W. Griffith went to New York in 1920 he had full charge of the Griffith laboratory activities. When Griffith moved east, Mr. Aller went into business for himself at the former Griffith laboratories. Some of the screen's most famous pictures went through the laboratory under his personal supervision.

"Mr. Aller is a true artist," said Mr. Rothacker. "He has in him that heaven-sent spark found in great painters, musicians, actors and directors. The motion picture industry became the winner when Mr. Aller's artistic genius sought expression through the film laboratory.

"Anybody can direct a film and anybody can develop a film. In either case the results would be determined by the man doing the job. Mr. Aller puts art into the laboratory work just as a truly great director puts creative art into a photoplay.

"It means much to the artist behind the megaphone and to the artists in front of the camera to have the creation of a picture taken up by another artist where they leave off. When the exposed negative is sent to the Rothacker-Aller Laboratories in Hollywood, it will mean that the completion of the finished screen drama will be in the hands of a man whose laboratory artistry will supplement the artistry in the studio."

Predicts Success of Drive

Reports from Exchanges on "Educational Week". Highly Optimistic

A STATEMENT from the Educational home-office declares that reports from the branch-offices on prospects for Educational Week, May 1 to 7, predict a sweeping success for the campaign. President E. W. Hammons in urging all branch-offices to book every theatre possible during the drive instructs that the variety of the Educational product, "Everything but the feature," be especially emphasized.

Since no pre-releases will be permitted in order to make a showing, the salesmen are being instructed to call attention to the April schedule, which includes "Ready to Serve," a Chester comedy directed by W. S. Campbell and starring "Snooky" the Humanzee; "Short & Snappy," a Christie comedy with Bobby Vernon and Vera Steadman, "Sneakers," a second Christie, with Neal Burn and Dorothy Devore, "The Greenhorn," a Mermaid, starring Lloyd Hamilton, and "Crowning Torchy," one of the Sewell Ford comedies, starring Johnny Hines.

Single reel comedies are represented by two Vanity, "Hubby Behave" has Irene Dalton and Earl Rodney and "Take Your Time" the same players. There are also two Gayetys, "Turkey Dressing" and "Dummy Love."

Robert C. Bruce is represented by "The Man Who Always Sat Down," picturing his flight over the Matterhorn and Mount Blanc. There are two Chester Outings, "The Worst Was True" showing Chinese eating customs and "Hiting Hot Spots," picturing the Geyser region of Maoriland in New Zealand. Screenics are represented by a double subject "Philippine Futurity" and "An Angle in Idaho."

Last of the Hudson's Bay Travel Pictures of four single reels appears on the same schedule, "An Eskimotion Picture," which delves deeply into the habits and customs of the people of the land of snows. In addition there are two releases of Kinograms each week.

In addition to these the entire product of Educational during the past year and its releases for the first week in May will also be available to exhibitors.

3,000 Attend Universal Picnic on Coast

Among the celebrities of the film world who were present at the barbecue and picnic at the Universal Santa Susanna ranch were Priscilla Dean, Carmel Myers, Edith Roberts, Eva Novak, Gladys Walton, Eileen Sedgwick, Harry Carey, Frank Mayo, Eddie Polo, Art Acord, Hoot Gibson, Lee Moran, Elmo Lincoln, Jack Perrin, Gertrude Olmsted, Mary Philbin, Billy Bletcher, William Welsh, Lola Campbell, Joey McCreery, Charles Insley. Twenty directors joined their stars in the merriment. They were Tod Browning, Erich Von Stroheim, Rollin Sturgeon, William Worthington, Stuart Paton, Jack Conway, Jack Ford, Norman Dawn, Robert Thornby, Reaves Eason, Fred Granville, Harry B. Harris, Edward Laemmle, Lee Kohlmar, King Baggot, J. P. McGowan, Albert Russell, Edward Kull, Harry Burns and Ward Hayes.

The affair was arranged by Carl Laemmle, president of Universal; R. H. Cochrane, vice-president; Abraham Stern, treasurer, and Irving G. Thalberg, general manager at the studio. More than 3,000 attended.

The ranch has just been leased by Universal and will have its first picture use in Carmel Myers' forthcoming story, "The Scarlet Shawl."

"Bill and Bob" Release Shows Lion's Capture

Pathe announces its new release of the "Adventures of Bill and Bob" series under the title of "Trapping the Mountain Lion." This series presents William and Robert Bradbury, eleven-year-old twins of the American Boy Scout type, in the roles of trappers. Their experiences in the trapping predatory animals of Western America are visualized in an interesting manner in this series which were produced by Cyrus J. Williams.

According to a statement from Pathe, the new release, "Trapping the Mountain Lion" surpasses in thrills and suspense the boys' previous exploits as picturized in "Trapping the Bobcat" and "Outwitting a Timber Wolf." All the details attending the capture of the cougar by the youngsters are graphically shown in the new subject.

Sing Sing Warden Commends "Proxies"

"Proxies," the latest Cosmopolitan Production to be released through Paramount, was shown at Sing Sing Prison, New York, Wednesday, April 13th. Eleven hundred prisoners saw the picture, and Major Lewis E. Lawes, warden of Sing Sing, also attended.

"'Proxies' is a picture with a splendid moral lesson, which is well told," Major Lawes said after the showing of the picture. "I enjoyed every moment of the picture. 'Proxies' also gave the prisoners a message of hope, and encouraged them to feel that if pictures of this nature are shown, the general public will learn to give a man a chance, even if he has served a prison sentence."

Press Books Ready for Two R-C Releases

Robertson-Cole announces that it has now available for distribution two press-books on current releases. The subjects covered by the new campaign books are "What's A Wife Worth?" and "Good Women." Special attention is given to a teaser campaign in connection with the subject "What's A Wife Worth?" Exploitation suggestions and advertising copy appropriate for each picture are included in the two campaign books.

Goldwyn Announces New Kendall Production

Goldwyn Distributing Corp., announces that it has secured the distribution rights to a Messmore Kendall production starring Vivian Martin, made under the tentative title of "Oiling Up Society." In contrast with "The Song of the Soul," the first Vivian Martin picture released by Goldwyn, this new picture will be a comedy.

Edward Childs Carpenter wrote the story, Harry C. Hoyt prepared the continuity and Sydney Olcott directed. The cast includes George Spink, G. Studdeford, W. MacEwen, Nadine Beresford, Ralph Bonsfield, Wallace Ray and Tom Meegan.

Ass'd Producers' Releases

Six New Pictures Are Announced for Release During May and June

GENERAL MANAGER AL LICHTMAN of Associated Producers, Inc., announces the release of six new productions during the months of May and June, representing the most recent work of as many of the Associated Producers.

The initial release in May will be a J. Parker Read, Jr., production "I Am Guilty," featuring Louise Glaum. The story is by Bradley King. On May 15, Mack Sennett's comedy special, "Home Talent," will be ready for general distribution. This will be followed on May 29 by a Thomas H. Ince special, "Mother o' Mine."

Allan Dwan's, "The Broken Doll," an adaption of the story, "Johnny Cucabod," by Wilbur Hall, will be released on June 12. A strong cast including Monte Blue and Mary Thurman will be seen in this special which was personally directed by Mr. Dwan. "The Foolish Matrons," a Maurice Tourneur production, from the widely-read novel by Donn Byrne, will be a mid-June release. Hobart Bosworth is the featured player of the cast which includes Doris May, Mildred Manning, Kathleen Kirkham and others of prominence. Clarence L. Brown co-directed with Mr. Tourneur. The locale of the production, which is a modern society drama, is New York. "The Foolish Matrons" will be available on June 16.

The first release of J. L. Frothingham through the "A. P." is an adaption of Peter B. Kyne's greatest story, which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post some time ago, "The Ten Dollar Raise." Edward Sloman directed the production. William V. Mong, Marguerite De La Motte, Pat O'Malley, Helen Jerome Eddy and others go to make up a strong cast in this initial Frothingham-A. P. special which will be released on June 26.

"The 'Big Six' announced above, should prove a strong 'tonic' for summer business as each and every one of the releases has excellent exploitation possibilities and all lend to an exceptional advertising camaipgn," declares the statement from Associated Producers.

Goldwyn Units All Active

Will Rogers Finishes "Doubling for Romeo"; Others on Location

WILL ROGERS has completed his next comedy, "Doubling for Romeo," an original scenario by Elmer L. Rice, at the Goldwyn studios in Culver City, Cal. His next vehicle will be "A Poor Relation," from Edward E. Rose's comedy. It will go into production within a short time. Bernard McConville, who wrote the continuity for "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," made the screen adaptation.

Jack Gilbert, until recently director for Hope Hampton, is the only member yet selected for the cast of "Who Shall Judge?", the next Reginald Barker Production, from an original scenario by Gouverneur Morris. The continuity of this photoplay was prepared by Ruth Wightman in consultation with the author.

Director Frank Lloyd and the company appearing in Rita Weiman's photoplay, "The Grim Comedian," leave on Thursday for Big Bear, Calif., to spend a week making exteriors. Director Wallace Worsley and the "Ace of Hearts" company left on Wednesday for Pinecrest, Calif., to make exteriors for this Gouverneur Morris original.

Tom Moore and Director Victor Schertzinger are in Santa Monica canyon making the picnic scenes for "Beating the Game," by Charles Kenyon. Director E. Mason Hopper is taking the hospital scenes for Mary Roberts Rinehart's first original, "The Glorious Fool." Richard Dix, who plays the male lead in this production, is practically a hermit these days as he raised the two weeks' growth of beard required by his role.

Arthur F. Statter has finished the continuity for Leroy Scott's scenario now known as "The Mother," while Charles Kenyon is putting Hall Caine's novel, "The Christian," into screen form. Lambert Hillyer has about completed the continuity for Katherine Newlin Burt's first original scenario, "The Man from Lost River." Rupert Hughes is preparing the continuity for his own original screen story, "From the Ground Up," written especially for Tom Moore. Gouverneur Morris is working on an original Chinese fantasy as yet unnamed.

"Buried Treasure" Still Scores in New York

Following its eight-week run at the Criterion, New York City, "Buried Treasure," the Cosmopolitan production, starring Marion Davies, is still playing to capacity audiences in New York, according to a statement from Cosmopolitan. It drew big crowds to B. S. Moss's Broadway theatre during its wtek's engagement there and is now playing all the Keith, Moss and Proctor houses in the city. "Buried Treasure" has also been booked for an indefinite run at the Randolph theatre in Chicago. The Cosmopolitan statement declares that the "magnificence of the settings of Joseph Urban and the exquisiteness of the natural scenery incorporated in the picture have induced exhibitors all over the country to book 'Buried Treasure.'" •

Vita Engages Priscilla Bonner for Lead

Priscilla Bonner has been selected to play the leading feminine role opposite Tom Gallery in "The Son of Wallingford," the Vitagraph special production which is now being filmed at the West Coast studios under the direction of the author, George Randolph Chester.

Miss Bonner played opposite Charles Ray in "Homer Comes Home." She has also appeared on the screen with Tom Moore, Jack Pickford and Will Rogers in "Honest Hutch." She also had roles in Viola Dana's "Home Stuff" and Marshall Neilan's "Bob Hampton of Placer."

"The Sky Pilot" Opens at New York Strand

The Cathrine Curtis Corporation of New York and California made its formal bow to the industry and the public as a producing organization with the opening at the Mark Strand theatre, New York, Sunday, April 17th, of a week's run on Broadway of "The Sky Pilot," a screen production of the novel of the same name by Ralph Connors.

"The Sky Pilot" was directed by King Vidor, and the cast includes Colleen Moore, John Bowers, David Butler, James Corrigan, Donald McDonald, Harry Todd and Kathleen Kirkham.

Notable Cast in Newest Torchy Comedy

Frank Monroe, now appearing on Broadway in the stage play, "Three Live Ghosts," has an important role in "Torchy's Frame Up," the new comedy produced by Master Films, Inc., and starring Johnny Hines, which will be released by Educational Exchange. Robert Kenyon, of "Potash and Perlmutter," is also in the cast and Dorothy Leeds continues as leading woman.

The first picture of this series will be released late next month. It is entitled "Torchy's Promotion."

Realart Release Announced

"Don't Call Me Little Girl" is Mary Miles Minter's New Film

"DON'T CALL ME LITTLE GIRL" is the latest Realart Star Franchise production with Mary Miles Minter, to be announced for release. It was adapted for the screen by Edith Kennedy from the Catherine Chisholm Cushing stage success, "Jerry."

Miss Minter is cast as Jerry, a madcap girl of eighteen who insists that twelve years is much too long for her aunt to be engaged to one man. The story is a rapidly moving comedy of domestic life, presenting Miss Minter as the center of a feminine triangle, her aunt and mother being the others in the spotlight.

Realart secured Joseph Henabery to direct the film. Mr. Henabery is responsible for the direction of such Roscoe Arbuckle successes as "The Life of the Party," "Brewster's Millions" and "The Travelling Salesman."

In the supporting cast is Jerome Patrick, who also carried leading roles in "The Furnace" and "Her First Elopement," two other Realart productions. Ruth Stonehouse is seen as Joan, the maiden aunt whose romance gives Jerry so much concern. Edward Flanagan, a member of the well known team of Flanagan and Edwards, is also in the cast. Winifred Greenwood portrays the mother who dresses her eighteen-year-old daughter as a girl of fifteen in order to advance her own matrimonial chances.

Coming Hodkinson Issues

Four Features Are Announced for Early Release Two Are Hampton's

THE W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces its list of coming releases. Among the productions scheduled for release in the near future are "The Man of the Forest," made by Benjamin Hampton from the story by Zane Grey; "The Light in the Clearing," a Dial Film production directed by T. Hayes Hunter; "A Certain Rich Man," which is another Hampton product; and the third independent Hugo Ballin production which is now being completed under the working title of "Ave Maria." It will be several months before the first Irene Castle production, now being directed by Edwin L. Hollywood, will reach the screen, states Hodkinson.

The cast for "The Man of the Forest" includes Carl Gantvoort, Claire Adams, Robert McKim, Charlotte Pierce, Jean Hersholt, Eugenia Gilbert, Frank Hayes, Charles Murphy and Frederick Starr.

"The Light in the Clearing" is based on Irving Bacheller's story of the same title; "A Certain Rich Man" is also based on a widely read novel, the author being William Allen White. The cast of "A Certain Rich Man" includes Robert McKim, Claire Adams, Carl Gantvoort, Jean Hersholt, Joseph J. Dowling, Lydia Knott, and Eugenia Gilbert.

Hugo Ballin's production, tentatively titled "Ave Maria," presents Wyndham Standing and Mabel Ballin in the principal roles. The Irene Castle production is based on a story written by Clarence Buddington Kelland and published in "Everybody's Magazine." Eve Unsell has written the continuity.

Two Sennett Subjects Are Announced

In the near future, Mack Sennett will release two new feature subjects under the titles "His Dream Girl" and "Her Dream Man." Both pictures will doubtless be available for distribution through Associated Producers, Inc., before late summer.

New Cosmopolitan Ready

"Woman God Changed" Scheduled for Early Release by Paramount

A STORY of dramatic power is promised by Cosmopolitan Productions in "The Woman God Changed," scheduled for early release through Paramount. This picture is based upon a story by Donn Byrne that appeared in Hearst's Magazine under the title of "Redemption Cove."

The picture, which is structurally novel in that the entire action is related in a court-room, develops the problem: Can a woman kill her faithless lover and yet be good at heart? Will the removal of an insidious environment cleanse from the woman's soul the guilt of homicide and set her before mankind as redeemed? This is the situation which confronts the jury that tries Anna Janssen (Seena Owen), and its verdict is said to be startling.

"The Woman God Changed" was directed for International Film Service Co., Inc., which makes Cosmopolitan Productions, by Robert G. Vignora. Many of the scenes were taken in the Bahama Islands. The cast includes besides Miss Owen, E. K. Lincoln, Lillian Walker, Henry Sedley, H. Cooper Cliff, Paul Nicholson, Joseph Smiley, Brian Darley and Templer Saxe. Al Ligouri, the cameraman, took every advantage of the luxuriant tropical scenes to present photography of a very high order, it is declared.

Because of the moral character of the story, Cosmopolitan Productions engaged Dr. Frank Crane, the well-known editorial writer, to write the titles for "The Woman God Changed." Dr. Crane is declared to have brought out in a telling manner the spiritual change that takes place in Anna Janssen after she is freed from the contamination of her fast "friends."

Geo. Melford on New Story

Seven Productions Under Way at Lasky Plant for Paramount Issue

GEORGE MELFORD began work Monday on his production for Paramount of E. Phillips Oppenheim's story, "The Great Impersonation." It is understood that James Kirkwood will be featured and that Ann Forrest will appear in the leading feminine role. The scenario is by Monte M. Katterjohn.

Last week marked the start of Wallace Reid's new Paramount Picture, directed by Frank Urson and written and scenarized by Byron Morgan. It is called "The Hell Diggers," and deals with the massive gold dredgers used in mining districts. This is the fifth picture Mr. Morgan has done for Mr. Reid. Following the completion of this picture, Wallace Reid will leave for New York to co-star with Elsie Ferguson in a film version of George Du Maurier's famous novel, "Peter Ibbetson" produced by George Fitzmaurice.

Cecil B. DeMille has gone on location for opening scenes of his next production for Paramount, the title of which remains unannounced as yet. The cast will include Dorothy Dalton, Mildred Harris, Conrad Nagel, Theodore Kosloff and others.

Gloria Swanson is almost through with her first star picture for Paramount, Elinor Glyn's "The Great Moment," scenarized by Monte Katterjohn, and directed by Sam Wood. As recently announced by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Edward Sheldon has written an original story which will be Miss Swanson's next vehicle.

William D. Taylor is busy on his production for Paramount of Henry Arthur Jones' play "The Lifted Veil" in which Ethel Clayton is starred. Julia Crawford Ivers wrote the adaptation and Charles Meredith plays the leading male role.

William DeMille will start some time in the near future upon his next Paramount production written by Rita Weiman, noted short story writer and dramatist. No title or cast has been selected as yet.

"The Heart of Maryland"

Tom Terriss Production of Famous Stage Play Released by Vitagraph Makes Fine Picture

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

The success achieved by David Belasco's "The Heart of Maryland" is one of the cherished traditions of the stage. In giving the screen a version of the drama Tom Terriss has set an example to moving pictures which they would do well to follow. He has preserved the dramatic action of the original. The story moves forward at just the right tempo to keep the interest unbroken. Every incident is told by action, and the scenario writer has followed the original construction as closely as the screen would permit. Given a plot that throbs with life and uses the Civil War merely as a background to a love story that is the center and the inspiration of every foot of film, scenario writer and director have been content to abide by these desirable conditions and have wasted no time on symbolic distraction which has no place in a drama that has sufficient vitality to set its own pace.

"The Heart of Maryland" is entertainment purely. The conflict of human wills is never absent and there is never a false note in the character drawing and the proper unfolding of the plot. The cast, lead by Catherine Calvert, is thoroughly capable, and the mechanical details of the production are right at all times. There is a red blooded "kick" to this picture which forces the closest attention from every spectator Give us more like it!

Stage Striking Scene for "Experience"

Joseph A. Brady Joins Ass'd Exhibitors

Announcement has been made of the appointment of Joseph A. Brady as director of advertising and publicity of Associated Exhibitors. Mr. Brady has already assumed the duties of his new position at the headquarters of the organization. He has been assistant to P. A. Parsons, advertising manager of Pathe, for the past year.

Veteran Actors Support Constance Binney

Realart presents the cast of Constance Binney's new vehicle, "The Magic Cup," as one made up of actors "thoroughly experienced." Players in the cast with more than twenty years acting experience credited to them are Blanche Craig, J. H. Gilmour, Charles Mussett, William H. Strauss, and Malcolm Bradley. The last named admits that fifty of his sixty-nine years have been spent on the stage.

Universal Buys Storeis for the Screen

Several big stories have recently been bought by Universal and will be produced as feature pictures as soon as they can be put into continuity form, announces Mr. John C. Brownell, Universal scenario chief.

Among them are "Harbor Road," a novel by Sara Ware Bassett; "The Mascottee of the Three Stars," by J. Allen Dunn, and "The Gossamer Web," by John A. Moroso.

Pathe Releases of May 1st

A New Seitz Serial, "Sky Ranger," on List; Short Subjects Announced

PATHE announces "a notable array of short subjects" for release during the week of May 1st. In the serial field, "The Strange Pact," episode eight of "The Avenging Arrow," starring Ruth Roland, presents the star in further thrilling feats and moments of fast action, declares Pathe. "The Wages of Triumph," episode fifteen of "Double Adventure," starring Charles Hutchinson, concludes what is styled as "the most successful serial yet released by Pathe." In the action of the closing chapter, the mystery is solved, a number of final thrills are injected as a suitable climax, and the characters involved present the desirable happy ending.

The new Pathe serial, "The Sky Ranger," co-starring George B. Seitz and June Caprice, has been scheduled for release. The first episode, "Out o fthe Clouds," will be available beginning May 1st. In the cast besides Mr. Seitz and Miss Caprice will be seen Harry Semels, Frank Redman, Peggy Shanor, Joe Cuny, Charles Reveda, Spencer Bennett, and Thomas Goodwin.

The third number of "The Adventures of Bob and Bill" will be released the week of May 1st. A breezy element of comedy, in addition to the events centering around the actual capture of the animal, is declared to make this issue "more refreshing and out of the ordinary." "Hurry West" is the title of the Rolin comedy release. A feature of the picture is said to be Eddie Boland's originality in devising new stunts with a flivver. "The Sheriff of the Mojave" is the current offering of the Tom Santschi series of Westerns. The cast includes Violet Schramm, Tom Lingham, Otto Lederer and others.

Pathe Review No. 101 presents the following subjects: "All to the Bow-wow," a Capitol Travelaugh by Hy Mayer; an interpretative dance directed by Julian Ollendorff under the title of "The Windmill Dance of Old Holland"; a Novagraph presentation, "Over the Bars"; and "The Children of the Sun," a Pathecolor depiction of home life on the fringes of the Sahara.

Stage Version of Picture

Screen and Stage Productions of "A Trip to Paris" Now in Making

COINCIDENTALLY with the production on the screen at Metro's West Coast studios of "A Trip to Paradise," Bert Lytell's next starring vehicle, the stage version of the play, which is an adaptation of Franz Molnar's European success, "Liliom," is in course of rehearsal, preparatory to its presentation to the public on April 20 by the Theatre Guild in New York.

"A Trip to Paradise" was adapted to the screen by Benjamin F. Glazer, who is also responsible for the American stage version of the piece. The screen form of the Molnar play is a liberal translation of the original, and is said to provide Bert Lytell, the star, with a characterization of rare and unusual appeal. The translator and adaptor of the Molnar stage success did like office with "The Master," the stage play in which Arnold Daly starred a few seasons back, and with "Thy Name is Woman."

The story of "A Trip to Paradise," which has been especially adapted to meet the requirements of the screen, is the story of a man's regeneration through the love of a woman and the influence of a dream. The chief locale of the picture is Coney Island, where the leading character, "Curly" Flynn, is the barker of a sideshow called A Trip to Paradise. The picture is being directed by Maxwell Karger. Virginia Valli heads the cast of players in support of the star. June Mathis has written the continuity.

R-C Acquires New Feature

Madeleine Clare is Seen in Leading Role of "If Women Only Knew"

ROBERTSON-COLE will distribute "If Women Only Knew," which was produced by J. M. Naulty and Gardner Hunting. E. H. Griffith directed the picture. Cornell University and the country around Ithaca, N. Y., form the background of the photoplay.

Madeline Clare plays the leading feminine role. Miss Clare played the part of Nancy in the Lincoln series which was made by the late Benjamin Chapin. Miss Clare also had an important role in Billie Burke's "The Misleading Widow." Virginia Lee has the second feminine role in "If Women Only Knew." Miss Lee appeared in an important part in "The Fortune Teller."

Frederick Burton, who has appeared in many screen productions, is also seen in the cast. He played the leading male role in "Heliotrope" and also supported Marjorie Rambeau in "The Fortune Teller." Blanche Davenport, Leon Gendron, and Charles Lane are also presented in important parts in "If Women Only Knew."

"Sunset Jones" Proving Popular in the East

The American Film Company reports that heavy bookings are being registered in the East on its new Western "Sunset Jones." The principal actors are Irene Rich and Charles Clary.

Some of the action in "The Magnificent Brute," a Universal feature starring Frank Mayo

New Fan Magazine Is Put in Field

A new motion-picture fan magazine makes its appearance this week in the field. It is called "Motion Picture Life." Louis Marangella, who has been associated with the industry in various capacities, is the business manager of the new publishing organization. The plan of the new company provides for a tie-up with exhibitors in connection with the sale of "Motion Picture Life," which will be a monthly publication. As explained by Mr. Marangella, "'Motion Picture Life' is a new departure in exhibitor service and co-operation, whereby the exhibitor profits not alone in publicity and advertising but in a financial way as well." Provision is made on the front cover for insertion of the theatre's name.

Educational in Force in Loew Theatres

Educational reports that it has a comedy at every one of the Loew first-run houses in Cleveland this week. Two different pairs of theatres showed the same Educational release. At Loew's Euclid and at the Park, "Hey Rube," a Christie comedy, was shown. Both the Liberty and the Mall showed "Hubby Behave," a single-reel Vanity comedy. At the Stillman, "Bang," featuring Jimmie Adams, was the fun attraction. The new Loew's State used "Torchy's Big Lead."

Realart to Celebrate Second Anniversary

PLANS for the celebration of Realart's second birthday are well under way, and an announcement of interest to holders of the Star Franchise and the trade in general is soon to be given out, it was announced by Realart's home-office this week.

June 11, 1919, is the date on which Realart first opened its offices, and in view of the growth of the company it is believed that the celebration of its second birthday will be a noteworthy event.

Hearst Studio One of Biggest

One of Best Equipped Within New York City Limits

COVERING an entire square block of New York City, William Randolph Hearst's International Film Studio, where Cosmopolitan Productions are made, is one of the largest and best equipped in New York. Its entrance faces Second avenue, and the front of the property covers the entire block between 127th street and 126th street. The building itself runs back for more than three-quarters of the city block between First avenue and second avenue, and the open lot, where exterior scenes are photographed, covers the remainder of the street. The rear of the studio faces the Harlem River and the bridges across that river.

Altogether the location is ideal for a studio, because it is within convenient distance of the business centers of the City of New York, and at the same time it is located in a neighborhood that is not congested with traffic. Many film companies in the East have found it necessary to build studios in the suburbs of New York in order to get sufficient freedom from congestion which International Film Studio's location makes possible.

Recently the entrance to the building has been remodeled, and the result forms one of the handsomest portals to a motion picture studio in the city.

On the first floor are the executive offices. The vice-president and general manager, George B. Van Cleve, has his office on this floor, and the offices of the advertising and publicity departments, the accounting department and the auditor's department are also located there. The casting director, M. J. Connelly, also is located on the ground floor. The purchasing agent's office also. Two large projection rooms, comfortably fitted with leather arm chairs adjoin these offices, so that the pictures produced by Cosmopolitan Productions may be seen with convenience by executives of the organization. The cutting department and editing department, under the direction of "Bob" Hamilton and "Eddie" Adams, have their workshops and offices on this floor, and in the rear of the building is a comfortable rest room for the employees. Next to this room is the large workshop where the International animated cartoons are made, and here a large staff of artists is busily engaged all day in making the countless drawings that are necessary to produce animated cartoons.

The center of the first floor is occupied with an open space that is used for production of settings, when the main studio floor is crowded. Adjoining this studio space are the carpenter shop and the plaster modeling room. On the open lot, into which the first floor opens, there are three outdoor stages, and a large space available for the taking of exteriors.

The second floor contains the main stage, which is large enough to set up conveniently eight sets with plenty of space for those occupied in production to move without interfering with each other. Adjoining the main studio floor is the private office of William Randolph Hearst, president of International Film Service Co., Inc. Across from Mr. Hearst's office is the office of William Le Baron, scenario editor of Cosmopolitan Productions. On the same floor is the office of Joseph Urban, production manager, who designs all the magnificent settings used in Cosmopolitan Productions. Adjoining Mr. Urban's office is the office of William Sistrom, studio supervisor and assistant production manager. Next to Mr. Sistrom's office are the private offices of the directors of Cosmopolitan Productions, Tom Terriss, Robert G. Vignola, Frank Borzage, and the scenario writers.

The third floor of the International Studio contains the large, airy dressing rooms of the actors and actresses. On this floor are the still photographer's offices and dark rooms.

To Independent Producers

A successful motion picture exchange, established in 1918, is prepared to handle a few good features on an advantageous percentage basis, and without cash advance.

We feel that the time has come to substitute the standard commercial practices for the unsatisfactory methods that have prevailed in the exchange business. We are prepared to give and shall expect the ordinary business references.

If you deal with us you will get every cent that is yours when it is due you, and you are welcome to bring in your own auditor any day without notice.

We intend to furnish a real business service for real business men. If you are that kind of a producer write us. If not please don't waste our time and your own.

Star of "Edgar" Series to Appear in Person

Johnny Jones, the twelve-year-old "leading man" in Goldwyn's productions of the Booth Tarkington "Edgar" comedies, released under the general title of "The Adventures and Emotions of Edgar Pomeroy," has been booked to appear in person in six large motion picture theatres in as many large cities. He has already made a personal appearance with his mother at the Capitol theatre, New York

Jack Eaton, in charge of Goldwyn's short subjects department, announces that Johnny has been booked to appear in person at the following theatres: the Stanley, Philadelphia, week of April 23; Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, week of May 1; the Strand, Brooklyn, N. Y., week of May 8; Loew's Stillman, Cleveland, O., the week of May 15; the Circle, Indianapolis, Ind., the week of May 23; and the Riviera, Chicago, the week of May 28.

Pathe Release Is Set for May 15th

Pathe announces for release on May 15th "The Lure of Egypt" made by the Federal Photoplay Company of Los Angeles. Mystery, charm and "red-blooded drama" are declared by Pathe to be interwoven into the texture of this photoplay. The picture was directed by Howard Hickman and adapted by E. Richard Schayer and Elliott Clawson from Norma Lorimer's novel, "There Was a King in Egypt." The cast includes Claire Adams, Robert McKim, Joseph J. Dowling, Carl Gantvoort, Maude Wayne, William Lien West, Frank Hayes; Zack Williams, Aggie Herring, George Hernandez and Harry Lorraine.

Plan Big Campaign for "Zane Grey Week"

Elaborate preparations are being made by the W. W. Hodkinson organization for the nation-wide exploitation and publicity campaign to be conducted in connection with the Hampton-Grey-Hodkinson productions during the "Zane Grey Week," June 2 to June 9. The opening feature of the campaign will be the publishing in the June 2 issue of the Country Gentlemen of the first installment of Zane Grey's newest story, "To the Last Man." The Saturday Evening Post and the Ladies' Home Journal will also carry a four-page advertising insert carrying the first installment of "To the Last Man," according to a Hodkinson statement. The Curtis Publishing Co. are co-operating with Harper & Bros., and Grosset & Dunlap in connection with the campaign, it is stated.

During Zane Grey Week the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation will release "The Man of the Forest," Benj. B. Hampton's newest picture production made from a Zane Grey story. Behind it there will be a special advertising and exploitation campaign.

"Reputation" Release Delayed to May 2

Universal announces that the release date of Priscilla Dean's new Universal-Jewel production, "Reputation," has been postponed from April 15th to May 2nd. This has been done to afford its director, Stuart Paton, more time for the cutting and the sub-titling of the special. The extended time was considered advisable owing to the magnitude and importance of the picture, according to Universal.

To facilitate the early release of the picture, the initial prints are being made at Universal City instead of the Fort Lee, N. J., laboratory. These prints will be distributed from the Coast to the Universal exchanges throughout the country. In the case of the Palace theatre, Buffalo, N. Y., aeroplane delivery is being planned, says the Universal home office, to prevent that house being embarrassed by a delayed show date.

Fine Reports on "The Inside of the Cup"

"The Inside of the Cup," the Cosmopolitan Production released through Paramount, is doing a big business all over the country, according to advices from the Cosmopolitan home-office. Maxwell M. Chetkin, who operates six of the largest motion picture houses in Brooklyn, has written the following letter to Cosmopolitan Productions:

"After showing 'The Inside of the Cup' at my theatres, I feel it only right to tell you of the wonderful satisfaction afforded both my patrons and myself. From an entertainment standpoint it was all that could be desired. From the box-office standpoint it was immense."

J. Hatton, general manager of the Marcy Broadway Corporation, which operates the Marcy and three other Brooklyn theatres, reported in the same vein.

Makes Exploitation a Part of Picture

Putting exploitative material into a picture as the picture is being made is presented as the objective Robert G. Vignola had in view in the filming of "The Woman God Changed." The method is a simple one. The producer goes over his scenario before he takes a single scene, plans out his exploitation ideas and ties them up with the action of the story in such a way that they become an integral part of the story, thus not only avoiding a superfluity of action but actually adding to the artistic value of the production. "The Woman God Changed" is a Cosmopolitan production and will be released by Paramount.

Variety in Fox's Broadway Attractions

William Fox points out varied appeal to be found in his current Broadway attractions. At the Selwyn theatre is "Connecticut Yankee," a comedy-satire based on Mark Twain's famous story. At the Park, "Over the Hill" is appearing, following its close at the Broadhurst. This is a sentimental offering of unusual heart interest. "Queen of Sheba" has opened at the Lyric. This picture is of the spectacular order with mammoth settings and a romantic story of historic interest.

"The Scarab Ring" New Alice Joyce Picture

"The Scarab Ring" is the title of the forthcoming Alice Joyce special production recently completed at Vitagraph's Brooklyn studio. It was directed by Edward Jose, who directed Miss Joyce in her most recently released production, "Her Lord and Master."

"The Scarab Ring" has been produced in a lavish manner, and with a splendid cast, which includes Joe King as Miss Joyce's leading man, Fuller Mellish, E. Phillips, Claude King, who played one of the leading roles in Ethel Barrymore's stage version of "Declassee;" Joseph Smiley and Maude Malcolm.

Alice Calhoun Progressing on New Vehicle

Alice Calhoun, Vitagraph star, is making rapid progress on her forthcoming Vitagraph production, "Closed Doors," under the direction of G. V. Seyffertitz. "Closed Doors" is a dramatic play written especially for this star by Harry Dittmar, with scenario by William B. Courtney.

Closes Important Deals on Hodkinson Issues

Joe Bloom, district supervisor for W. W. Hodkinson, announces that he has closed with the Blank Enterprises of Des Moines for first-run showings in Des Moines of Hodkinson releases. A 100% Hodkinson contract has also been signed with the J. E. Hostetter Enterprises Company of Omaha, whose string comprises over forty houses.

More Testimonials for "The Four Horsemen"

Testimonials in praise of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" are announced this week by Metro Pictures Corp., from H. H. Van Loan, well known screen writer, Mrs. Sidney Drew and Justin Fair, special feature writer for Photoplay Magazine.

Mr. Van Loan stated that the picture was "superb and all the superlatives of speech fail in our desire to express our admiration." Mrs. Drew made the statement that it was the best picture she had ever seen. Mr. Fair believes that the claim that it is the world's greatest picture is no empty phrase.

"Nobody's Kid" Issued by Robertson-Cole

Robertson-Cole has just released "Nobody's Kid," starring Mae Marsh. The cast includes Kathleen Kirkham, Anne Schaefer, Maxine Elliott Hicks, John Steppling and Paul Willis. The story was written by Kate Langley Bosher under the title of "Mary Cary." Miss Bosher has endorsed the film version of her story, and Robertson-Cole officials express the belief that the picture because of its close adherence to the story in book form will please "the tens-of-thousands who have read the novel."

Educational Adds City to 100 Percent Class

Des Moines is the latest city reported to have entered Educational's "Hundred per cent class," by having one of its two-reel comedies booked at each of these three A. H. Blank first-run theatres during the past week.

At the million dollar Des Moines theatre Bobby Vernon and Helen Darling were seen in "Hey Rube," a Christie comedy; at the Strand Johnny Hines was the attraction in "Torchy's Double Triumph" and at the Palace there was one of the Chester comedies featuring Snooky, the Humanzee, "You'll be S'prised."

J. Barney Sherry Cast for "Back Pay"

J. Barney Sherry has been added to the cast of "Back Pay," the Fannie Hurst story which Frank Brozage is directing for Cosmopolitan Productions at the International Film Studios. Frances Marion adapted this story to the slreen. Mr. Sherry will play the part of Mr. Wheeler, the leading male role after that of Jerry, which is played by Matt Moore. Seena Owen is taking the leading female role, that of Hester Bevins.

Fox Lists "The Mother Heart" for May

William Fox announces that "The Mother Heart," in which Shirley Mason plays the leading role, will be released next month. The story was written by Frank Howard Clark. Howard M. Mitchell is the director. Fox Films states that Miss Mason is presented in the role of a "latter day Cinderella" and in one of the "most sympathetic stories" in which she has ever appeared.

Improvements Made at Christie Studios

The roofing and enclosing of one of the Christie stages in Los Angeles was started last week. The new plans call for the roofing and the enclosing of one of the stages already erected so as to meet an increased demand for more completely lighted and better dressed interior settings for one and two-reel comedies.

Another big improvement at the studio is the enclosed golf driving cage completed last week under the direction of Alex Morrison, golf professional who posed for Educational's slow-motion picture "Golf." The practice driving cage is now the best in the West, according to Morrison, and a valuable adjunct to the studio, according to Al Christie.

Child Actress "Shines" in "Wild Goose"

In the cast that enacts "The Wild Goose" on the screen, Rita Rogan, the five-year-old actress attracts special notice for her good work in the photoplay. Albert Capellani directed the picture which was adapted from Gouverneur Morris's novel by Donnah Darrell. Besides Rita Rogan, the cast includes Mary McLaren, Norman Kerry, Holmes E. Herbert, Joseph Smiley, Dorothy Bernard, Mrs. Seger and D. J. Flanagan.

Snowy Baker Stars Picture for Selig-Rork

Snowy Baker, the internationally famed Australian athlete and sportsman who twice represented his country at the Olympic Games, is starting work on special five reel productions under the direct supervision of Selig and Rork. This new star comes direct from his own studio at Sydney, Australia, where he produced five Australian pictures. The first picture will be made from a well known magazine story.

George O'Hara and Kathryn McGuire chosen by Mack Sennett from his own organization to play the young lovers in his first serious dramatic production, "Heartbalm," a romantic comedy in six parts

Educational Subjects Fill B'way Bill

Every motion picture to accompany the showing of Ivan Abramson feature, "Mother Eternal," which began a run of not less than six weeks at the Casino theatre, Monday, was selected from the product handled by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc.

"Turkey Dressing," a single-reel Gayety comedy featuring Patricia Palmer, Mary Wynn and Henry Murdock, forms the laughter portion of the bill. "The Why of the Volcano," a scientific single-reel which explains in a popular manner the reason for eruptions and the processes, takes the place of a scenic. "Dixie," a novelty reel which tells the story of how the great song was written and first sung, and which is set to a special musical score, is being shown for the first time on the screen.

New Irvin Willat Picture Progressing

Work is progressing rapidly on "The Face of the World," which Irvin V. Willat is making for Hodkinson release. The story was written by John Bojer, an author of international repute. Barbara Bedford displaying the leading part with Edward Hearn in the opposite role. "The Face of the World" is scheduled for release by Hodkinson in mid-summer.

Alter Production Plans on New Reid Vehicle

Plans for the next production at the Lasky studio, starring Wallace Reid, have been altered, and "Tall Timber" which was scheduled to go into work shortly has been temporarily postponed and Byron Morgan's story, "The Hell Diggers," will be made first. Frank Urson will direct, and Agnes Ayres will play the feminine lead opposite the star. Work will start shortly.

Work Progressing on "Rip Van Winkle"

Ward Lascelle, who is producing "Rip Van Winkle" for release by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, telegraphs from the West Coast that production work is in full swing.

"Dr. Caligari" Picture at Exchanges Soon

Goldwyn announces that prints of the European film sensation, "The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari," which it acquired for distribution in this country following its highly successful showing at the Capitol theatre, will soon be in all twenty-two Goldwyn exchanges ready for the personal inspection of the exhibitors. The picture has been booked for the Fox chain of theatres in Greater New York for the week beginning April 25.

Realistic Battle Seen in "Scrap Iron"

Pre-viewers of Charles Ray's new picture for First National, "Scrap Iron," declare that the picture presents the star in one of the "most realistic" fights seen on the screen, according to a statement received from Associated First National Pictures. The picture is an adaptation of the story by Charles E. Van Loan.

The ring is an exact replica of the arena at Vernon, the boxing capitol of Southern California. John Steel's (Ray's) antagonist is Tom O'Brien, and the scene presents some figures well known in the pugilistic world.

EXHIBITORS HERALD

ALICE CALHOUN IN

CHARMING DECEIVER

(VITAGRAPH)

An interesting, simple story told with agreeable speed. A very good cast with attractive backgrounds and excellent characterizations. Directed by George L. Sargent.

Here is a star worth watching. Alice Calhoun, only recently come to the screen as a Vitagraph star, is an ingenue who really displays artistic possibilities. In this latest of her vehicles she plays with all the qualities that make screen success a certainty — intelligence, grace, poise, uncommon good looks and naturalness. She is altogether charming.

She appears herewith as Mrs. Don Marston, a young woman who was tricked into marriage with a forger in prison at the time of the story's opening. A letter comes to her brother Frank in a Canadian hospital, where he is recovering from the war injuries, conveying information that the grandfather, who had disowned the mother of the young people when she married against his wishes, had relented and wished the girl and Frank with him in his old age. The girl goes and is followed there by her husband, of whom she tells the household nothing until he escapes from prison and follows her to the old homestead in Connecticut. She persuades him to pose as the brother. Richard Walling, a good friend of the grandfather, a young neighbor, falls in love with the girl. The climax comes when the husband, in a state of intoxication, makes known the real situation. She is about to leave home when the brother is discharged from the hospital and comes to tell the whole tale. The husband, pursued by Canadian officers, takes his life, and the girl is left to the love of Walling.

The picture, while not particularly uncommon of plot, is very well presented in every way and will be liked by adult patrons.

Jack McLean makes an attractive brother. Eugene Acker carries well the part of the husband. John Adams in the part of the grandfather is an unusually good character impersonator. Roland Bottomley, as Richard Walling, is clean cut and exceedingly likeable, and the part of Duncan, an aged servant, is made impressive by Robert Gaillard.

Paramount Companies Busy

Several New Productions Getting Under Way at the Lasky Studios

WILLIAM DEMILLE having completed his production for Paramount of Edward Knoblock's original story "The Lost Romance" is now busy preparing for his next picture. This will be written by Rita Weiman in consultation with Mr. DeMille. No title has yet been chosen.

When Betty Compson begins work next week under the direction of Penrhyn Stanlaws upon her first Paramount star picture "At the End of the World," she will have a strong supporting cast that will include Mitchell Lewis, Milton Sills, Casson Ferguson and others. The picture is an adaptation by E. Bingham from the famous European success by Ernst Klein.

Cecil B. DeMille is scheduled to start very soon on his next production for Paramount, further details of which will be made known in the near future.

William D. Taylor will begin work next week on "The Lifted Veil," a starring vehicle for Ethel Clayton. Julia Crawford Ivers has made the adaptation for Paramount of this Henry Arthur Jones play. The cast is now being selected and sets prepared. Gloria Swanson is nearing the end of her first Paramount star picture, Elinor Glyn's "The Great Moment," under the direction of Sam Wood.

Wallace Reid's next picture, upon which he starts shortly, will be "Tall Timber," the first photoplay written by James A. B. Scherer. Frank Uroon will again direct, and Tom Forman leaves shortly for the East to direct Thomas Meighan's "Cappy Ricks," an adaptation of a number of Peter B. Kyne's stories.

Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle in George Pattullo, story, "Gasolene Gus," which he is now doing for Paramount under James Cruze's direction, is spending a lot of time on small town stuff, a complete village having been erected at the Lasky ranch. Walter Woods wrote the scenario.

Obtain Novel Aerial Shots

International News Shows Bombing of Battleship from Airplane

WHAT is believed to be conclusive proof that Army Aviators can drive the battleship from the sea are contained in a series of shots included in International News No. 30, just released through all Universal exchanges.

The pictures are the result of a controversy that has raged for many weeks between the Army air service and the Navy Department. From the vantage point of the bombing plane itself, the Army aviators are shown by International News rendering the U. S. S. Indiana useless by an aerial attack from several thousand feet in the air.

The pictures were taken by an International News cameraman from the chief bombing plane of a bombing squadron which flew from Langley Field, Virginia, out over the bay where the old battleship Indiana, once the pride of the Navy floated, stripped to her deck armor, waiting to be sacrificed for the aerial experiments.

The moving picture man kept his camera going all during the trip and obtained a remarkable series of shots. The most astounding of which were actual pictures of bomb dropping all the way from the aeroplane to the target.

The bombs, in a battery of five, are seen as they are released from the plane.

Photographers Praised for Unusual Work

Alvin Wyckoff and Karl Struss, the cameramen who photographed "The Affairs of Anatol," have won the congratulations of the Paramount officials for their capable handling of a difficult photographic problem. The cast which includes a large list of featured players presented the cameramen with their first problem, owing to the wide divergence of types found therein; then again the disparity of personal preferences in the choice of make-ups offered a difficulty. The photographers were called upon to synchronize the lighting effects so that all would appear on an equal photographic footing and yet with greatest advantage of each of the individual players. The wide variety of scenic backgrounds through which the story is carried also added to the problem.

The difficulties were overcome so successfully, partly through the willing co-operation of the players themselves, that congratulations have been showered on Messrs. Wyckoff and Struss by all who have pre-viewed the picture.

Veiller to Film His Own Stage Success

Bayard Veiller, author of "Within the Law" and "The Thirteenth Chair," and now engaged in making special motion picture productions for Metro at the company's Hollywood studios, is at work upon a screen version of one of his big Broadway stage successes.

No details of the production were given, except that Mr. Veiller will have charge not only of the adapting and scenarizing of his own play, but of its casting, directing and cutting.

Three Leading Roles in Young Players' Hands

D. W. Griffith presents Carol Dempster, Ralph Graves and Charles Mack as "the three youngest leading players ever presented in either film or stage production where the story was not of juveniles." Carol Dempster, Ralph Graves and Charles Mack are respectively 18, 21 and 19 years of age, according to Mr. Griffith.

Cutting of "Anatol" Is Difficult Task

Cecil DeMille says the cutting of "The Affairs of Anatol" is the most difficult job of its kind that he has ever undertaken. The filmed story totalled 11,000 feet, but it was decided to reduce the footage by several thousand feet. Though the work of cutting and titling has been going on for several weeks, it will require three or four weeks more to finish the task, it is stated.

"The task was a herculean one because everything was literally too good to discard," explains Mr. De Mille. "The story held the attention, every scene carried a punch of its own, and the work of the players was excellent throughout."

Good Cast to Support Thomas Meighan

A strong cast of well-known screen players has been chosen to support Thomas Meighan in his latest Paramount picture, "The Conquest of Canaan," by Booth Tarkington, which will be produced in Paramount's Eastern studio.

Doris Kenyon will be Mr. Meighan's leading woman and the other feminine parts will be taken by Diana Allen, Ann Eggleston, and Alice Fleming. In the male portion of the cast will be Charles Abbee, Malcolm Bradley, Paul Everton, Macy Harlam, Charles Hartley, Louis Henyricks, Jed Prouty, Cyril Ring and J. D. Walsh.

The direction of the picture will be in the hands of R. William Neill.

Enid Bennett in "Keeping Up with Lizzie"

W. W. Hodkinson announces that Enid Bennett is returning to the screen in "Keeping Up With Lizzie," now under production with Lloyd Ingram wielding the megaphone. Irving Bacheller is the author of the story. In Miss Bennett's suporting cast will be seen Leo White, Lila Leslie, Otis Harlan, Victory Bateman and many other prominent players. "Keeping Up With Lizzie" will be a Hodkinson release.

Pathe Pictures Aerial Bombing Attack

Completing its triumph over space, the motion picture camera, in issue number 26 of the Pathe News, has recorded one of the most remarkable cinematographic feats since the camera was first used to records current news. From an aeroplane several thousand feet in the air, the camera follows, in this issue of the Pathe News, every foot of the flight of a bomb from the time it leaves the plane until it explodes. The picture was made by Tommy Baltzell, Pathe News staff man at Washington, during maneuvers at Langley Field, Va., staged by army officials to prove the aircraft superior to the modern battleship in actual combat.

From his tiny berth in an army bomber, Baltzell stationed his camera so that he could directly follow the flight of the bombs to the earth. The fact that the bombs were painted white helped materially in his efforts.

Plebiscite Views Given in Pathe News 28

Pathe News No. 28 shows exclusive views of the plebiscite in operation whereby the inhabitants of the town of Kattowitz in Upper Silesia were enabled to declare on March 20 whether they wished to be placed under the German or the Polish jurisdiction. Pathe made special provisions for the transmission of the films to Paris and thence to Southampton where the views were placed aboard the Adriatic. The prints were in readiness for release on April 6.

Rita Weiman to Write Original Photoplay

Paramount announces that Rita Weiman, noted author and playwright, will write an original photoplay to be produced by William De Mille. The author and producer have already held conferences on the new scenario, which will be on an entirely new theme, it is stated.

Practical Press-Book for "Snowblind"

One of the most helpful press and service books ever prepared by Goldwyn is announced by that organization for the Reginald Barker production, "Snowblind," prints of which will soon be in all Goldwyn branch offices. An unusual number of ad cuts, striking and dramatic in idea and execution, are included in the campaign book, which in addition tells interesting details connected with the story, author, director and members of the cast to be used for newspaper and program publicity. Lobby and exploitation suggestions are included. A feature of the booklet is the provision made for the ready extraction of all matter prepared for press use.

Elinor Glyn Does "Bit" in "Great Moment"

Elinor Glyn not only wrote "The Great Moment" but also played a part in the photoplay while it was being filmed. This subject, which stars Gloria Swanson, was directed by Sam Wood for release by Paramount. Miss Glyn explained that her motive in assuming the role ,which is a minor one, was to get "the player's viewpoint" so as to be able to write screen parts with greater appreciation of the emotions experienced by the actor when actually at work before the camera.

Hodkinson in Simultaneous Showings

Three Hodkinson releases were given simultaneous showings in Memphis, Tenn., during the week of April 4th. "Broken Gate," featuring Bessie Barriscale, was the feature of the program at the Pantages theatre. Loew's "Palace" showed "East Lynne," while Loew's State theatre presented the Benjamin Hampton production, "Riders of the Dawn."

Lillian Biron Cast for Mermaid Comedy

Lillian Biron, who has attracted much attention by her work in Sennett and Vitagraph comedies, has been selected as Jimmie Adams's new leading woman in a Mermaid comedy which is now being made under the working title of "Blue Sunday." In this picture she has the role of a young owner of a country newspaper who becomes converted to putting the lid tightly on her village. Adams has the role of a reporter. The picture is being directed by Chuck Riesner.

This picture completes the first contract of Astra Film Corporation to supply a Mermaid Comedy each month.

Artistic Posters for "The Whistle"

Exhibitors throughout the country who will show William S. Hart's next Paramount release "The Whistle," are said to have an opportunity for effective lobby displays and outdoor advertising available in a series of special drawings emphasizing the theme of this picture, which have just reached the home office of Paramount pictures.

These drawings, prepared by Mr. Hart's art representatives at his studio, Doris Deutsch and O Roidol, have been drawn with a special eye to productive outdoor display and are equally adaptable to lobby frames or billboard posting. Drawn in black and white they offer a chance either for simple line cuts or for the deft retouching of hand painting.

"The Whistle" is scheduled for general release by Paramount early in August.

William Fox Acquires Tyrone Power

William Fox, according to a statement from the Fox headquarters, has acquired Tyrone Power and will present the dramatic player in "Footfalls" now under production.

Affiliated Contracts for Ritchey Posters

Coincident with the announcement of the formation of Affiliated Distributers, Inc., of which C. C. Burr is president, comes the news that the Ritchey Lithograph Co., through its representative, Mr. Al Rosenthal, has signed a long term contract with Affiliated Distributers, whereby Ritchey will furnish all art work and lithographs for the future releases of that Corporation.

Dominant Will Release New Calvert Picture

Actuated by the reception accorded "Aching Hearts," the initial release of the new Catherine Calvert series of productions distributed under the banner of Dominant Pictures, Inc., Jacques Kopfstein, general manager in charge of distribution, has ordered a speeding up of preparations for the early release of their second offering, "The Masked Marriage."

"The Masked Marriage," in which Miss Calvert is co-starred with Richard Tucker, was directed by Herbert Blache.

Oscar Apfel Special Is Nearing Completion

Word was received at the New York offices of Classic Dramas, Inc., that the final scenes in the rural drama by L. Case Russell, which is being made at the Blazed Trail Studios in the Adirondacks under the direction of Oscar Apfel, are now being shot and that the picture will be completed within the next two weeks.

Upon completion of the picture announcement will be made of the title and the distribution plan.

Jimmy Callahan Is Active

Comedian Busy at Atlantic City Studio on Film Market Releases

JIMMY CALLAHAN, the screen comedian, has, within four weeks time, organized a producing company in Atlantic City capitalized at $500,000, secured one-half the capitalization in real money, leased the Curtis Airport aviation field in Atlantic City for a studio and has begun production in New York pending the opening of his plant by the sea.

The Curtiss Airport aviation field comprises most extensive grounds and two great hangars, 40x150 feet. One of these hangars is being converted into a studio with a most complete lighting plant. The other hangar will be used as a carpenter shop and a paint frame. Mr. Callahan will build and paint the scenes for all his interiors in his own shops. His new studio will be ready for him on April 27, when he will begin work there.

During the past week he has been at work in the Victor studios in this city with his new company making the interiors for two comedies which he will finish in Atlantic City, and while doing this he has engaged an experienced staff of stage carpenters, scene painters, property men and electricians, who will precede him to Atlantic City and put his new studio in practical working condition. These men have all been identified with leading producing companies.

Ralph D. Whiting, who has had a long experience as an actor, stage manager and motion picture director, is Mr. Callahan's supervising director.

Mr. Callahan has engaged a large company of prominent artists to play in his support. Miss Florence Dixon, who acted the star role in Robert W. Priest's production, "The Supreme Passion," will be Mr. Callahan's leading woman and has been at work with him at the Victor studios during the past week.

Another noted principal of Mr. Callahan's support is Lottie Kendall, who began her stage career as a soubrette in musical comedy in her fifteenth year. She made exceptional successes in several musical productions made by Henry W. Savage and A. H. Woods.

Mr. Callahan will make twenty-six two-reel comedies during the coming year. Prior to the organization of his company he had completed four comedies. The first of them is called "October Morn." The others are entitled "The Lucky Dog," "The Wonderful Whallop" and "Huckleberry Gulch." All Mr. Callahan's productions will be released through Robert W. Priest, president of the Film Market, Inc.

Selig Studios' Big Product

To Make Short Subjects for Educational and Series of Features

COL. WILLIAM N. SELIG and Sam E. Rork announce that they have signed Lewis Stone to head an all-star cast which will make four special productions at the Selig studios in Los Angeles. "The Rosary," a former stage success by Edward E. Rose, will be the first of these productions. Jerome Storm has been signed to direct.

Following this picture, the producers announce a special production of "Debonnaire," by William Farquhar Payson. A picture version of the successful stage play of Charles Coghlan's, "The Royal Box," will follow. And, lastly, will come one of James Oliver Curwood's stories of the virile North, "The Honor of the Big Snows." In each of these special productions, Lewis Stone will head an all-star cast.

Distribution has not yet been arranged for these productions.

The producers also announce the return of the Diamond S two-reel dramas. These will be released by Educational Film Exchanges. Two are already completed. They are "The Northern Trail," from James Oliver Curwood's story, "The Wilderness Mail," and "The Policeman and the Baby," from Clarence L. Cullen's short story classic. In the cast of the former are Lewis Stone, Ethel Grey Terry and Wallace Beery, and in the later William Desmond, Wallace Beery and Elinor Fair. Both were directed by Bertram Bracken.

For many years Colonel Selig has been accumulating the rights to famous books and plays by authors of world-wide reputation. Among the names represented in his safety deposit boxes are James Oliver Curwood, Sir Gilbert Parker, Robert Hichens, E. Phillips Oppenheim, Hallie Erminie Rives, Gen. Charles King, Winston Churchill, Randall Parrish, Salisbury Field, Ella Wheeler Wilcox, Edward E. Rose, Bertrand Sinclair, Clarence L. Cullen, B. M. Bower, Joseph Arthur and Harold McGrath.

Howells Expects More Sales on Serials

A representative of the Howells Sales Co., of New York, who are distributing the serial, "The Hope Diamond Mystery," will attend the meeting of the First National franchise holders at West Baden, Ind., this week and it is expected that he will close a number of contracts with the First National Exchange managers, who has been conducting negotiations for the balance of the territories on this picture by telegraph and letter.

World Film Has Three Features Ready

MILTON C. WORK, president of World Film Corporation, has just announced that his company has acquired three special productions featuring Joe Moore and Eileen Sedgwick, and that the pictures will be offered to states-rights buyers in the near future.

Harry Chandlee and William B. Laub, under whose supervision all World Film productions are edited and titled, have completed their work on the first of the series, which bears the title, "The Problem Eternal." The remaining pictures of the series, which will be ready for distribution during the present month, are entitled: "False Brands"—a story of Eastern college life and Western adventure; and "The Wolf Pack," dealing with hidden treasure in the far west. All of the pictures were directed by William J. Craft and photographed by Joe Mayer.

New Equity Picture Should Prove a Winner

IN announcing the Ziegfeld Cinema production, "The Black Panther's Cub" to the independent market, Equity Pictures Corp., who will distribute the picture, claim that they are raising the standard of the state right productions. This picture is said to have cost $250,000.

Boasting a five-star cast headed by Florence Reed, and the direction of Emile Chautard, "The Black Panther's Cub," it is claimed, puts many a feature of the national producers in the shade by comparison.

In cast it presents a galaxy of stars whose names are identified with the forefront of dramatic art. Norman Trevor, star of "Enter Madame," the Broadway stage success; Tyrone Power, veteran actor of a score of the country's most effective production; Mlle. Dazie, the idol of dance-devotees; Henry Stephenson, of "Spanish Love;" Earle Foxe, Philip Bartholomae and eight other eminent dramatic celebrities combined in array in support of Florence Reed, who herself impersonates two characters that appear on the screen at the same time.

In setting and background, "The Black Panther's Cub" attains vast proportions, embracing scenes with several thousand persons on the stage at a time. There are amphitheatre and ball-room settings with colorful costume and equipment representing large financial expenditure.

In plot "The Black Panther's Cub" tells the story of the battle of heroism against heredity. It is broad and imaginative, bristling with contrast. Queenly palaces and royal festivities are blended with the slums of the underworld. Every type of humanity is depicted. It portrays life as we know it and life as we dream it.

"Black Panther's Cub" Unusual Offering to Independents

In photodramatic strength "The Black Panther's Cub" attains unusual heights. Florence Reed dominates in an exhibition of remarkable character impersonation, playing the mother and daughter simultaneously, and proving equally convincing in both roles. As the gorgeously-gowned Empress at the zenith of her glory, and as the sunken, miserable outcast in the depths of poverty, her portrayal is accurate to a fault.

Finally in direction and staging, critical comment has nothing but undiluted praise for Emile Chautard, the veteran director. Harmony and effect of layout and staging, and uniqueness of photography have brought forth warmest admiration for the technical perfection of "The Black Panther's Cub."

Few pictures can boast the unanimity of applause that "The Black Panther's Cub" has received. Screen opinions, for example, rated "The Black Panther's Cub" in Class A-b—the same rating as was given "The Four Horsemen." To quote: "Super excellent; star and story superior; photography and direction exceptional. Its technical and artistic merits would class this picture A a (Masterful). This first screen offering of the Ziegfeld Corp. justifies faith in the future output of this concern. It is elegantly mounted to the point of exquisiteness. Remarkable for skillful illumination and artistic exteriors and interiors. The staging is elaborate and Faustine is robed in the splendor of a Cleopatra—such was the extraordinary reception this critic gave the production.

The National Board of Review gave special mention to the performance of Florence Reed, comparing Florence Reed to Modjeska and Sarah Bernhardt. The Morning Telegraph began its eulogy with "The showing of 'The Black Panther's Cub' was a treat to its spectators. Unusual outbreaks of applaue in the midst of its scenes reflected the enthusiasm with which this first Ziegfeld release was greeted."

It is expected that "The Black Panther's Cub" will meet with great success, and will secure a first-run on Broadway. "Exhibitors have learned," states Equity, "to appreciate profitable pictures and to demand them. Only one thing matters in the motion-picture field, viz: the box office strength of a production. The source of a picture, whether it is released by an independent or a national producer is of no account—its box-office value is the main consideration, and independent pictures are leaping into popularity because they are proving profitable."

New Kineto Series Offered

CHARLES URBAN, president of the Kineto Company of America, Inc., announced this week the second series of Kineto Reviews which will be released through National Exchanges, Inc. The first series was released in March.

Leading theatres everywhere are playing the first series, it is announced, and are advertising them as an "added special," as did the Allen theatre in Cleveland with "Babyhood" last week.

The second series has been selected for variety as well as the great individual beauty of the Kineto Reviews; in it are to be found pictures of travel, pure scenics, nature pictures, scientific studies, hunting trips, animal pictures, and such consistent variety all through the series.

The first Kineto Review in the second series will follow right after "Beauty Spots of America and Canada," which concludes the first series.

The titles of the forthcoming series and a brief description of each follow:

"Was Darwin Right?" If he was, this picture shows some extremely interesting ancestors of ours, for there is every kind of ape and monkey in the world in this Kineto Review. "Bonnie Scotland." This Kineto Review was edited personally by Mr. Urban for the showing of "Sentimental Tommy" at the Criterion in New York. It played there all during the month of April.

"Birds of Crags and Marshes," a wide range of feathered tribes is shown in this Kineto Review. "Village Life in Switzerland;" this is like a day's visit in the heart of one of the Swiss villages. "Peculiar Pets;" men have many unusual associates and many are of the kind that have to be seen to be believed. There are many such instances in this Kineto Review. "Combatting the Elements;" this is a sensational reel of nature's devastation and the means taken to overcome it.

"Dexterity and Mimicry of Insects" (acrobatic flies); insects have their actors just like humans and they do some remarkable stunts. "Primitive Life in Tennessee;" here are shown colonies still like a "race apart," living in a sixteenth century civilization. "Bear Hunting in California;" an exhilarating sport that is still very much practiced. "Paris, the Beautiful;" the show spots of Paris that make her beloved of all the world are dwelt on in this Kineto Review. "A Naturalist's Paradise," showing naturalists of the Barbados-Antigua Expedition at their thrilling work.

"Morocco, the Mysterious;" a travel reel that mixes a great deal of beauty with mystery. "Let's See the Animals;" like an actual tour of the famous Zoological Park in Philadelphia.

Exploitation and publicity material, musical indications and all the exhibitors' aids are now being prepared by the Kineto Company in readiness for the release of this second series of Kineto Reviews.

for the Independent Market

Equity Pictures Corporation pays record price for "THE BLACK PANTHER'S CUB" staring Florence Reed and Great Broadway Cast

---

This announcement is published to inform the Trade, State Rights Men and Exhibitors throughout the country that Equity Pictures Corporation has purchased W. K. Ziegfeld's sensational production, "THE BLACK PANTHER'S CUB," whose premiere at the Times Square Theatre in N. Y. on Feb. 15th brought remarkable praise from press and public.

A record price was paid for this film and the Independent field will now have for the first time in many years a real picture big enough to compete with any of the big productions of the regular distributing organizations.

The purchase of this film backs up Equity's judgment that, given the right quality of picture, the independent market can absorb, handle and put over big pictures better than is now being done by any national distributing organization.

The policy of distribution has not yet been determined. Forthcoming announcements will give the details.

Federated Feature Ready

"Don't Leave Your Husband," First of Series, to Be Released Shortly

"DON'T LEAVE YOUR HUSHUSBAND," the first of the series of big features to be released by the Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., has just been completed, and will be ready for release shortly though the twenty-two Federated exchanges throughout the country. The production is in seven reels, and William Desmond and Margaret Clayton are featured, supported by an all star cast, including Frank Losee, Marion Elmore, Frances Devereaux, and Lillian Greene. Samuel R. Bradley directed the production, and the original story was written by Edmund Goulding.

Sumptuous sets, gripping scenes and unique plot are said to mark the production. Miss Clayton, as the young girl of modest means with a hunger for wealth and fashionable trappings, displays a remarkable emotional power and, incidentally, wears a number of gorgeous gowns.

Frank Losee gives a remarkable characterization of the cynical banker, Hugo Harman. He furnishes a vivid contrast to the manly, appealing figure of Jack Gray, the clerk, as played by Desmond.

The scenes in the millionaire's secret apartment on Park avenue, and in the fashion salon of a Fifth avenue shop, are said to have been produced with a disregard of cost.

Rosenfeld Leaves on Trip

Head of Allied Distributing Corp. Will Outline His Franchise Plan

CHARLES H. ROSENFELD, president of the Allied Distributing Corporation, left recently for an extended trip throughout the country in the interest of his company.

Mr. Rosenfeld will visit every exchange center and the independent buyers of those cities for the purpose of outlining to them the franchise plans which his company has formulated for the marketing of the pictures which they will release. In addition to this Mr. Rosenfeld will take with him several pictures which he will dispose of on the state right plan.

The franchise plan which was perfected by Mr. Rosenfeld will give to the holders of it a definite number of releases this coming year from certain producers. These will include not only features but also comedies and other short length material. The organization will, however, concentrate on features, several of them of the series nature offering certain well known screen personalities.

Mr. Rosenfeld expects to be on this trip for about six weeks. While in Los Angeles he will close some of the deals which are pending for pictures with some of the producers in that city.

"The trip," said Mr. Rosenfeld, "will serve a two-fold purpose. The first to dispose of the franchise for our product and also the determining of the calibre of picture that is in demand in the various centers today.

Aywon Feature Announced

Nathan Hirsh Promises Sensation in His "The Lure of the Orient"

IT is predicted that the latest feature to be released through the Aywon Film Corporation, "The Lure of the Orient," will create somewhat of a sensation among the state rights exchanges and the exhibitors of the country.

Already Nathan Hirsh has screened "The Lure of the Orient" for many of the state rights men and the universal opinion is said to be that the picture is one of the strongest box office attractions that have been independently released in many months. "The Lure of the Orient" is said to contain all the elements that go into the making of a real attraction. It has drama, plenty of it; fine acting by an all star cast; thrills without number, a touch of comedy here and there; fine photography and many unusually big scenes.

In addition to this there are thousands of extras employed in the cast. Hundreds of these are genuine Chinese coolies and they put over a fight against the captain and crew of a huge ocean liner that will long be remembered by all who see it.

Among several suggestions given to Mr. Hirsh as to the best way in which "The Lure of the Orient" should be marketed, one well known showman stated that in his opinion it ought to be sent out as a road show. He backed this statement up by pointing out the exceptional exploitation possibilities of the picture in addition to its great box office value as a straight attraction.

Sameth Preparing Drive

Forward Film Expects to Make Selling Record with "The Shadow"

J. JOSEPH SAMETH, president of the Forward Film Distributors, Inc., states that he has received numerous requests from exhibitors throughout the United States for the screening on the first of the productions starring Muriel Ostriche. In order to make way for his complete program, and to have the entire American territory sold in as short a time as possible, Mr. Sameth has augmented his organization with additional salesmen and has organized an exploitation department so as to give every aid possible for the early sale of this feature, which was written and directed by J. Charles Davis, 2nd.

Sample prints are already being made at the Craftsmen Film Laboratories and nothing is being left undone to push this film forward in such a manner as to create a record sale on "The Shadow." Mr. Sameth is of the opinion that within sixty days after Mr. Davis first started to shoot scenes for this five-reel super feature, he will have negotiated a sale for this production in every territory of the United States.

"I am certain that the independent exchange-men throughout the United States, realizing the value of a picture with true box office value and entertainment, will grab for it as soon as it is shown to them," said Mr. Sameth. "There is no question that many of the larger companies are holding up many of their super productions so as to secure better prices for them. This is a great aid for the state-right men, and we should avail ourselves of this opportunity to show the film world that we have goods that are marketable, and that we are in business to stay.

"'The Shadow' is a picture full of action, but in spite of this thrilling episode after episode, there is a telling human interest story veiled in love that is bound to please. The divorce question at the present day occupies leading space both on the front page of the national dailies and in the editorial columns. Mr. Davis in making this picture took a page from the book of life and shows in a lively manner the dangers besetting a young girl who marries without first investigating her fiance.

"It is true that we have given our patrons the very best that money and brains can produce, and as a further aid we have done our best to further aid them by the selection of paper and lobby displays. The press book that is ready for distribution I am sure will hold an enviable record in the film world, inasmuch as we have forgotten splendor and splash and have given the exhibitor honest-to-God aids and help to promote showmanship and bring dollars and cents to the box office."

Young Picture's Opening

"Straight from Paris," Star's Latest, Packs Goodwin in Newark

RECEIVED with expectation in the arms of the industry, "Straight From Paris," the sixth and latest Clara Kimball Young production began its career this week at the Goodwin in Newark. The New Jersey home of premieres, could not take care of the crowds, it is reported, despite the large capacity of this house.

"So far has the success of 'Straight From Paris' spread," announces Equity, "that two first run houses of New York have opened negotiations for an early run of the picture. Throughout the week, exchangemen and exhibitors of New York and out of town, visited the Goodwin and enjoyed a session of this photoplay of a milliner's romance. They had heard of the achievement of Harry Garson, director, and Miss Young, star, in their latest effort and came to see for themselves whether the praise was justified. The response is evidenced in the demand for private screenings of the picture, now that it has concluded its Newark run.

The newspaper criticism on Monday night all read in favor of the picture. The Call proclaimed "Straight From Paris" the greatest work of the Equity star's long career. The Ledger declared that it had the setting of a spectacle and the plot of a Moliere play. The gist of the reviews acclaimed the production as a perfectly balanced story, mingling dramatic suspense with humorous relief in an ideal combination. "It never drags," said the Hudson Observer, "it is a tonic with a delicious after taste." Dramatic critics devoted an exceptional amount of space in their comments and advance notices and items are still coming in, in reminiscence of the "good show."

Sam Zierler, of Commonwealth, who has the Equity franchise for New York, invited his leading exhibitors to see the picture in Newark, has already more demands for bookings than there are prints to fill them, it is reported. Many complimentary letters from his exhibitors evince the approval that "Straight From Paris" has met with on first sight. The support of William P. Carleton and Bertram Grassby, both leading men, and of James Jefferson, the noted character actor, brought forth flattering opinion, while the versatility of Miss Young was the subject of tribute.

A Pathé Serial

"THE SKY RANGER"

The Problem of Drawing the Public

Your success is measured by your ability to get them in

THERE is a theatre going season when it is easy to get the crowd into your theatre and ordinary programs will sometimes bring out-of-the-ordinary results.

But there is a season when the sun has climbed higher and its rays are warmer and the charm of the out-of-doors is pulling against the strength of your attractions.

That's when showmanship counts; when box-office values are proven; when you've got to use your head to bridge the gap between profit and loss; when merit only survives in the chase to get the money.

Now, this Spring, is the time for you to put the theatre-going habit into your patrons. Now is the time to get them started right, so you will see them at your box-office weekly for fifteen successive weeks.

A Pathe serial will do it; "The Sky Ranger" will give them the habit and you your profits.

"The Sky Ranger" will do it, for it is clean adventure, clean romance, spread over fifteen weeks during a time when you need something specially good to back up your showmanship.

Allen Enterprises Open First Theatre in United States

Cleveland House Maintains High Standard Set by Allen Brothers

THE opening of the Allen theatre, Cleveland, in Playhouse Square, April 1st, was three-fold in its significance. For Cleveland it means a new center of amusement—for the Allens, their initial entry into the American moving picture theatre field, with a theatre which combines all the attributes of the Allen Chain of Canadian theatres, and with much that is plus in elegance, comfort and innovation. To the amusement sphere this new Allen theatre is of the utmost importance. True, the Allen theatre enterprises in materializing so colossal a scheme for entertainment receive through the eternal law of compensation such fruits as glory, fame and gain which invariably are the handmaids of success; but the significance attached to the construction of a motion picture theatre, which in its architectural structure reaches into the domain of the master buildings of the Italian Renaissance, invades their sanctuary by not only bringing into manifestation their architectral design, but reproductions of their interior decorative scheme, and furnishings is of universal importance.

It has been said that the motion picture theatre is the playhouse of the masses. It is time to compliment the masses for their exceeding good taste as exemplified in this new Allen theatre, for the masses are indirectly responsible for all the luxurious elegance this theatre offers. Whether motion pictures have educated the masses to such an extent that, not content with what modern art can give, the masses now demand the art pigeonholed as the classic, whether the masses have so far evolved as to demand that the amusement with which they are so closely linked should do honor to their name, or whether motion pictures have educated the masses up to this point is not the question with which we are concerned. Hypothesis, theories lead to facts; and it is with facts, cold, hard, and as apparent as the most extreme realists could desire, that we are about to deal.

Let us take a saunter through this new Allen theatre and see for ourselves the culture therein displayed, a culture which has developed from the inner urge, the emotional plane or the physical instinct for harmonious vibrations, their psychology being evident without being understood until the combination of these three planes merge into one, and the intellect begins to take cognizance that this is the culture it desires, and looking at it through its mental glasses demands that this pleasure from amusement must not only be felt emotionally, but must be given a jewel setting so artistic that the eye, too, may be enthralled and communicate the general feeling of satisfaction to the brain. It is the true development spoken of by the sages, the mystics. The inner enlightenment which manifests itself in physical expression, the lasting monument to man's upward climb in the spiritualization of the flesh.

But let us leave the moral to express the morale's environment or setting. Th Allen Cleveland theatre on Euclid Avenu has primarily a most desirable location Surrounded by other leading theatres i the heart of Playhouse Square, the publi could find the location, as it were, in th dark. This section of the city is what i termed as practically new, a great man new structures being herein situated. Fo several blocks surrounding the Allen the atre there are very fine shops.

The Allen theatre has a bronze marque front with flashes of antique gold trim ming, and studded with lights. The ticke booth is constructed of marble an bronze. At the opening of the the atre this rotunda was banked with such a assortment of flowers, orchids, roses lilies, violets, etc., baskets and harps an horseshoes, flowers arranged in every con ceivable design, indicators of the goo wishes of the many friends of the Allen in Canada and the United States, and th new friends in Cleveland, until even th

Operating Advantages of G-E Compensarcs

1. Steady strong arc.
2. Easily operates two arcs at the same time for change-over.
3. Quiet arc strike and quick settle-down.
4. Self regulating arc voltage.
5. Current stays at set value.
6. Current easily raised and lowered.
7. Cannot be damaged by short circuit.
8. Fading made easy.
9. Not affected by changes in current conditions.
10. Quiet in operation.

The first impression of a nationally known theatre is the lasting impression. That is why a motion picture theatre seeking prestige and popularity can take no chances with any item of equipment—and least of all that of the projection room.

The magnificent Allen Theatre recently opened in Cleveland has insured its projection by installing G-E motor generator type Compensarcs. The proprietors are now certain that fluctuating voltage will have no effect on the quality of the screen picture.

Compensarcs are safe, easy to operate, efficient, economical and reliable. G-E offices or distributors everywhere are able to give prompt deliveries and satisfactory service

Were chosen by Messrs. Jule and Jay J. Allen and Mr. C. Howard Crane, Architect, to execute the entire contract for decorating. This contract was broad in scope and included the selections of furnishings, draperies, carpets and upholsteries. Every item of our contract was especially designed to harmonize with the unusual and exclusive architectural features of this exceptional theatre. Even the furniture and the fabrics used in the draperies were made to order from our specifications.

The prevailing style of the Allen Theatre is Italian, and if any one source of Italian decoration could be pointed to as the prototype of this building, the Villa Madama might be considered as the inspiration of the designer of this house.

Our decorators will be pleased to talk over plans with architects and their clients without obligation.

most prosaic mortal, the unbeliever in the beauty of imaginative cities and planes, must have felt that he saw fairyland.

To the left of the rotunda, as you enter, is the general waiting room, furnished in purple and gold. Italian Renaissance color scheme and furniture lines. The gentlemen's smoking-room leads from this general lounge. To the right is the tea room and soda fountain. This room is equipped with that refined luxuriousness which is the soul of atmosphere. Indeed, it is significant to note that the Allen theatre in its process of construction wove into the tapestry of design the golden thread of atmosphere without which no theatre is successful. Throughout the whole theatre one is agreeably impressed with its spaciousness. From the general lounge and the tea room the screen is visible. The feeling which prevails is one of cosiness. The lounges, corridors and such space as has been given over to the comfort of the patrons, has been so arranged that the usual coldness attached to palatial structures is not evident in this Allen theatre. The color scheme of the tea room is cherry and peach. The tables and chairs are dainty, yet substantially comfortable. The dome of the rotunda is supported by fourteen huge pillars finished in antique gold. Balconies overlook the rotunda, giving a Venetian effect. The floor is marble, and here was held an informal dance after the regular performance. It is the purpose to make these informal dances a regular feature after the daily and evening performances. The decorative design of the rotunda reveals copies from the Italian masters in the Villa Madam, Vatican Gardens, Rome, and gives a vision of the dance of the hours, the signs of the Zodiac, and the art conceptions of the Italian Renaissance. This period is carried throughout the house. The draperies being Italian red in color, with gold appliqué and hand-painted designs.

The lighting effect is obtained from what one might term a glow, or reflection of light, rather than by direct brilliancy. The walls of the theatre proper are finished in Italian walnut. There are no boxes. Balconies, backed by huge windows on each side of the walls of the orchestra seats, transplant one to the ancestral hall of an Italian palace; and it is through the use of balconies with their windows that the desired artistic lighting is secured. The dome of the orchestra gives one a vista of the milky way, and, while listening to an orchestral selection, one can star gaze, watch night fading into dawn, and as the overture closes it ushers in the glorious blaze of colors which announce sunrise, the herald of the morning. This effect is managed through the lighting scheme. The grilles through which the perfection of ventilation is achieved are so decorative that they conceal their utility, and are an attractive adjunct to the harmonious whole.

The stage back of the screen is large enough to handle the biggest conception of required effects. In front of the screen, which is approximately 165 feet from the projection booth at the rear of the one balcony, is a stage ample for the presentation of a prologue. Three gigantic columns on each side of this stage, with dancing figures, which stand out in relief from these columns in plated gold; a curtain of Italian rose, with a huge valence, hand-painted, appliquéd in gold and fringe with the colors used in the tome of th upper walls, and domes, crowns an ultra artistic setting which means so much t the presentation of a motion picture.

Leading from the rotunda of the marbl stairways, right and left, richly carpeted which lead to the mezzanine floor, resem bling the lounge of a well-appointed hote marble fountains, luxurious salon appoint ments, palms, ferns, writing tables, alread mark this as Cleveland's favorite ren dezvous. From here the music can be dis tinctly heard. The mezzanine floor lead to the balcony. In front of the balcon proper are the loges. These are furnishe with such comfortable velour upholstere and cushioned chairs that one is loathe t leave the precincts of their comfort.

There is an unobstructed view fron every seat in the house. The acoustic and sight line were perfected through th construction of models, and so far mad flawless that the mezzanine floor is like a whispering gallery.

The premier was attended by many dis tinguished guests. An audience of abou 3400 filled the theatre. The S. R. O. sign was displayed hours before the officia opening. There was no crowding, no ap parent hurry, the schedule of arrange ments was faithfully adhered to. The program opened with an introduction to the new super-grand Kimball Pipe Organ with Mr. Bruce Metcalf at the console and was followed by an orchestral rendition of the Star Spangled Banner, under the conductorship of Mr. Philip Spitalny. This was followed by a stage prologue, introducing three pages. The first introduced the other two, who with a blaze of cornets heralded the official opening. The curtain closed to reveal a picturization of this scene. The Allen Shield upon the screen and an announcement from Messrs. Jule and J. J. Allen giving tribute and thanks to the various units who helped in the realization of this Allen theatre, and a wish that this theatre might anticipate and fulfill the wishes of the Cleveland motion picture public. The screen announcement was brief, simply conforming to the modesty with which the Allen Theatre Enterprises have always met their public. An overture, " Caprice Italien," by Tschaikowsky, by the Allen premier concert orchestra, conducted by Mr. Spitalny, met with instantaneous approval of the entire audience, and introduced music as another important feature of this theatre's attractiveness.

A compendium of new events, education and scenic pastels selected and edited from Selznick and Fox News Weekly followed.

The sixth item was a presentation entitled " Thrills," Kineto Company of America, Inc. An Allen presentation of a musical prologue directed by Luigi Romanelli of Toronto, general musical director of the Allen theatres, was next in order and proved very enjoyable.

The feature photoplay was a select production, Vera Gordon in " The Greatest Love." The program closed with a comedy thriller, the Hall Room boys in " High and Dry." The orchestral accompaniment to the picture presentation gave the desired embellishment.

We cannot close without making a brief mention of those who materialized this dream picture palace of amusement for Messrs. Jule and J. J. Allen: Mr. C. Howard Crane, of Detroit, Mich., with offices in Windsor, Ontario, from which offices plans have gone forward for the erection of not less than 18 Canadian theatres, is architect. Associate architect, Mr. Elmer George Kiehler. Mr. E. M. Milnar, Mr. Crane's New York representative, also contributed his share to the general perfection which prevails. Mr. Louis Rorimer, of the Rorimer Brooks Studio, is responsible for the artistry displayed in the decorative scheme, draperies, carpets, ornaments and general tone of the interior.

The exits, which are numerous, are 50 per cent larger than the size required by the state law. Wall space has been reserved for the hanging of Italian tapestries and Italian Renaissiance Muresques.

Preceding the official opening of the Allen theatre, Mr. R. J. Bulkley, of Cleveland, gave a dinner in honor of Messrs. Jule and J. J. Allen.

Among the guests who remained for the evening were Mayor Fitzgerald, of Cleveland, who expressed himself most enthusiastically; Mrs. Elizabeth Fitzgerald, Mr. Newton D. Baker, ex-Secretary of War, and Mrs. Baker; Mr. and Mrs. William Faversham, Federal Judge Westenhaver, who hoped to be present, was unable at the last moment to attend. Mr. C. A. Otis and several heads of Otis and Company; Mr. and Mrs. George Sherwin, vice-president of the Union Trust Company; Mr. J. P. Harris, vice-president of the Union Trust Company; Mr. H. V. Shulters, President of the National City Bank; Mr. John N. Gundry, president of the Lake Shore Banking and Trust Company; Col. J. J. Sullivan, president of the Central National Savings Bank and Trust Company; Mr. Corliss Sullivan, vice-president; Mr. E. B. Greene, vice-president, Cleveland Trust Company; Mr. Rlaph Hayes, of the Cleveland Trust Company; Mr. P. Herrick, son of the former U. S. Ambassador to France, and many other guests of note, among whom were many leading American film magnates. Mrs. Bulkley was hostess.

An after-theatre supper and dance was given at the Statler Hotel by Messrs. Jule and J. J. Allen to their guests.

Details of Allen Theatre Projection Room Equipment

With Special Reference to Projectors and Accessories

THE projection booth of the Allen theatre isn't a booth at all. It is a room, 20 feet long and 12 feet high, with full height ceiling, two fireproof exit doors—one at either end—its own individual ventilating equipment, and adjoining wash and rest room facilities.

The Allen projection room has many special features to back up the contention that it is the finest, the best equipped, and the most complete of its kind in the state of Ohio.

There are three Powers type 6E projection machines in the room. Frank Denoll, chief operator, says he uses all three of the machines regularly. It makes for a steadier picture, not to keep changing films so often. Also it is easier on the machines. Attached to the projection machines are three Fulco Arc Controllers, for regulating the carbons, so that the lights are automatically fed without any help from the operator.

Special carbons had to be made for these machines to meet the requirements of the high amperage used. The throw at the Allen theatre is 190 feet, by several feet the longest in the state. This long throw, projecting a picture 24 ft. x 12 ft., and pulling 125 amperes, demands the use of carbons especially designed. They were supplied by the National Carbon Company.

A panel board, placed directly back of the projection machines, is one of the original features of the Allen projection booth. Frank Denoll, in charge of the booth, designed it, and says it is the most practical working arrangement of its kind that has ever been devised. This panel board gives Denoll complete control of all the rheostats and motors in the room. It is a great saving of time and labor to have the control of the rheostats and motors all segregated.

A special 5-h.p. exhaust blower, supplied by the Eck Motor and Dynamo Company of Bellville, N. J., sucks out all the foul air from the booth. This blower is independent of the main ventilating system, and supplies only the booth. It is operated by a push button.

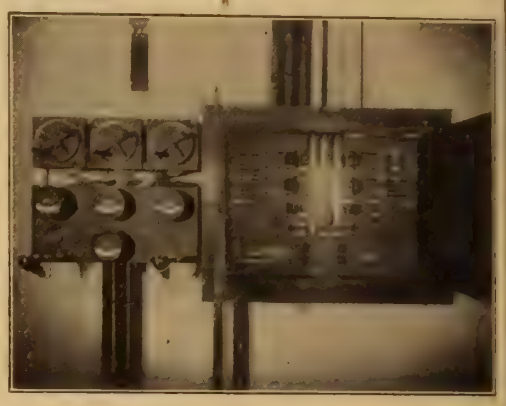
One wall of the booth is fitted up with a marble re-wind bench, resting on an all-metal stand. Three Fulco six-compartment humidors are installed directly under the re-wind bench. All films not in use are kept in these humidors, so that they are maintained at a constant moist temperature, and are always in condition to show the best possible picture.

There are two heavy duty Kleigel spot lights in the Allen projection room, both of them equipped with attachments to produce color effects on the orchestra and for prologue effects. There are twelve different effects obtainable with this equipment, including snow, rain, fire, running water, falling leaves, flying angels and the like.

A Minusa screen, the Powers machines, the Fulco arc controllers, the Fulco humidors, and all lamp coloring were furnished by the Cleveland office of the United Theatre Equipment Company. F. J. Massek is manager of the local U. T. E. branch, and personally supervised the installation of the entire equipment.

Gold Seal Linoleum covers the entire floor of the projection room as well as the screen room.

In addition to this most complete projection room, the Allen theatre has also a fully equipped screening room just adjacent to the projection room. Two Powers machines with Exelite equipment are installed in the screen room. These machines are so installed that they can, at any time, be transferred to the projection room and used there in case of any accident to the regular machines. So there can never be any interruption in the service rendered at the Allen theatre. With five machines, fully equipped with all the latest devices, there can never be a break in the projection of any picture.



Panel Box and Machine Rheostats With Meters

Direct current is supplied by two 75 amperes double arc type General Electric Compensarcs.

Frank Denoll is one of the best known motion picture operators in Ohio. He had charge of the projection booth at the Mall theatre previous to his present location. He has also had practical experience with the installation of projection equipment, having been for some time in the sales department of the United Theatre Equipment Company. Assisting Mr. Denoll in the Allen theatre projection room is Harry Lee. Both Denoll and Lee are shown in action in the accompanying photographs.

Inspection room in new Craftsman laboratory. The projectors on the right are special studio model Simplexes

Craftsmen Lab. Equipped with Unique Simplex Models

Installed in the present quarters of the Craftsmen Film Laboratories, are a group of Simplex Projectors that represent the latest steps taken by the builders of that projector in machine development for specialization purposes.

The Craftsmen Laboratories which were organized but a few years ago and opened up for business with but one floor at 215 West 19th Street, now require four floors in the same building in which to house their numerous activities.

Mr. L. James San, vice-president and general manager of this progressive laboratory, is quick to take advantage of every new device which is developed in connection with up-to-date laboratory equipment, as a trip through the Craftsmen plant quickly proves.

It is in the first floor reviewing division that one sees a battery of eight new studio model Simplex Projectors that were designed purely for studio and laboratory use. This type of Simplex was developed by Mr. E. S. Porter at the Precision Machine Company's laboratory, and with its many new attachments opens up an entirely new field for projector use, in cases where detailed film inspection is required.

This type of machine is thoroughly adaptable for intimate film examination both on the screen and through the film itself, and the entire equipment has been designed so that with a minimum of light a most steady picture may be projected, and by the controlling of the motive power and lights the film examination is readily accomplished by one man, while the operation of the machine is so very simple that it in no way detraces nor interferes from the study of the film subject nor the film itself.

As shown in the picture the mechanism is mounted on a metal-covered cabinet which, in turn, is mounted on four tubular legs. This metal cabinet is divided into two compartments, one of them (on the working side of the machine) contains the lower reel as well as a small lamp for close examination of the film, while the double throw switch is mounted within easy reach of the user. In place of the usual lamphouse, a small fourteen-volt lamp of the Pathescope type, is mounted on the colloing plate position of the mechanism.

The front cover of the mechanism, as well as the right-hand door are removed, so that nothing whatever interferes with the close examination of the film which runs in a three-foot loop from the lower sprocket to the specially mounted take-up reel.

The user threads up in the usual way and sits down facing the screen, which is five or six feet away, and upon which an approximately four-foot size picture is projected. By pulling the double-throw machine switch handle to the right the machine is started in motion, and the Pathescope lamp simultaneously turned on while the screen examination is going on, the user keeps his hand within easy reach of the switch handle, and should a bad spot show upon the screen, the switch handle is thrown to the left, and through the use of a large pulley on the reverse side of the machine, the mechanism, which is running at high speed, can be instantly stopped. It is at this point that a most interesting development takes place, for with the throwing of the switch to the left, the projector light is extinguished simultaneously with the stopping of the machine. And so well timed is the period between the throwing of the switch and the actual stopping, that the bad spot in the film has just had time enough to reach the examining lamp, located under the ground glass cover, which is set in a position between the lower sprocket and the take-up reel. It might be well to note also that this examining light is turned on simultaneously with the stopping of the mechanism, and those who have witnessed a demonstration of this feature, marvel at the arrangement which permits for the bringing down of the film imperfection from the aperture position to the examining position during the time taken to throw the switch handle to the left.

Through the illuminated ground glass cover placed over the examining lamp, the user may examine the film most thoroughly and may attach a "marker" to the spot in question and again throw the switch over and start the machine until the next step is required.

The mechanism of these studio projectors is equipped with the fast two-pin movement which was perfected for Kinemacolor use, and which pulls the film down to the aperture position at twice the ratio, as does the single-pin movement. An extra long framing lever is provided so that it is within easy reach and operation of the user while he is in sitting position.

A small rheostat is mounted in the extreme corner away from the working side of the machine, and this rheostat is one that was developed not only to reduce the line voltage for use on the 14-volt lamp, but also has a splendid adjustment which provides for three ranges of illumination for the projector lamp—namely, full, medium and low. This latter arrangement is provided for economic purposes, as it has been found in a great many cases that there is not always occasion for using the projector lamp at full capacity and by reducing the illumination below the capacity point, greatly tends to prolong the life of the lamp filament.

A Continuous Chain Self-Threading Device for Automatic Film Developing

Can Be Built in Capacities Up to 96,000 Feet in Eight Hours According to Claims

Patent No. 1,367,435 is an invention of Mr. F. E. Smith of New York City covering the design of an automatic developing machine the principal features of which is the continuous chain, self-feeding carrying system for the film which is to be developed. According to the inventor the patented feature may be adapted to developing machines with the following capacities:

Developing Tank Capacity	Developing Time	Feet per Hour
300 ft.	3 min.	6,000 ft.
300 "	4 "	4,500 "
400 "	3 "	8,000 "
400 "	4 "	6,000 "
400 "	5 "	4,800 "
500 "	4 "	7,500 "
500 "	5 "	6,000 "

"The above figures cover the Developing Tank. The Hypo, Washing, Tinting and Drying would be taken care of in the same manner, for instance the developing capacity is 300 ft., likewise the capacity of Hypo would mean a bigger capacity to take care of the fixing of the film. The same operation would be necessary for the washing and drying. It would be necessary to figure the entire machine from the capacity of the developing tank and the time the solutions are working, which can be kept at a temperature of 65 degrees. This can be done by a solution in continuous circulation. This would give uniformity to the quality of photography, which could be regulated for density by a motor which drives the continuous chain through the different solutions. This motor is controlled by a switch with a number of different speeds.

The main object of the invention is the carrying device that holds the film while in operation and safeguards the film. In case the film breaks, this machine does not have to be stopped for repair of the film. The only harm done is the loss of about 5 ft. of film, and the machine continues in operation. The broken section is taken care of when the film has completed its course and is in a dry condition. The chain separates, comes together again, and goes under the floor back to the developing tank, making its complete course continuous, separating at the developing tank to insert the film to be developed and carrying it through the process again.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

How Can Throw be Measured?

From a reader who wishes us to sign his name as "Indiana" comes the following questions:

1. What is the easiest method of measuring the distance from lens to screen?

2. What makes wheels in pictures look as if they were going backward?

3. Should an operator stand up or be seated while he is running a film? I stand up.

4. What do you think the policy of operators should be in regard to apprentices?

Replies: 1. This depends on the location of your projection room. If the room is not too high up in the rear of the theatre you can use a 100-foot tape measure and get a satisfactory result. Otherwise we would suggest that the distance be measured in "steps." Measure from the front of the booth to the front of the balcony then drop down to the auditorium floor and measure from a point exactly under the front of the balcony to the screen. The sum of these distances will give you the total.

You can also figure the distance by the focal length of the lens. Measure the width of the screen picture and the width of the aperture. Then use this data in the formula for obtaining the distance to the screen.

2. To describe the phenomenon would take too much time in these columns. In short, the reason is because the speed of the film in passing through the camera had a certain relation with the speed of the wheel. If the speed is the same the wheels appear to stand still. If the speed of the camera is relatively faster (slightly) the wheels will appear to revolve backward.

3. An operator should sit down whenever he has a chance, all other claims to the contrary. There is no reason whatsoever why a man should be made to stand beside a machine when might just as well be comfortably seated. He will do better and more conscientious work when comfortable.

4. The apprentice has a definite place in this industry as in any other. The attitude of the licensed man should be one of helpfulness. If the apprentice is willing to learn tell him everything you can. It is probable that in trying to explain things to him you will find that you are weak on the subject yourself. Don't be short-minded like many operators and refuse to tell the youngster the tricks of the game for fear that you will lose your job. If the apprentice gets so that he knows more than his instructor, it is time that the latter got out and into another job.

Local 384 Recognizes Ladies' Efforts

At last regular meeting of Movie Operators, Local 384, of Hudson County, N. J., held April 13, 1921.

The members voted on presenting Mrs. Walter A. Bemis, of 123 Washington Street, Hoboken, N. J., with a silk American flag and staff, they also made her an Honorary Member of the local.

Mrs. Elisha Evins, of 110 Ogden Avenue, Jersey City, N. J., to receive a ladies' gold watch, and was also made an Honorary Member of the local.

Both ladies have rendered fine service for the members, they have deprived themselves many days, to look after telephone in case of sickness to members, to fill their places on short notice, or to send operators on special jobs, when the officers were either working, or in the field on business for the local.

The ladies would accept no compensation, but deemed it a pleasure to do this work. The members to show their appreciation voted on the above.

Both Mrs. Bemis and Mrs. Evins were so pleased they could barely find words to express their thanks to the boys.

We Should Say "No, No!"

Says W. R. C., Tennessee: Noticed in a recent copy of the News—the 16th of April that G. R. S., Ohio, wanted to know how to remedy warped filament coils. I am the kind of projectionist that likes to help others so kindly inform him through "our magazine" that he should gently shake the lamps until the broken ends come together. The current will then weld them. z

Comment: We certainly thank W. R. C. for his sincere interest in the sad case of G. R. S., another reader of the News, but we fear that his suggestion cannot be approved. The method he has mentioned can and is sometimes used to get a few more hours' use out of the ordinary Mazda lamp such as is used for household illumination. But the stunt cannot and should not be tried with the incandescent projection lamp. We are of the opinion that W. R. C. misunderstood the other reader, and thought that the lamp with the sagged filament was the common type rather than a projection lamp. In the first place, although we have never tried it, we doubt very much if the projection lamp filament could be shaken enough to cause any welding on contact. The wire is thick and heavy, and the supports have been designed, so that they will stand a good bit of severe treatment without movement.

We must stand by our original answer to G. R. S., to the effect that when his projection lamp has become inefficient through the distraction of the filament he should discard it and replace with a new bulb.

Ammeter and Voltmeter Windings

J. W., Los Angeles, Cal.: How does the winding differ in ammeter and voltmeter? What parts of a dynamo are the most liable to be short circuited?

Reply: In an ammeter the winding consists of a few turns of heavy wire, and in the voltmeter the winding is of a large number of turns of fine wire. The ammeter is an instrument placed in series with the circuit, and therefore must be capable of withstanding the current flow of that circuit. A voltmeter is placed across the circuit and therefore carries but a small percentage of the total current.

The field coils, armature and commutator are the parts of a dynamo most frequently short circuited.

Providence Operators Form Society

The members of the Moving Picture Operators' Union in Providence, R. I., has formed a branch of the Society of Motion Picture Projectionists, the objects of which are the study of the technical problems connected with the projection of pictures, the establishment of a library of technical works relating to it, catalogues of the latest type of apparatus, and a course of semi-monthly lectures on the subject.

Novagraph Cameras Pass Government Tests

A test was recently made in New York City by Government experts on the Novagraph Untra Speed Camera. One hundred feet of roadway was carefully measured off. An automobile covered the distance several times in 3 seconds flat while the cameras were recording its motion.

In the test from the instant the automobile appeared in and until it ran out of the picture the camera secured 1,208 perfect frames or exposures in 3 seconds, as determined by a stop watch. The 1,208 pictures were included in 75 feet of film which means a fraction over 402 perfect pictures per second, each frame showing the automobile. This means that the camera produced an average exposure of 400 feet of film in 16 seconds.

According to Charles P. Watson, president and general manager of the Novagraph Film Corporation, the camera could have been driven at double the speed it was begun operated at, and he believes it possible that he could have secured twice the number of pictures per second as he did.

Simplex Performs at Astor Residence

On the eve of April 6, more than five hundred of New York's exclusive society set assembled in the magnificent art gallery at the well-known Vincent Astor home at 840 Fifth Avenue, New York City, to witness the premier presentation of "Dream Street."

The matter of furnishing the necessary projection equipment was turned over entirely to B. F. Porter, Greater New York distributor of the Precision Machine Company. Two of the latest motor-driven type "S" Simplex Projectors were entrusted with the projecting of this new masterpiece, and the guests at the Astor home were gratified with the splendid results obtained.

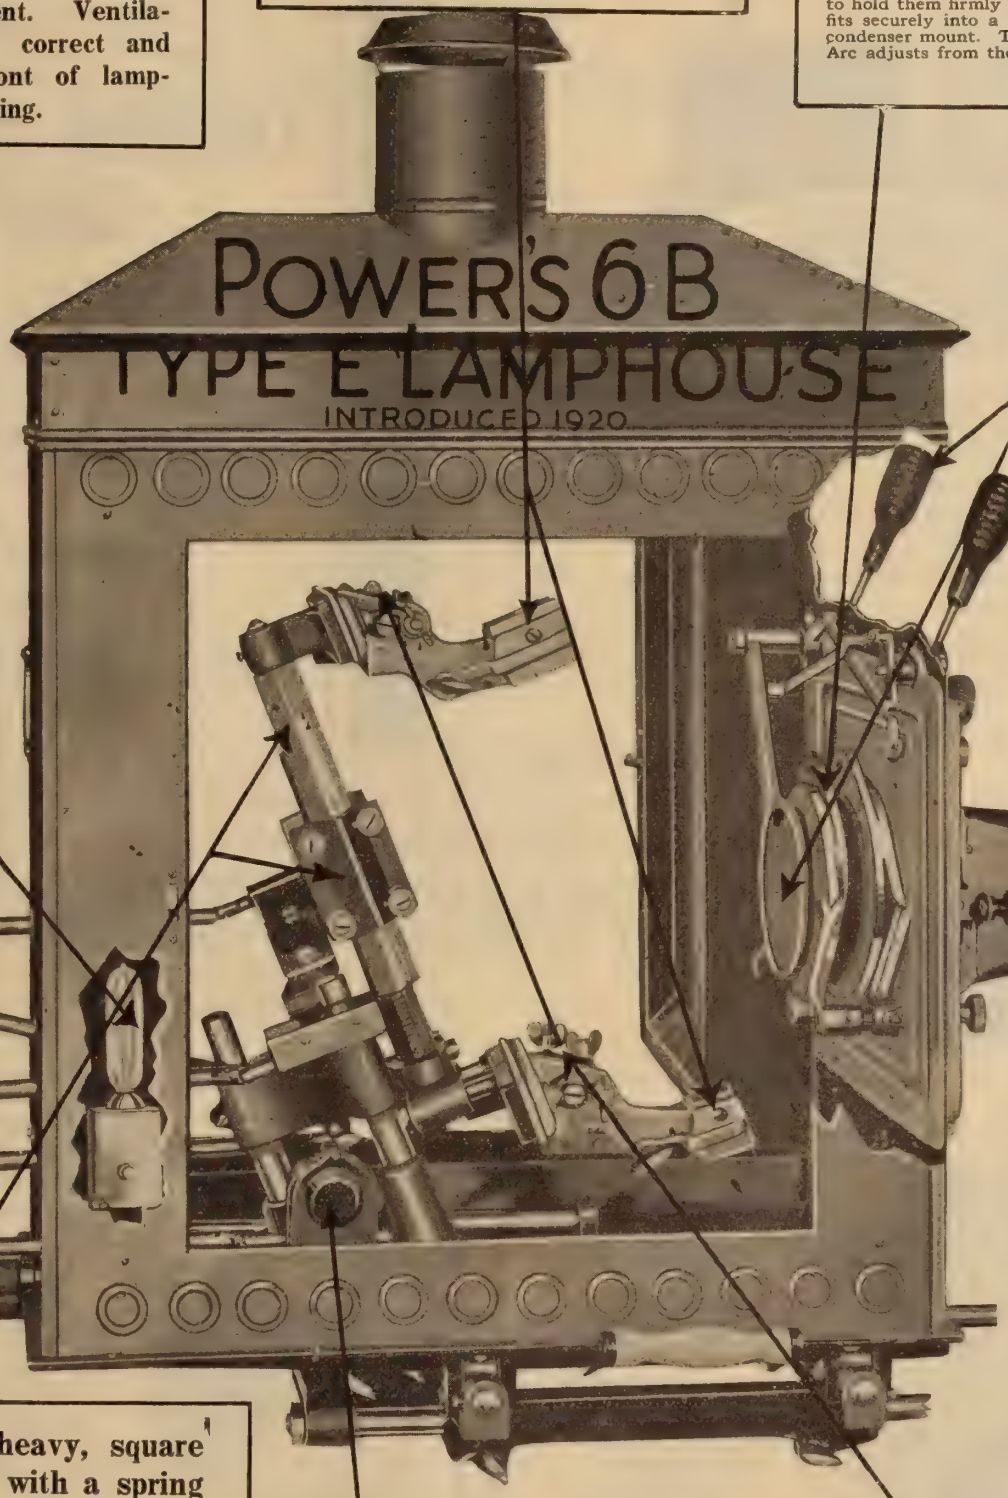
Benny Turner, who was placed in charge of the performance at the Astor home, received many compliments for the splendid results obtained at that performance.

The extra large area "cubical capacity" of Type "E" Lamphouse prevents overheating with arcs of high amperage, and permits ready access and adjustment. Ventilation is scientifically correct and two openings in front of lamphouse facilitate cleaning.

Upper carbon holder accommodates carbons from 5/8" to 1 1/8" inclusive; lower carbon holder sizes 1/2" to 3/4" inclusive and "V" shaped clamps assure a rigid hold on the carbons without breaking them.

The condensers may be easily cleaned as condenser mounts are supported on strong gray iron frame, hinged to the lamphouse—opening outwardly, thereby bringing mounts entirely clear of the lamphouse. Extra heavy gray iron holders insure a perfect alignment of the condensers, and to hold them firmly in place a "V" shaped edge fits securely into a "V" shaped groove on the condenser mount. The condenser nearest to the Arc adjusts from the outside of the lamphouse.

The lateral backward and forward adjustments are made on lower carbon, so that when adjusting the lamp the crater remains unchanged.



A heavy gray iron dowser inside lamphouse protects the condenser from flame and sudden heat when striking the arc.

Pilot light burns when door is opened and illumnates lamphouse when changing carbons and making adjustments

The lamp is very heavy throughout and thoroughly insulated. It has been severely tested by the National Board of Fire Underwriters up to 2000 volts A. C.

Wire clamps and carbon holders are made of one piece of metal to prevent poor connections and arcing.

Rack rods are heavy, square steel bars held with a spring cover to give greater wearing surface and amply take care of expansion. This also prevents the rack bars binding when subjected to the intense heat of the Arc.

A worm wheel and gear for raising and lowering the lamp gives additional rigidity.

Both carbon holders are equipped with clamp designed to replace lugs on the wires. The clamps having a series of interlocking corrugations, top and bottom, make a perfect connection when the wire is clamped between them.

You Owe Yourself An Investigation

Reviews. Where I felt that jazz actually fitted in, nothing else would do. There jazz had its full fling.

Now my attitude on jazz is very plain. Use it wherever it belongs. Don't try to make your theatre a non-jazz house. To do so would be to mistake your mission in life. Your job is to satisfy your patrons and make the maximum of money out of your investments.

But now comes the most surprising part of my whole discussion. Discovery after the most careful investigation brings forth the fact that jazz cannot be used in more than a comparatively small part of the program, without hurt to the show:

Let me put it this way: Say that I was intensely desirous of using all the jazz music I could, believing it to be the more invigorating and arousing type of melody; I would find myself stumped at almost every turn for the reason that I would learn that the jazz wouldn't fit. . . . Thus, it would be simply murderous to a feature picture of calm, noble intention to jazz the action into a syncopated satire of the author's and director's and actors' purposes.

In the development of a tragedy, in the creation of a restful country picture, in the suggestion of a political hiatus, in the picture of a war-episode, in the sincerity of a pure, sweet love-affair as it works to the betrothal, in the moment of the marriage, the mother's discovery of her new-born at her side, the return of the prodigal son, the arrival of the hero in time to avert the villain's seizure of the heroine, the old mother defending her son—in all such scenes the jazz idea would be like a bull in a china closet! It would smash the realities to bits.

In the prologue to a serious picture, in the scoring of a news-reel, in the interpretation of an educational, and in the cueing of a fairly serious comedy—the jazz just simply can't be dragged in—for to use it, seems incongruous and thoroughly out of place and disastrous.

And yet as I have remarked before, there are places where the jazz dovetails ideally and where any higher kind of music seems stupid, and seeks to make sublime the most ridiculous and ordinary of situations.

What do I think of jazz?

I think it has its place in the film programs and picture-scoring; but its place is very much limited in the theatre seeking to use music as a true reflection of the meanings on the screen.

Chicago American Boosts Film Music

The Chicago American recently in a Sunday issue wrote in part as follows:

The commercial showing of motion pictures began in crowded little holes in the walls, to the accompaniment of cheap ragtime pounded out on tinpanny pianos.

Addressing Printing

Since then the motion picture industry has grown to be the chief artistic delight of the whole population, and the music has become practically as important as the pictures.

Where music is carefully selected for the pictures, and well played by good orchestras, there the motion picture houses boast a large attendance and become increasing factors in the artistic development of their communities.

Where the music is unsuitable, or is given an unimportant place, there you will find a show house on the downward path. For the American people, at heart, is a music-loving people and will not for long tolerate cheap and tawdry music in its show palaces.

Irving Berlin Writes Song to be Used in "Passion Flower"

Irving Berlin has written a poem with music to be interpolated into and sung with "The Passion Flower," which has just been completed by Herbert Brenon with Norma Talmadge in the stellar role.

The name of the song is the same as that of the Benavente play. It provides the main theme for the musical accompaniment of this poignant Spanish drama. It has a haunting lyrical melody which reflects the intensity and the color of the subject.

Mr. Barton Takes Issue with Mr. Buhrman

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

In your issue of April 9, Mr. T. Scott Buhrman, editor of the American Organist, makes a statement with which I take issue. Mr. Buhrman is well established as an authority in the organ field and in his position as editor of one of the leading organist journals I have great admiration for him, but according to Mr. Buhrman's own statement he has been seriously interested in the theatre organists for only the past eight months. I have been interested in theatre organs and organists for ten years.

Mr. Buhrman says: "There is not one agency in America that is doing anything in a practical or professional manner to help organists train themselves for and perfect themselves in picture accompanying, except the work of my associates in the co-operative magazine. I have the honor of editing." Mr. Buhrman is in error, probably due to the short length of time he has been interested in the motion picture organist field.

The Bartola Musical Instrument Company has maintained a school for organists for over five years. This school was put into operation by the writer because he realized the need of professionally trained organists for motion picture work. I am the designer of the Bartola musical instruments and the Barton organs manufactured by the Bartola Musical Instrument Company and I believe we were the first company to realize the necessity of trained organists. This school is run with a conscientious effort to secure and educate musicians so they will be 100 per cent competent to properly play motion pictures. It is maintained free of cost to the musicians and the musicians are secured positions through the agency of the Bartola Company, for which there is no charge. This school has been in operation for over five years and we have a card index system showing the names and addresses of more than a thousand organists who have been assisted in the art of playing pictures by the Bartola Company.

Mr. Buhrman further states that he "warns the managers that the organists are going to ask what kind of an organ have you," and says "if the instrument is some trade makeshift that is merely a wretched trade made box of steam whistles, no reputable musician would undertake to play it." We are making organs especially adapted for motion picture theatres, specializing in this one branch of the industry, and can assure Mr. Buhrman that the Barton organs do not come under his designation of the instruments organists do not want to play.

I agree with Mr. Buhrman as to the necessity of co-operation and assistance to organists, for without any doubt there is right now a great financial and artistic opportunity for the organists in the motion picture field.

Yours very truly,
DAN BARTON,
General Manager,
Bartola Musical Instrument Company.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the last sixteen weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to January 1, 1920.

PICTURE — BRAND — STAR — RELEASED — PLAN BOOK

ALL DOLLED UP (UNIVERSAL) GLADYS WALTON.....MAR. 12
"Pleasing offering with the star in an ideal role."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A very good picture, though we had only average business with it and it did not come up to my expectations as a box office attraction." "A nice little picture, with no special attraction. Gladys Walton scores again, as a pert little 'flapper,' and is gaining quite a following." "Dandy little picture. Had more than the usual business with it." "Good business attended this feature. Picture pleasingly done."

ALL SOULS EVE (REALART) MARY MILES MINTER.....MAR. 5
"Incredible plot, but has appealing moments."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Very good picture. Receipts poor."

AMATEUR DEVIL, AN (PARAMOUNT) BRYANT WASHBURN...MAR. 12
"A decidedly mediocre comedy with Washburn."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Two days to average business."

BARBARIAN, THE (PIONEER) MONROE SALISBURY.....FEB. 26
"Fine backgrounds but very little action."—M. P. News.

BARE KNUCKLES (FOX) WILLIAM RUSSELL.....MAR. 19
"Above the average thriller, only in exteriors."—M. P. News.

BARS OF IRON (STOLL FILM CORP.) SPECIAL CAST.....MAR. 19
"Just an ordinary production."—M. P. News.

BAIT, THE (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) HOPE HAMPTON.....JAN. 15
"Rather hectic but fairly interesting."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Not a good picture and business was way off. Our patrons didn't know the star." "Fair picture to fair business." "Average picture to average business."

"Fairly interesting, though would be more convincing if developed humorously."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A wonderful picture which sure did go 'over the top.' Brought large box office receipts and much satisfaction from the audiences." "Fairly good picture with average business." "A splendid picture, well made, well acted, beautifully staged, but for some reason or other it didn't pull them in and business was only average." "Clever story with many new angles which makes a very high class and interesting photoplay. Drew splendidly and we played to big business for the week."

BIG ADVENTURE, THE (UNIVERSAL) SPECIAL CAST.....APR. 23
"Simple heart interest picture carries some appeal."—M. P. News.

BIG PUNCH, THE (FOX) BUCK JONES.....FEB. 19
"Buck Jones as a minister; a dull picture."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Good entertainment. Extra big business one day."

BLACKBIRDS (REALART) JUSTINE JOHNSTONE..... DEC. 25
"Justine Johnstone is a welcome screen figure in crook melodrama."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"One of the poorest features I've ever had the misfortune to play. Story was worked to death, and star did not live up to one-tenth of her press notices. My audience was much disappointed." "A mediocre picture. Star not particularly attractive, but played to good business for reasons unknown."

BLACK BEAUTY (VITAGRAPH) JEAN PAIGE.....JAN. 22
"Entertaining picture made from famous classic."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Business satisfactory because of the excellence of the picture and the fact that so many children come to see it." "One of the best pictures I have ever seen from the standpoint of a patron. Appeals to all ages and classes. Big business at all performances. School children essay contest helped put it over."

BLIND WIVES (FOX) SPECIAL CAST.....JAN. 15
"Another episode picture of certain appeal."—P. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Good melodrama that pleased lovers of this class of entertainment. Box-office returns better than usual." "Fairly good both as to pleasing the audiences and box-office returns." "Picture is below average in entertainment value. Business fair."

BLUSHING BRIDE, THE (FOX) EILEEN PERCY.....MAR. 19
"Exceedingly weak; might have made a good Sunshine."—M. P. News.

BRANDED SOUL, THE (STOLL-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST.....FEB. 19
"Redemption story carries little appeal and is badly overacted."—M. P. News.

BREAKING POINT, THE (FROTHINGHAM-HODKINSON) BESSIE BARRISCALE .....FEB. 5
"More than a vehicle—a well-sustained marital drama."—M. P. News.

BREWSTER'S MILLIONS (PARAMOUNT) ROSCOE ARBUCKLE...FEB. 5
"What the public has been waiting for from Fatty."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Sure-fire winner. Pleased the audiences immensely. Box office returns much larger than usual." "Good comedy bringing the usual business." "This is a splendid picture and went over big with our audience. Played to large business for one week." "Capacity houses on opening Sunday in spite of heavy rain all afternoon and evening. A big winner with the public." "A great picture. It pleased my audiences, consequently the box office receipts were larger than usual." "'Fatty' went over in this picture in a surprising manner. Picture played to capacity for seven-day run." "Don't miss this one, a really big box office play." "Best box office returns in three months. Thoroughly pleased and people talked about it which brought increasing throngs." "Tickles 'em stiff—doing big."

BUNTY PULLS THE STRINGS (GOLDWYN) SPECIAL CAST.....JAN. 15
"Fine production given famous stage comedy."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Dandy little story to this one. Pleased my patrons and kept me packing 'em in. Almost a record-breaker." "Too fragmentary to please majority of patrons. Artistically done, however." "A very good production, splendidly acted and mounted, but which did not seem to attract average business."

BURGLAR PROOF (PARAMOUNT) BRYANT WASHBURN.....FEB. 12
"Washburn's best one in a dog's age—a real comedy."—M. P. News.

BURIED TREASURE (COSMOPOLITAN-PARAMOUNT) MARION DAVIES .....FEB. 28
"Spectacular production, but story is unimpressive,"—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Big production. Story not convincing. However, it is the best thing the star has done so far. Fair box office value."

CABINET OF DR. CALIGARI, THE (GOLDWYN) SPECIAL CAST..APR. 16
"A radical departure; highly artistic and imaginative."—M. P. News.

CHARM SCHOOL, THE (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) WALLACE REID .....JAN. 8
"Wallace Reid has another winner here."—M. P. News.
Exhibitors Comment.—"Fine picture, pleasing, entertaining, and brought good business." "Wallace Reid went over big in this picture. Our patrons thought it was one of the best of this popular star's productions. Played to excellent business the week preceding New Year's." "We consider this one of the best box office attractions we have ever played. Did exceptional business during its run at this house and is an excellent picture." "Very good picture, full of entertaining points. Did good business." "One of the most pleasing pictures we have ever shown. Business was very good." "Good enough for a second week holdover. Business extra good both weeks. Best Wallace Reid picture ever seen." "Certainly good. Business fine all week. Audiences well pleased." "Very good picture which held down big business for a week." "Very good. Good business for entire week." "Two days to big business. Very good." "Delightful from start to end. Reid one of the biggest favorites of screen out here. Big business uninterrupted all week."

CHARMING DECEIVER, THE (VITAGRAPH) SPECIAL CAST.....APR. 16
"Mild interest because of its conventional treatment."—M. P. News.

CHEATER REFORMED, THE (FOX) WILLIAM RUSSELL.....JAN. 15
"William Russell has an entertaining crook picture here."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Played Holy Week to the usual bad business. Not a good picture and no one praised it."

CHICKENS (INCE-PARAMOUNT) DOUGLAS MACLEAN.....MAR. 26
"Forced comedy and hokum never ring the bell."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Brought average business. Fair picture." "Played this on the program with the Universal feature 'If Only Jim,' starring Harry Carey to two days of extra big business." "Not as good as previous McLean-May productions and the 'feminine half' of this combination was sadly missed. Still this picture was good and drew well." "Too weak even for the chickens. Wouldn't even stand on a double program as a comedy." "About the usual Douglas MacLean feature; good farce, but not up to '23½ Hours' Leave.'"

CINDERELLA'S TWIN (METRO) VIOLA DANA.....JAN. 8
"Just misses being very commonplace."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"This little star always draws well for me, and this was not as clever as 'The Chorus Girl's Romance,' business was almost as good. Consider it a good business-getter." "Fairly entertaining and patrons were pleased. Good business." "The old Cinderella story, strictly modernized and made fairly plausible. Business only fair."

CITY OF SILENT MEN, THE (PARAMOUNT) THOMAS MEIGHAN .....APR. 16
"Interesting crook story with rich details and heart interest."—M. P. News.

COLORADO (UNIVERSAL) FRANK MAYO.....FEB. 19
"Mayo's latest strong in action."—M. P. News.

CONCERT, THE (GOLDWYN) SPECIAL CAST.....MAR. 5
"Another stage vehicle adaptation which flops."—M. P. News.

CONNECTICUT YANKEE IN KING ARTHUR'S COURT, A (FOX) SPECIAL CAST.....FEB. 12
"Mark Twain modernized in an appealing picture."—M. P. News.

COUSIN KATE (VITAGRAPH) ALICE JOYCE.....FEB. 12
"Alice Joyce has strong personality in 'Cousin Kate'"—M. P. News

DANGEROUS MOMENT, THE (UNIVERSAL) CARMEL MYERS...APR. 16
"A light and pleasing romance of Greenwich Village."—M. P. News.

Feature Subjects of Short Length

"The Blizzard"
(Vitagraph Comedy—Two Reels)

JIMMIE AUBREY with his expressive eyes, Jimmie Aubrey in a night dress, Jimmie Aubrey in a pair of trick trousers, a lot of snow, plenty of slippery ice, a cold room, a trick mattress, a girl with a black shawl and a baby, a group of effective foils, a "gag" policeman—these mixed up in a series of outrageous antics spell a comedy which Vitagraph may feel proud to offer. It belongs to the knock-about variety and Aubrey is there with bells on when it comes to cutting up capers in a nonsensical fashion. The first reel is good for consecutive laughter particularly so when Jimmie attempts to keep out the icy blasts and whirling snow from his furnished room. Between his night dress, the bed-clothes and the mattress he has a hard time keeping warm.

We next see Jimmie shoveling the mountain of snow from his room and he buries the "cop" on the beat with it. This is the cue to present the slippery pavement. The policeman, pedestrians, and the comedian are sent sailing along the sidewalk and the action takes on the form of a chase. Next the forlorn heroine comes on the scene to claim the janitor as the father of her ch-e-e-e-i-l-d. And this husky citizen has a merry time dodging his responsibility and putting Jimmie down for the count. The latter reel is not as lively as its forerunner, yet it packs enough slapstick to amuse most anyone. "The Blizzard" is a real novelty in comedy production. It gets away from the regulation brand and offers a new bag of tricks. Original gags and sure-fire hokum make it better than the average.—LAURENCE REID.

"Buzz-z-z"
(Chester Screenic-Educational)

"BUZZ-Z-Z" is a complete history of the mosquito from the time the eggs are laid in some stream, river or marshy land up to the time this dangerous insect takes to the wing and also takes it into his head to go blood hunting.

But this is not all, for the reel also shows the modern methods of fighting this pest in order to exterminate him.

In the opening views the eggs are shown floating about in the water until a subtitle announces that "it takes but a little sunshine" to hatch the flying devils. In the following scenes the young ones are seen squirming and writhing about in all manner of ways, until they are half grown.

In the latter scenes it is most interesting to see the insects diving about in the water securing food and then shooting to the top for air. But a most peculiar thing about this is the fact that the mosquito does not use his mouth to obtain the oxygen but rather uses his tail as a periscope and with head hung down drinks the required amount, when he shoots to the bottom again until a fresh supply is needed.

It is at this period in their lives that the mosquito hunters pour oil upon the surface of the water and when the future blood hunters shoot their periscopes to the surface and find that they cannot penetrate its thickness discouragement takes hold of them after vainly attempting to pierce the oily substance and they sink to the bottom.

This does not happen to all mosquitoes as many of the views show, for the oil man cannot be everywhere. When he is not the insects become full grown and endeavor as much as possible to keep up the reputation of New Jersey.

"Moonshine"
(Mermaid Comedy-Educational—Two Reels)

THE first reel of this comedy is such a "knock-out" in the shape of amusing gags and broad slapstick touches, that it naturally loses its punch in the latter reel. The conflict between moonshiners and "revenuers" is a scream in the way of providing laughter. It is a great sham battle and is conducted according to the world series with bleachers, score-board, et al to lend atmosphere. New incident, novel hokum and snappy titling certainly put it over. Then it takes a flop because the succeeding shots are rather weak in amusing high lights. Lloyd Hamilton is the comedian. "Moonshine" is strong enough in its introductory incident to score with any audience.—LAURENCE REID.

"A Dollar's Worth"
(Universal-Century)

HARRY SWEET is not quite as interesting in this two-reeler as he was in his previous release. Not that he is not funny and cannot be funny but that the gags in "A Dollar's Worth" resort entirely to slap-stick, of the throwing and hitting variety. Consequently the young star does not get a chance to build up enough interest before the gags are sprung; to get in the light and shade, as t'were.

There are many really funny situations, however, running all through the comedy, one in particular being the scenes laid in a saloon in which two roughnecks do their darndest to put the young hick away but fail because luck is against them. In order to accomplish their object one of them goes into a back room and endeavors to pour a sickening powder through a hole in the wall, the effect of which is deadly to whomsoever it encircles. The hick is shown a picture of a pretty girl and told to look through a peephole where he will see the original. He does but it seems the fellow on the other end cannot get his apparatus working in time to catch the simpleton in the face. And so the story goes, one situation after another follow, each working to a climax which explodes with a bang. They'll certainly laugh at this one but we would like to see Sweet in something lighter, something that would interest and at the same time keep to the laughs.—FRANK LEONARD.

"Movie Mad"
(Christie Comedy-Educational—Two Reels)

THERE is unfolded in this Christie comedy as original a line of high jinks as has ever been shown in a two-reeler. It is an exceptionally clever satire on the movie craze and presents a sub-deb who is wild to meet a slapstick comedian. To discourage her the attentive young man disguises himself as Charlie Chaplin and proceeds to cut up according to the style of the comedian in the old Keystone days. It is great publicity for the star.—LAURENCE REED.

"The Sweetest Story Ever Told"
(One Reel Prizma Colored Subject Showing Various Kinds of Candy)

PRIZMA coloring makes scenes showing various kinds of candy, with a shot or two of pretty girls, rather an entertaining reel of film and once again demonstrates that the Prizma process has very nearly reached natural colors.

Good captions that tie up well with the title add to the reel's entertaining qualities. The picture is suitable for any theatre.—J. S. DICKERSON.

"Very artistic with Arliss superb in his screen debut."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"One of the photoplay masterpieces of the age. Wonderful production. Excellent acting. But a picture that will appeal only to the discriminating." "A picture that aroused the curiosity of the public. A good house all week. An artistic production." "Entertaining picture. Pleased intelligent audiences. Only mildly enjoyed by the ordinary run of people who do not like to think in the movies and who prefer a pleasant tale. Fair box office attraction due to the star." "High class picture that appeals to the discriminating. Well liked by all who saw it. Did good business. Holding it over for second week."

DIANE OF STAR HOLLOW (PRODUCERS SECURITY CORP.—STATE RIGHTS) BERNARD DURING.....APR. 23
"A complex story, well acted and entertaining because of action."—M. P. News.

DOLLAR A YEAR MAN, THE (PARAMOUNT) ROSCOE ARBUCKLE APR. 9
"Weak humor and hokum make this a poor effort."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A sure-fire attraction, which brought extra large box office receipts." "Fatty Arbuckle always a sure bet and this picture proves to be no exception. Capacity house all week."

DUCKS AND DRAKES (REALART) BEBE DANIELS.....APR. 9
"Bebe Daniels has a lively offering here."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Best Bebe Daniels has to her credit up to date. Business was better than it has been for several weeks."

DYNAMITE ALLEN (FOX) GEORGE WALSH.....MAR. 5
"Disconnected and wildly improbable melodrama."—M. P. News.

813 (ROBERTSON-COLE) WEDGWOOD NOWELL.....JAN. 22
"Interesting moments in mystery story."—M. P. News.

EAST LYNNE (BALLIN-HODKINSON) SPECIAL CAST.....MAR. 26
"Modernized version of play and book should interest."—M. P. News.

EASY ROAD, THE (PARAMOUNT) THOMAS MEIGHAN.....FEB. 26
"Rather mild for Thomas Meighan."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Our patrons seemed to like this one which played to excellent business for one week." "Thomas Meighan draws no matter what sort of picture, or role he has. This production an excellent one, and played to excellent business." "Showed in conjunction with Lloyd Hamilton in 'Moonshine.' A week's capacity business. The picture offers a good field for exploitation. Thomas Meighan at his best." "Nothing extraordinary in this picture, but business was fair." "Not as good as some of the other Meighan pictures. Meighan well liked, however, and matinee business was particularly good."

EDUCATION OF ELIZABETH, THE (PARAMOUNT) BILLIE BURKE.....FEB. 26
"Billie Burke has real opportunities in polite comedy."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Women came to see Billie and the gowns. Did better than expected, as she has not done well at all of late." "A fair picture. Nothing extraordinary. Average business." "One of the star's best, but it only drew fair business." "Played it on the bill with 'Sunset Sprague' (Buck Jones) to extra big business two days." "Two days to average business."

EXTRAVAGANCE (METRO) MAY ALLISON.....MAR. 5
"Interest dulled by a too lengthy picture."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A program picture with nothing out of the ordinary to recommend it."

FIGHTING STRANGER, THE (CANYON PICTURES-STATE RIGHTS) FRANKLYN FARNUM.....JAN. 29
"Selig produces another thriller, with Franklyn Farnum."—M. P. News.

FIRE CAT, THE UNIVERSAL) EDITH ROBERTS.....FEB. 12
"Edith Roberts scores in Carmenesque role."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A good picture to big business one day."

FIRST BORN, THE (HAWORTH-ROBERTSON-COLE) SESSUE HAYAKAWA.....FEB. 12
"A title, heart interest and Hayakawa's acting should attract them."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"By far the best picture that Sessue Hayakawa has ever made. It is a true conception of Oriental life."

FLAME, THE (STOLL FILM-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST.....FEB. 5
"A good production with foreign setting."—M. P. News.

"De Mille scores another ten strike; a great audience picture."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Elaborately produced and entertaining production that went over for a two week run to capacity business." "Fine picture that drew enormous crowds during opening week of this theatre." "They were terribly disappointed with this. Did not think it lived up to 'Something to Think About' and 'Why Change Your Wife?'" "Broke the attendance record. Greatly talked about. Continued for a second week." "This picture drew well and brought excellent business." "Held over a second week to excellent crowd. Pleased everyone who saw it." "DeMille's pictures always draw immense crowds. This was proved interesting, but not startling. Patrons like the atmosphere of affluence which permeates these pictures. Constantly large attendance." "This one packed the house every performance. A very fine entertaining picture and patrons seemed well pleased." "A fairly good picture with business about as usual." "Drew a capacity house all week. Considered one of the best attractions that has been produced in months." "Very good. The people came the first day in response to wide advertising and they told their neighbors it was a good picture." "A very good picture. Handicapped by strong opposition." "Went over big on the second week of its run." "Gorgeous costumes and dazzling scenic effects, but the picture drags in spots. A good box office attraction."

FORBIDDEN LOVE (WISTARIA PRODUCTIONS-STATE RIGHTS) SPECIAL CAST.....APR. 16
"Rather morbid, but has interesting moments."—M. P. News

FOUR HORSEMEN, THE (METRO) SPECIAL CAST.....MAR. 5
"Marvelous production reaches the heights of picture art."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Packed them in on this one. People curious to see it. Great box office attraction."

FREEZE OUT, THE (UNIVERSAL) HARRY CAREY.....APR. 9
"Carey's personality its chief asset."—M. P. News.

"Play seems old-fashioned as picture."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Typical Burke picture, very pleasing, fair business due to holidays." "Just plain trash—it's a pity a good star and real money are expended on such drivel." "Average business. No new angles throughout the entire five reels. Photography and direction good, cast fair, but story weak from being overworked." "Had poor business with this one for entire week." "Very trashy and silly. Audience hardly enthused. Business only fair." "Billie Burke does not draw for me any more and this one meant nothing to me."

"Interesting story of a crook's redemption."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Good picture which brought more than usual business." "Very entertaining feature which the popularity of Thomas Meighan with our patrons helps to put over in good shape. Did excellent business." "Thomas Meighan always draws well for me and this picture was no exception. Business was fair and comments on the picture showed interest, though not the enthusiastic applause of the other pictures which I have played with this star." "Meighan is a great favorite here and will always pack a house. This vehicle is satisfactory, but a startling winner." "Picture pleased generally and drew well. Business fine." "Not up to Meighan's standard. His own work excellent, but support poor and not worthy of him. Business good, for Meighan is a great drawing card for me." "This one went over big and continued so during run. Audiences well pleased with the story." "Thomas Meighan always sure box office winner at this house and this picture, clean and wholesome throughout, was enjoyed by everyone." "This is rather an average picture. It started with big business but this decreased towards the end of the week."

GARDEN OF RESURRECTION, THE (STOLL) SPECIAL CAST.....APR. 2
"Poor direction makes this one mediocre."—M. P. News.

GHOST IN THE GARRET, THE (PARAMOUNT) DOROTHY GISH..APR. 16
"A rollicking farce comedy with Dorothy Gish."—M. P. News.

GILDED LILY, THE (PARAMOUNT) MAE MURRAY.....MAR. 19
"Mae Murray's latest is a winner."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Attracted capacity audiences for a seven-day run." "This picture attracted big audiences and house was packed every performance." "The kind of picture patrons expect to see Mae Murray in. About the best she has done. Consistent business with a clientele she has built up." "Only Mae Murray's tricky costumes, and dancing held this up. Business just fair, despite heavy advertising."

GIRL WITH THE JAZZ HEART, THE (GOLDWYN) MADGE KENNEDY.....JAN. 8
"Madge Kennedy plays two roles exceptionally well."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"This was a corker. I think it the best thing Madge Kennedy has yet done. They all liked it, and I played to capacity houses all week." "Nothing great about this but title is catchy and Madge Kennedy has a following. Result—good houses." "Madge Kennedy has considerable drawing power here. Her picture is not strong but our people liked it."

GODLESS MEN (BARKER-GOLDWYN) SPECIAL CAST.....FEB. 12
"Unpleasant story depending on acting and unusual twist to story."—
Exhibitor Comment—"Comfortable business, which is better than expected Holy Week. Picture has great possibilities as a drawing card under normal times."

GOD'S GOOD MAN (STOLL FILM CORP.) SPECIAL CAST.....FEB. 26
"A poor production from all angles."—M. P. News.

GREAT ADVENTURE, THE (BENNETT-FIRST NATIONAL) LIONEL BARRYMORE.....JAN. 22
"More interesting via the printed page."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Not as good as some Barrymore pictures but enjoyed and full houses resulted." "A treat for those who like a good time. House was in a chuckle all the time. Good business. Steady all week." "A poor picture and business was below average during run."

GREAT DAY, THE (PARAMOUNT) SPECIAL CAST.....APR. 16
"Good production given mediocre story."—M. P. News.

GREATER CLAIM, THE (METRO) ALICE LAKE.....FEB. 19
"Alice Lake scores in ordinary story."—M. P. News
Exhibitor Comment—"Average production. Business good for the first three days."

GUILE OF WOMEN, THE (GOLDWYN) WILL ROGERS.....MAR. 12
"Rogers, good story and clever titles make this fine entertainment."—M. P. News.

HANDS OFF (FOX) TOM MIX.....APR. 16
"Humorous touches make Western entertaining."—M. P. News.

HEART OF MARYLAND, THE (VITAGRAPH) CATHERINE CALVERT.....APR. 16
"Excellent picture from a sure-fire success."—M. P. News.

HEARTS UP (UNIVERSAL) HARRY CAREY.....JAN. 1
"Harry Carey has satisfying offering here."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"This picture is a good bet. Audiences seemed very much pleased with it and business was fine."

HER FIRST ELOPEMENT (REALART) WANDA HAWLEY.....JAN. 29
"Inconsequential and too vapid for feature length."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A very good picture but opposition was too strong to have any business."

HER LORD AND MASTER (VITAGRAPH) ALICE JOYCE.....APR. 16
"Hardly heavy enough for Alice Joyce."—M. P. News.

HER HUSBAND'S FRIEND (INCE-PARAMOUNT) ENID BENNETT.JAN. 29
"Rather hectic in spots, but keeps the interest."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Played it on the bill with 'The Iron Rider,' the Fox production starring William Russell, to extra big business for two days."

HIS OWN LAW (J. PARKER READ-GOLDWYN) HOBART BOSWORTH.....FEB. 12
"Trite story makes poor screen material."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A fine picture, but did only fair business."

HOLD YOUR HORSES (GOLDWYN) TOM MOORE).....FEB. 5
"Comedy titles and good incident make this fine entertainment.—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Just ordinary picture and did just ordinary business." "Fairly good picture. Business about as usual." "An excellent photoplay which received a right royal welcome from patrons. An example of what screen lovers want. Capacity business." "Great! Played this with a special St. Patrick's Day program and cleaned up. Moore is immense in roles of this sort."

"THE TOMBOY"
(Fox)

Better Small Town Pictures Have Been Seen

EILEEN PERCY continues to appear in somewhat anemic comedy dramas without strength enough to stand up throughout five reels. Such a picture could very easily be given a good bill of health if it had a tonic of rich, invigorating titles and more well-developed comedy incidents. But "The Tomboy" has only a few original and humorous touches, and while its titles are there in quantity, they are not of the highest quality. It would have been better to have fewer titles fresher in humor than to have cheaply-funny ones spliced in where there is no call for them either to explain the action or to develop character.

The most appealing point about "The Tomboy," we believe, is its locale. Any one living or acquainted with village life knows and appreciates the difficulties of the weekly newspaper. They know the character of the editor, trying to maintain his journalistic dignity and at the same time set type, collect subscriptions, gather news and avoid the duns. Then there is the circus coming to town. There is a laugh here when the village boob hires himself to substitute for the "wild man," and when the old circus nag, now descended to farm labor, finds his way inside the big top and gallops about the ring with all the pride of his lost youth.

Eileen Percy is cast as a romping, good natured tomboy. She is appealing, of course, but it appears to be a role better suited to an actress of the Shirley Mason type. Only a few can wear overalls and a slouch hat through a good part of a picture and look and act "cute" enough to win many admirers. Opposite her is Hal Cooley, not called upon for any great things. Paul Kamp as a lackadaisical villager is the type and a very fine actor. Byron Munson is a smooth villain. Wilson Hummel as the village cop is made to go through antics which we believe militate against the serious, or at least sensible, strain of the picture. Ethel Teare deserts Sunshine comedies long enough to play a minor role.

The plot of the picture is all about bootleggers, who are selling some variety of perfumed wood alcohol to the populace, with dire results to the general health and peace of the community. The hero is an honest revenue officer. He and the girl work together to place the guilt upon the proper parties, in the course of which they fall in love. There is a misunderstanding between the two which supplies some suspense. The biggest thing in the line of a thrill is the burning of an old barn. The story could fit in much shorter space, and semi-humorous titles almost without end make poor padding material.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Tomboy," which will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ———— is a clever comedy filled with laughs from beginning to end which will be a welcome relief after an excess of emotional motion picture dramas. This picture stars Eileen Percy, the dainty Irish beauty, who is now being starred in a series of pictures by William Fox.

The story of "The Tomboy" is laid in a small New England town. Miss Percy plays the part of a young tomboy in a village of gossips and scandalmongers. There is plenty of comedy in these villages, with their weekly newspapers which struggle along from week to week in a continual effort to chronicle the doings of the very people who pay for their subscription in terms of vegetables.

The story of "The Tomboy" concerns bootleggers who do untold damage by selling poisonous whiskey to gullible customers. Largely through the efforts of "the tomboy," the guilty parties are brought to justice and driven from town.

Miss Percy is supported by a capable cast in this picture, among whom are Hal Cooley, Richard Cummings, Paul Kamp, Byron Kamp and Ethel Teare.

PROGRAM READER

Eileen Percy, the dainty Irish beauty, is the star of "The Tomboy," which will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. This is a delightful comedy which tells the story of a little girl in a small town who loves baseball, fishing and rough-house just as much as any youngster in the village. An unusual picture of a baseball game is seen in this production, in which Miss Percy catches behind the bat with all the skill of a big league player. There is plenty of romance and drama in this picture as well as comedy. The story concerns the tracking-down of a gang of bootleggers who are doing untold damage in a small town. "The tomboy" plays the detective and proves to be a far better one than the village police force, who, by the way, is singular.

"The Tomboy" will be shown for ———— days at the ———— beginning ————. It is expected to be one of the best liked comedies of the season.

CATCH LINES

Being a carefree, happy-go-lucky tomboy doesn't add to one's reputation in a town of gossips and scandalmongers. See Eileen Percy in her unusual role in "The Tomboy" at the ———— theatre.

"DECEPTION"
(Paramount)

Historical Drama Is Colorful and Impressive

THAT the Germans know how to stage a costume picture is once more impressed upon the minds of American patrons. Ernst Lubitsch, who produced "Passion," based upon the most stirring period of French history, has taken the rich and colorful chapters of English history at the time of Henry VIII, and has presented a drama, undeniably, one of the greatest achievements of the screen. While the production does not carry the thrilling episodes of "Passion" with its French Revolution as a background, nor does it present a Pola Negri, who interpreted the richly dramatic life of Du Barry with such authority, still it offers wonderfully impressive moments of two historical characters, Anne Boleyn and Henry VIII, which are certain to fascinate the spectator. The latter was every inch a king, though he is acknowledged to be the supreme vulgarian of all time. His courtship of Anne, his defiance of Rome, his bestiality at Court, his love of sport and above all his passion for pretty faces—these are caught accurately.

"Deception" is authentically correct. Lubitsch has reproduced the Tudor reign with all the thoroughness and painstaking detail of his race. He enables one to forget time and environment—to become an actual figure of Henry's period. He does this by presenting purely spectacular moments which are dramatically balanced with intimate touches. Thus the spectator has no thought that he might be looking at an exposition of dry history or an uninteresting costume production. What is presented is real, moving, dramatic and colorful. And the episodes are constructed in masterly fashion, all building to most effective climaxes, the final one being placed where it should be, at the concusion, with no sop thrown at the sentimentalist.

The production is eloquent in every scene, particularly so in the reproduction of Westminster Abbey which is faithful down to the last detail. This is a most impressive episode. The coronation with the enthusiastic populace paying homage is more eloquent than any single scene in "Passion." The tournament scene is also a masterpiece. And Lubitsch scores again with his accurate backgrounds. The picture is long, but time passes unnoticed, so deftly are the scenes arranged, so definite is the action. The costuming is magnificent. This feature with the spectacular sets would have cost a vast sum to reproduce here. The finest acting on the screen is coming from Germany. Praises sung in behalf of the players of "Passion" and "Dr. Caligari" can be offered to the splendid cast that interprets "Deception." Emil Jannings as Henry VIII has caught the spirit of the character in an amazingly accurate manner. His shading of the part, his deft touches of humor, his broad conception of the king's bestiality—make it a perfect study in superb pantomime. Henry Porten as Anne is impressive in most of her scenes. Again the extras and lesser figures lend fine assistance. The characters seem to live in every particular. "Deception" is a masterpiece.—Length, 10 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Anne Boleyn, Queen of England.....Henny Porten
King Henry VIII.....Emil Jannings
and
Queen Catherine—Jane Seymour—Duke of Norfolk—Cardinal Woolsey and other historical figures

Directed by Ernst Lubitsch.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A stupendous photoplay, produced on a scale of magnificence seldom, if ever, attempted heretofore, is offered in the Paramount production, "Deception," which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. The story deals with the tragic life of Anne Boleyn, the ill-fated wife of Henry VIII, of England, and throws much light upon the amours and adventures of the Bluff King Hal. It is an intensely human story of love and sacrifice, passion and intrigue, and in addition to its appeal, the picture is a gorgeous spectacle, rich in detail and beautiful in its artistry.

Ernst Lubitsch, who directed the production, was also the director of the other historical spectacle, "Passion." He is unquestionably a master in staging these stupendous dramas. He has erected massive sets which are exact reproductions of the Tudor period and employs thousands of players. Emil Jannings as Henry VIII gives a masterly performance. His conception of the role is in keeping with historical facts. Henny Porten, a European favorite, furnishes a brilliant portrayal as Anne. "Deception" is one of the memorable screen offerings of a decade.

PROGRAM READER

Beginning next ———— we will display at this theatre the stupendous spectacle and drama, "Deception," a Paramount picture, staged with infinite taste by Ernst Lubitsch, the creator of "Passion." We guarantee this marvelous production as a magnificent achievement of the screen. Aside from its historical value, "Deception" is both spectacular and appealing—spectacular in the splendor of its appointments, appealing in the dramatic qualities of its sympathetic story. Henny Porten and Emil Jannings, players of signal endowments enact the leading roles with complete authority. The picture is a visualization of the tragic romance of Anne Boleyn, the wife of Henry VIII. Come and marvel at this stupendous production.

SUGGESTIONS

Play this up far in advance and let your people know the treat they have in store for them. Play it up as the latest achievement of Lubitsch, the creator of "Passion." Make a play for the schools and colleges and women's clubs. Get out the historical data. Stage an effective prologue of singers attired in Tudor costumes and singing hunting songs or dancers executing Morris dances. Make a big spread here. You won't regret it. Decorate your lobby with medieaval paraphernalia. Arrange your musical interpretation from the old classics. But the principal angle of exploitation is the stupendous picture itself. Get out the paper, the facts and figures.

HUNDREDTH CHANCE, THE (STOLL-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST...JAN. 8
"Familiar story is well picturized."—M. P. News.

HUSH (GARSON-EQUITY) CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG.....JAN. 29
"Interesting picture on a familiar theme."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Big picture, box office receipts increasing each day." "Somewhat different to the usual Young pictures, but pleased about fifty-fifty. Consider it her best, but my patrons didn't agree with me. She was not as pretty as usual, but far more interesting." "Very fine picture which should go over well wherever Clara Kimball Young is liked. Bad weather cut down our attendance below average during week's run." "We thought picture up to Clara Kimball Young's standard but played to poor business for week which we attribute to bad weather." "Uninteresting story with Clara Kimball Young as the bright spot. Business only fair." "Just an average picture. About usual business." "Greater business than usual with this delightful picture."

IF ONLY JIM (UNIVERSAL) HARRY CAREY.....MAR. 5
"Carey's latest is amusing and entertaining."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Great business with this one. Capacity houses. great deal of word-of-mouth advertising." "Played this feature on the program with the Paramount production 'Chickens,' featuring Douglas MacLean, to extra big business for two days."

"Conventional melodrama effectively staged."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Almost too strong a dose of morals. Medium business on opening and only fair all week." "A good dramatic picture, full of action, which seemed to please." "Picture went over big and packed them in. Held it for second week." "Fine picture but one that appeals most strongly to the thinking class. Held up comfortably for two weeks." "Did a capacity business. A prereview given for the benefit of ministers caused widespread comment, which added to its power of attraction." "Good story, well done. Pleased the masses. We had a satisfactory two week run." "A good picture with which we had more than usual business." "Plot a little difficult to follow but on the whole picture was above the average and we played to good business during week it showed here." "Two days to big business." "A splendid feature which pleased both reviewers and audiences. Played to excellent business."

KENTUCKIANS, THE (PARAMOUNT) SPECIAL CAST.....FEB. 12
"Very little drama here; backgrounds are interesting."—M. P. News.

KID, THE (FIRST NATIONAL) CHARLIE CHAPLIN.....JAN. 29
"Long heralded Chaplin six-reeler lives up to expectations."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Kept crowds standing out on the sidewalk for a week. Now on second big week." "Wonderful business from morning till night. Great picture." "A great attraction. Going big on second week of showing." "One of Chaplin's best pictures. Drew big crowds throughout the entire two weeks." "It was a storming success for two weeks, drawing 42,000 persons the first week and slightly less than that number the second week. A knockout. Booked for third week." "The record breaker for the season. Held over for a third week by a house that seldom departs from the week run custom." "Went over big on second week. May hold over for another week." "Second week to big business. Wonderful as an attraction." "Broke records first half of week, fell down at end of engagement. Audiences divided in opinion of picture."

KILLER, THE (HAMPTON-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST.....JAN. 29
"Thrilling story given splendid production."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"One of the best Westerns I've ever played. First day's gross surpassed anything for fifteen weeks back. My audiences demand Westerns, and they went after this!"

LOVE, HONOR AND BEHAVE (FIRST NATIONAL) SPECIAL CAST .....MAR. 26
"Excellent slapstick feature with good action and incident."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A splendid drawing card. Played to a packed house all week. The picture is an excellent diversion from the more serious presentations."

LOVE LIGHT, THE (UNITED ARTISTS) MARY PICKFORD.....JAN. 22
"Production overshadows the star who is not any too well cast."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"The star brought the people to see it and they were not disappointed." "Splendid picture and business. Mary Pickford really pleased everyone. Never heard a complaint. Capacity all week." "Very good production and well liked. Business was good." "Fell down badly second week. Didn't seem to satisfy. For total showing went over from average to poor." "Mary Pickford interesting if one would forget the story which utterly failed to measure up to the standard expected. Held for the entire week to our regret." "Drew well for about three days and then fell off considerably. Even Mary's large following in this city did not all turn out to see it. Newspaper reviewers characterized it as 'poor' and it was dubbed as 'rotten' by many of little Mary's adorers." "Picture fairly interesting but disappointed some of the fans. Business only fair." "Moved here from another theatre of this city. A good picture but business was not up to standard. It looks as if the star is going back." "A departure from the usual Pickford picture. Miss Pickford displays that she is fitted for emotional as well as comedy roles. Good film, and excellent box office feature." "An average picture and drew only fair business."

LOVE SPECIAL, THE (PARAMOUNT) WALLACE REID.....APR. 2
"Acceptable entertainment provided by good humor and a quota of thrills."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Did fine business with this picture. My patrons like Wallace Reid and of course turned out strong to see his picture."

"Interesting exposition of eternal triangle."—M. P. News.

LURE OF YOUTH (METRO) SPECIAL CAST.....JAN. 22
"Acting is better than the story."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"This picture not up to average. The plot is weak."

"Spectacular but false in idea and characterization."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A good drawing title but the production did not justify the name. Average picture." "A splendid picture with well sustained suspense and beautiful photography and settings. Will make thousands of new friends for Florence Vidor and please the admirers of House Peters. Did record business for one week and we are holding it over for second week." "A real picture and a splendid entertainment. People went out of their way to comment favorably on it." "Consider this one of the biggest productions of the season. Corking story, unexcelled cast, magnificently mounted, sure to please. Sorry I didn't have double my seating capacity." "Has proved so popular that it has been held over for the fourth week. This is something never before done in this city. Played to over 60,000 in three weeks' run." "Completed a four weeks' run here, in which it drew over 80,000 people. This is one of the greatest records in the history of the city." "Drew a good house for a week, but the picture does not justify its advance advertising. An average picture."

MAD MARRIAGE, THE (UNIVERSAL) CARMEL MYERS.....FEB. 12
"Carmel Myers is appealing in Greenwich Village formula."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Pretty good picture and we had somewhat more business than usual."

MAMMA'S AFFAIR (FORST NATIONAL) CONSTANCE TALMADGE .....FEB. 5
"Constance Talmadge has serious moments here; picture fairly interesting."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Delighted our people. Box office kept busy." "Played to a capacity house the entire week, but it would not be fair to give the credit to the picture alone, as it was run in conjunction with a week's musical festival, featuring works of local composers."

MAN WHO HAD EVERYTHING, THE (GOLDWYN) JACK PICKFORD .....JAN. 22
"Story and generally good production will get it by."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Terrible. Business was fairly good but that was because the picture played the last part of the week and not because of interest in picture. Pickford unpopular in this territory." "A delightful picture, with Jack Pickford in a role for which he is well adapted."

MAN-WOMAN-MARRIAGE (HOLUBAR-FIRST NATIONAL) DOROTHY PHILLIPS.....FEB. 12
"Propaganda and spectacular melodrama are blended here."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Drew very well despite the fact that it was the week before Easter." "A regular woman's picture—result, big houses and box office returns that tripled as the engagement continued. Held over for second week." "Held over for second week to better than average business."

MAGNIFICENT BRUTE, THE (UNIVERSAL) FRANK MAYO.....MAR. 26
"A good Western with plenty of action."—M. P. News.

NINETEEN AND PHYLLIS (KANE-FIRST NATIONAL) CHARLES RAY .....JAN. 8
"Ray scores again with pleasing study of small town life."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Good entertainment. Ray at his best. Average business throughout week." "Only a fair Charles Ray picture and not up to his best. Did average business during its run here." "Business dropped off a little during the week from that usually given Ray productions." "Had good business with this picture. Ray is well liked and a general favorite." "Packed house every night. Pleasing picture." "Very poor for all week. Fair picture." "Wonderful picture, but it brought only fair patronage." "Great picture, and it brought great business."

"MOTHER ETERNAL"
(Ivan Abramson-State Rights)

Effective Drama Offered in Appealing Story of Mother Love

A FIRST rate audience picture is "Mother Eternal," Ivan Abramson's latest contribution to the screen. It carries all the attributes of success because of its dominant notes of pathos and heart interest. The author-director has overcome his habit of trying to teach a moral, being satisfied here to give his audience entertainment in the shape of an interesting plot developed around a deal of complicated incident, and appealing characterization. While the picture does not reach any great dramatic moments, nonetheless it is effective because the author has built his theme in a consistent manner and his action moves vigorously. There seems to be a place for each figure with none of them overdrawn, although coincidence creeps out here and there which violates logic. One of the characters, a doctor, seems to have a too dominant place to be always realistic. It is as if no other member of his profession practised in the metropolis.

The story starts in 1895 showing as its first sequence a conflict between capital and labor. A strikebreaker is killed which puts such a burden upon his wife that she unwillingly consents to have her newborn babe given to the capitalist's wife, though the latter is ignorant of her own infant's death. There is a deal of intimate by-play throughout the introductory scenes, most of which scores because it is identical with life. The action never drags, indeed there is too much complication of plot for such a development. The pathetic figure of the widow and mother may appear unduly sentimental to some, but she appears to us as thoroughly in the picture. The concluding sequences are of the present day. The mother has grown old, has become a burden to her child. The latter has married a waster and both find no use for the old lady's presence. In a moment of despair she attempts to drown herself but is rescued by her own son of whom she is ignorant.

This is one of the very few convenient episodes in the picture. The youth has fallen in love with one of his father's employees and his scenes call for a deal of counterplotting in the drama. He takes the old woman to his home and the doctor, who is really the god of the machine, confesses his part in the plot. The boy accuses his father and thinks himself illegitimate, but the clouds are swept aside by a display of charity by those who had never possessed compassionate feeling. The picture is interpreted by a competent cast with Vivian Martin contributing her finest screen portrayal as the mother. Except for a bad make-up in the concluding reels her impersonation is above reproach. The settings are appropriate, likewise the atmosphere.—Length, 9 reels.—Laurence Reid.

By Ivan Abramson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Mother Eternal" is the title of the picture which comes to the ———— theatre next week with a cast of well known players—a cast that includes Vivian Martin, who returns to the screen after a long absence; Thurston Hall, Earl Metcalfe, Jack Sherrill, Vivian Osborne, J. W. Johnston and Pearl Shepard. Most of these players have been stars or have acted leading parts on the screen and they give the vital, human story of mother love, an appealing performance which goes a long way in making it appreciated.

It is a picture written and directed by Ivan Abramson, who has given the screen several notable productions. In this offering he furnishes the spectator with a theme of mother-love and self-sacrifice. It is a story of conflicts and contrasts and pulsates with effective drama which carries such ingredients as pathos, sentiment, and heart-interest. The story covers a period of 25 years and shows the twists of fate as concerning a family in search of happiness. The throbbing note of mother-love is dominant.

PROGRAM READER

When her husband died she found it a difficult task to provide for herself and little girl. She became so poverty-stricken that when a baby was born she consented unwillingly to permit its adoption by wealthy parents. Years passed and the daughter scoffed at her mother. The baby grew up to a fine specimen of young manhood, but the relationship of the boy and mother was never realized until————. This is the outline of Ivan Abramson's throbbing picture of human sobs and smiles, "Mother Eternal," which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with a cast that includes Vivian Martin and a fine cast.

SUGGESTIONS

The state right exhibitors in booking Ivan Abramson's picture, "Mother Eternal," are assured of a good money-maker. The author-director knows human nature. He always draws his stories from life. And in "Mother Eternal" he contributes a picture which throbs with human touches. It is a fine study in mother love. And should be exploited along that angle. Play up its fine pathos, its romance, its dramatic sweep. Also play up the cast. Most every member has been a star in his or her own right. Play up Vivian Martin, Jack Sherrill, Thurston Hall and Earl Metcalfe. Bill it as an interesting picture of sunshine and shadows. Play up the mother angle. Stage a prologue in harmony with the theme. An old fashioned setting with a family group singing the old songs would be effective.

"BELOW THE DEADLINE"
(Ascher Productions—State Rights)

A Well Made Melodrama, Full of Action

THERE is need for pictures of this type on the independent market. Well-made technically, with acting of a high class throughout, it makes a crook melodrama which will grip and entertain any audience fond of action pictures. What we like especially about "Below the Deadline" is its opening. The keynote—action, is struck at the very beginning, for the first shot is that of a street battle between the police and a gang of harbor crooks. This takes place in a downpour of rain and is an effective scene.

The characters are introduced with little or no break in the action. The story concerns the activities of a "gang" along the river front. The hero is "Donovan from Headquarters," and the girl is the wife of the gang leader, who has been deceived into marrying him. The "heavy" of course, is the husband. With these three central characters the story develops in a way that keeps the interest to the very end.

Director John P. McGowan, experienced in the art of thrill-producing, rounds it out with a race between a freight and an auto, with a hand to hand battle thrown in for good measure. The few improbabilities in the story can be easily forgiven, and ascribed to a particularly astute and clever police force. No more is expected in a crook play of this type. There is little of the familiar third degree scenes and the action is largely mass-action.

While the cast contains the name of no star all are capable of giving satisfaction. Lillian Biron is especially appealing as the heroine. Very beautiful to look upon, she helps a great deal to relieve the straight melodramatic action with pathos and love interest. Robert Anderson supplies the comedy relief. The male lead is played by J. B. Warner, who, while not the accepted type of man-hounding detective, adds to the general effect by his characterization. Bert Sprotte is well cast as the villain.

The picture should be well received in the theatre whose patrons love their thrills in preference to strong stories, or artistic productions.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

THE CAST

Joe Donovan ..... J. B. Warner
Allice Elliot ..... Lillian Biron
Buck Elliot ..... Bert Sprotte
"Hot Dog Heine" ..... Robert Anderson

Directed by J. P. McGowan.
From the story by Henry Arthur Gooden.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The management of the ———— theatre announces "Below the Deadline" as the feature attraction for ———— days beginning ————. This is said to be one of the most thrilling melodramas of the year. In it are featured J. B. Warner and Lillian Biron, both of whom are experienced screen people, and of whom great things are expected as motion picture stars.

"Below the Deadline" is a fast moving story of the underworld, showing the harbor crooks' work in their effort to steal along the waterfront. The heroine of the picture is married to the leader of the gang, whose true character she never suspected. Donovan, the detective, is her former sweetheart, and with these three characters as principals there develops in addition to the rapid and gripping action, an unusual amount of heart interest and romance.

Detective Donovan is played by J. B. Warner, who is a brother of the noted star, H. B. Warner, and whose similarity to him will be noted at once. Lillian Biron, playing the heroine, received her training in some of the leading stock companies in America and has played with Mack Sennett, and more recently as a featured player in Vitagraph productions. Bert Sprotte, playing the gang leader, has appeared with William S. Hart, Frank Keenan and Frank Mayo. His work in the Rex Beach picture, "The Girl from Outside," will long be remembered. Robert Anderson, another member of the cast, will be remembered from his work as Monsieur Cockoo in Griffith's masterpiece, "Hearts of the World."

"Below the Deadline" will remain at the ———— theatre for ———— days. Having some of the fastest action and at the same time one of the most logical plots seen on the screen recently, it is expected to be one of the season's successes.

PROGRAM READER

Manager ———— of the ———— theatre announces an unusual attraction for ———— at his theatre. It is entitled "Below the Deadline" and is a thrilling and fast-moving melodrama of the underworld, which is a sure-fire evening's entertainment. It tells the story of a gang of crooks who work along the waterfront of a big city, and their eventual undoing by Detective Donovan from headquarters.

In its cast are included J. B. Warner, Lillian Biron, Robert Anderson and Bert Sprotte. All of these players are experienced and accomplished screen actors, and Director John P. McGowan has been successful in his effort to assemble a truly all-star cast.

"Below the Deadline" is a picture for all the family to see. It is a production which they will all enjoy and which is fit entertainment for young and old. It will remain at the ———— theatre for ———— days beginning ————. You wil like it just as much as you did the detective stories of your youth. It is just as exciting, just as full of mystery and romance, and a whole lot more logical in its story.

SUGGESTIONS

You have here a good thrilling melodrama to exploit. It is one pepped up with action from beginning to end. There should be no fear of the cry of "censor" here, for crime is not glorified. None of the cast have risen to such heights as to be generally familiar. The more ardent fans will remember Anderson and Bert Sprotte, and possibly Lillian Biron. The press book issued by Ascher productions describes a prologue which fits perfectly into the opening action of the picture. There are also outlines for a teaser campaign which we think could be made good use of.

CATCH LINES

All the charm and interest of the detective stories you loved in your youth coupled with all that is high class in the motion picture art. Such is "Below the Deadline." Do not miss it.

PICTURE BRAND STAR RELEASED PLAN BOOK

"Entertaining in spots, but needs editing."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Exceptional business for week during Lent. Picture not up to Fairbanks' standard." "Fairbanks has slipped in this picture. It is much poorer than the 'Mark of Zoro,' and while many patrons came to see him the first few days, the rest of the week's business was poor." "Went over big. Some adverse criticism to the effect that it was not up to star's standard." "Fine picture which brought good business." "Brought big business. Pleased my patrons and was a drawing-card." "Find this an average picture with the usual business." "This picture went over big. It has very good entertaining values." "Fine business with this picture. My patrons like Doug and of course turned out strong to see his picture." "The picture is not up to Douglas Fairbanks' standard, but has an appealing title and offers a good field for exploitation. A good house the entire week." "Running this a second week to big business."

OATH, THE (MAYFLOWER-FIRST NATIONAL) SPECIAL CAST..APR. 23
"Rather disappointing in spite of faultless production."—M. P. News.

OFF-SHORE PIRATE, THE (METRO) VIOLA DANA.....MAR. 12
"Not enough substance for picture entertainment."—M. P. News.

ONE MAN TRAIL, THE (FOX) BUCK JONES.....APR. 9
"A well made, entertaining Buck Jones feature."—M. P. News.

OLD SWIMMIN' HOLE, THE (RAY-FIRST NATIONAL) CHARLES RAY .....MAR. 5
"Artistic presentation of Riley poem; great entertainment."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A very good Charles Ray picture, but failed to please majority. Played to exceptionally poor business for seven days." "Fine picture which drew good business." "An unusually delightful bit of screen entertainment which the entire city flocked to see. Censorship would not be worrying the industry if there were more films like this." "An excellent picture from every angle and business was splendid. Went over big."

O'MALLEY OF THE MOUNTED (HART-PARAMOUNT) WILLIAM S. HART.....FEB. 19
"Good incident and Bill Hart touches make it interesting." M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"One of the best Bill Hart has done and pleased the Hart fans." "Satisfactory box office returns, but not up to usual Hart receipts." "A good picture, but a weak drawing card. Only a fair house for the week. "Business was good with this one. A good picture that pleased the usual Hart crowds."

ONE MAN IN A MILLION (BEBAN-LESSER-ROBERTSON-COLE) GEORGE BEBAN.....JAN. 29
"Character study is satisfying offering."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Plenty of atmosphere. Plenty of action. Big business, as much because of personal appearance of George Beban. But they liked the picture enough to go away and speak well of it." "Beban made personal appearances during the run here of the week. Absolutely capacity daily. Picture highly enjoyed." "Clean, high-grade picture which appealed strongly to patrons. Did excellent business for week."

"Story of dual personality offers interesting moments."—M. P. News.

OUT OF THE CHORUS (REALART) ALICE BRADY.....APR. 2
"Well below the average in entertainment values."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Drew a pleasing attendance with average results." "Used in conjunction with 'You Can Never Tell.' Average business, but it increased at end of week."

"Best straight melodrama in many a day."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"The best crook picture that has been shown in the city for many months. Big houses all week." "Record houses on this picture. Very entertaining." "Is thrilling crook melodrama which made big hit with our audiences. It has a lot of good exploitation points which we availed ourselves of, and as a result broke all house records during this week's run. Holding it over for a second week." "Sure did go over big. Packed them in at all performances." "Created a record for a two weeks' run heretofore untouched in this section. A picture you can go the limit on in exploitation—and the picture will bear you out in the good things you say about it." "A splendid picture with thrilling plot, which confirmed Priscilla Dean as a favorite with our patrons. Did splendid business for week." "Tremendous business all week. Will hold over for another week." "Went over big. Audiences seemed well pleased with the entertainment." "Standing up well on second week. Very good production."

Exhibitor Comment—"Paramount seems to have fallen down here this season in its big releases. This picture did only an average gross." "The story was carried in serial form by one of the daily papers and this brought crowds to see the picture. They were not disappointed." "Very poor entertainment. Story was not clear and cast was only fair in the opinions of my people. Can't hand this one much. After Vignola's 'The World and His Wife,' this was a great disappointment." "Went over big for week. Is exceptionally good feature." "This picture was only mediocre and it brought forth only fair box office receipts." "Fair picture. Fair business. Fair performance throughout." "Found this picture highly entertaining and we had very big business during its run."

"Well produced domestic drama that will please."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Ran well for the entire week. Big houses set the stamp of their approval on this picture." "Held over for second week because of tremendous business. Generally pleased." "Business held up very well for second week. Pleased our patrons." "A good picture that played to good business." "A slender story produced to bring Dorothy Dickson into pictures. Not a strong box office attraction." "Found this to be a fair picture. Business about average." "A great attraction. This one brought large box office receipts." "Second week to fair business." "Good picture played to better than average business for week." "Lavish but not satisfying. Drew well but did not build. "Very good. Two days to extra big and big business." "Exceptionally well liked by everybody. One of the best opening Sundays in weeks. Kept up satisfactorily."

"THE SKY PILOT"
(Cathrine Curtis-First National)

Fine Western Has Collection of Thrilling Punches

HERE is a Western calculated to make any one pay strict attention because of its rich assortment of thrills, its splendid atmosphere, and its melodramatic incident. King Vidor, who can always be relied upon to furnish good entertainment with his productions, has turned out a picture which is about the liveliest, full-grown melodrama of the cow-lands and the cow-hands that has been offered in some time. The director, who has shown his talent with simple, quiet stories, flashes an ability here which is considerably better than most of his contemporaries, who have done nothing else but deal out Westerns. He actually shows a round-up and a stampede of steers which is about the most blood-curdling thrill imaginable. Strange that such a stunt has not been used before.

Those who have read Ralph Connor's novel, "The Sky Pilot," will recognize the characters and the atmosphere, but not the ending, which is the author's. The tragic death of the Pilot has been eliminated and a happy ending is substituted. This development may jar upon those who are sticklers for the truth, and Vidor is such a stickler himself that it seems strange to find him catering to sentiment. The majority of picturegoers will not care much about the faithfulness of the picture. They will be too busy following the rapid action which carries a punch like a load of dynamite. The offering is quite episodic, but this is to be expected from the plot and characterization. One thing Vidor has caught, and that is the spirit of the country. He balances his dramatic incident with humorous touches.

As a Western it is above—way above—the ordinary. The reason may be found in the lively sequences, the rich backgrounds, the homespun types and incident which is as vital and vigorous as the people of the cow country. There is a fight when the Pilot subdues the leader of the boys which packs a wallop of a thrill. This realism is conspicuous throughout the action and builds tense interest. The fall of the horse and rider from a bridge over a deep canyon is not so good. It smacks of dummy figures. But there is no fake about the scene which shows the Pilot standing astride the prostrate body of the heroine with the stampeding cattle before him. The later reels represent some good new shots and a number of thrills are injected which keep the story moving. There is a faint note of melodrama in the picture, but it relies chiefly upon its heart interest, remarkable realism and lively incident. The offering is well acted by David Butler, John Bowers and Colleen Moore.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

The Sky Pilot.....John Bowers
Gwen.....Colleen Moore
Bill Hendricks.....David Butler
The Old Timer.....Harry Todd
Honorable Ashley.....James Corrigan
The Duke.....Donald MacDonald
Lady Charlotte.....Kathleen Kirkham

By Ralph Connor.
Directed by King Vidor.

A stirring picture of the cattle country is "The Sky Pilot," adapted from Ralph Connor's story of the same name. Directed by King Vidor, the picture is certain of carrying a fine flavor of dramatic interest as well as the balancing notes of pathos and sentiment. But the outstanding features of the production are the lively episodes which furnish one startling thrill after another. The picture will come to the ———— theatre next ———— with a cast that includes John Bowers, Colleen Moore, David Butler and Harry Todd. All give splendid performances. All are thoroughly in character.

The picture revolves around the Pilot's efforts to bring religion to the cow town and features his adventures, his failure and eventual success. He opens a church in the saloon and is taunted into a fight. When he conquers the boys escort him out of town. But the defeated hero is magnaminous enough to seek him out and bring him back, where he becomes the best friend the boys ever knew. He saves their lives and their souls. The picture is remarkable for its tense realism. It is beautifully staged in the big outdoors and is capably acted.

PROGRAM READER

Next ———— at this theatre there will be shown one of the finest Western pictures ever made. It is an adaptation of Ralph Connor's stirring story, "The Sky Pilot," directed with excellent taste by King Vidor, acknowledged to be one of the exceptional directors of the screen. The picture is notable for its remarkable array of thrills which follow one another in rapid succession. Come and see the stampede of cattle, the fall from the bridge over the canyon, the burning of the church, the pitched battle of primitive and cultured men. "The Sky Pilot" is a picture of the great outdoors and affers an expanse of beautiful backgrounds. It carries a fine love interest and is well acted by David Butler, John Bowers and Colleen Moore.

SUGGESTIONS

In exploiting this picture it would be well to play up the rapid succession of thrills. They come thick and fast here, and should be played up to attract attention. The stampeding cattle, the fire scenes, the snow scenes, the leap from the high bridge over the yawning canyon—all of these should be well exploited. Play up the author since many have doubtless read the original. Tell that it is doubly fascinating as a picture. Play up the director, telling that he staged "The Jack-Knife Man" and other fine pictures. Play up the cast. They are all well known. A prologue with a quartette of cowboys singing in front of a back-drop representing the open country would be effective. One of the members might be garbed as a minister.

CATCH LINES

"DESPERATE YOUTH"
(Universal)

Goes Back to the Early Days of Pictures, But Is Entertaining

THIS is a drama of the old South, the South of Augustus Thomas' "Alabama," the kind that made Kalem famous in the G. F. days, frock coats, flowing ties, ruffled frocks for the ladies, curls and furbelows. There isn't much to the story if the various sequences can be called a story, but there is a lot of atmosphere, good types for the several principal roles, nice "Befo' the war" settings and exteriors and some interesting incident of a "hokum" nature and in consequence "Desperate Youth" ought to prove a welcome change as entertainment even if it does go back to the early days of the industry for both plot and the trimmings.

Gladys Walton is the star, but in all fairness to the supporting cast it ought to be said that it is the character sketches portrayed that make the offering entertaining. In this connection, Lucy Harris as "Aunt Chlorindy" is especially deserving of praise. Others who play character roles in faultless style are, J. Farrell McDonald as "Mendocino Bill," Jim Blackwell as "Sam" and Louis Willoughby in a dual role. Also a half dozen real "pickaninnies," all steps and stairs, perform like veterans.

The story of "Desperate Youth," rather a misnomer as a title, concerns the wooing of "Rosmary Merridow," after she returns from the West to her ancestral home in Alabama. Complications to the course of true love are furnished by a step-aunt and cousin who have matrimonial designs on the hero. "Aunt Chlorinda" frustrates this plan by appointing herself matchmaker for "Rosmary" and "Tom," which suggests that a much better title than the one selected might have been evolved from this part of the tale, if the original title of F. Hopkinson Smith's story "A Kentucky Cinderella," from which the picture was adapted was considered passe. —Length, 4506 feet.—J. S. Dickerson.

THE CAST

Rosemary Merridew.....Gladys Walton
"Mendocino Bill".....J. Farrell McDonald
"Alabam" Spencer Merridew / Henry Merridew.....Louis Willoughby
Mrs. Merridew.....Muriel Godfrey Turner
Pauline Merridew.....Hazel Howell
Dr. Tom Dowling.....Harold Miller
Aunt Chlorindy.....Lucy Harris
Sam.....Jim Blackwell

From story by F. Hopkinson Smith.
Adapted by George V. Hull and A. P. Younger.
Directed by Harry B. Davis.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Gladys Walton, Universal's new ingenue star is scheduled to appear in her latest picture, "Desperate Youth," an adaptation of F. Hopkinson Smith's character study of the "old South," "A Kentucky Cinderella," at the ———— theatre for a ———— day engagement beginning ————.

Miss Walton is cast as a little California mountain girl who came back to the old Alabama home, from which her father had migrated in search of gold, there to rule as the wife of one of the South's most favored young gentlemen. It is a story of romance filmed in scenes of wondrous beauty and splendidly enacted by an all star cast. The picture is like a page from one of Mark Twain's famous novels, a character study as unique and pretty as Augustus Thomas's famous play "Alabama" and as faultless in its detail as "The Birth of a Nation."

The picture is a welcome change from sex themes and violent melodramas, good clean entertainment that will please young and old alike.

PROGRAM READER

The ———— theatre will present "Desperate Youth," a story of the old South with Gladys Walton in the leading role, for a ———— day engagement beginning ————.

"Desperate Youth" is an adaptation of F. Hopkinson Smith's famous story, "A Kentucky Cinderella," a tale of a little orphan girl whose dad had died out in the California hills while hunting for gold, who went back to the home of her ancestors in Alabama there to be wooed and won by the handsome young village doctor.

It is a story of "frock coats, ruffled gowns and furbelows" with characters that seem to have stepped from the pages of history, or one of Mark Twain's novels enacted in perfect settings both exteriors and interiors.

Miss Walton has a splendid acting role and further establishes herself as a star of the first water. In support of Miss Walton is a strong cast of Universal players that includes Lucy Harris, J. Farrell McDonald and Harold Miller.

The picture is in five reels. The production was directed by Harry B. Harris.

SUGGESTIONS

The Southern atmosphere, with its truly pretty settings is the thing to play up in this picture. Also a musical program built around the old Southern melodies can be made into an exploitation asset. Stage settings showing an Alabamian scene with colored singers is suggested. We would bill this as a character sketch referring to the original story and making comparisons with Thomas's "Alabama" and some of Mark Twain's books. You can also promise some good acting. The plot of the picture is so slim that little attention should be paid to it in advertising.

CATCH LINES

A story of a Western Cinderella who went back to old Alabama there to be wooed and won by the handsomest and best young Southern aristocrat in the state.

"Aunt Chlorinda's" fame as a cook was great but no one knew that she was a skillful match maker too, until "Rosemary," for whom she had been "mammy" in the good old days, came back to Alabam'.

An old desert rat and "Aunt Chlorinda," black as the ace of spades and fat as a porcupine, turned matchmaker for "Rosemary" of old Alabam' and they did a good job.

"BLACK ROSES"
(Robertson-Cole)

Hayakawa Has Entertaining Mystery Picture Here

IF scenario writers would overcome the habit in their crook stories of railroading their heroes to prison on flimsy evidence many of their stories would carry convincing drama. The author of "Black Roses" has covered his tracks pretty well except for his lapse in convicting his protagonist. Sessue Hayakawa, playing a Japanese gardner, has time to notice the crooks before he is blackjacked. And it seems as if he might tell what he has seen on the witness stand. Also the fact that the crooks for the sake of logic might be kept under suspicion by the authorities since their victim is murdered for fear he might turn state's evidence. Certainly the police would possess some inkling of the crime or its motive. But despite these gaps, the author has concocted a lively tale which is enlivened with creditable action and suspense and which holds the interest because of complicated incident, a few thrills, and the admirable acting of the star. The hero, once in jail, is advised to seek his freedom by his pal, and this is effected in a startling manner when he boards a locomotive and drives it at breakneck speed straight through the wooden gates. Here comes another gap which needs explanation. The hero bobs up in New York, his presence being press-agented by scare-heads in a morning daily as an Oriental nobleman. How he reached the metropolis or his adventures after leaving prison are never depicted. One must accept him in his new disguise. His object thenceforth is to bring the crooks to justice and recover his long lost bride, who has been spirited away by the thugs. It is rather inconsistent to see an ignorant gardener masquerading as a polished and highly intelligent diplomat.

However, this flaw has nothing to do with the quick succession of incidents which are thoroughly interesting because of the suspensive key in which they are pitched. The picture develops into the formula of "cheating cheaters or robbing robbers." The hero, being an Oriental, is able through a series of disguises and a familiarity with the language and the identity of the crooks to capture them and rescue his bride. Which he does in a most original fashion. Underground life, the badger game, a battle of wits with the culprits and police—these furnish the offering with crisp action. Sessue Hayakawa, by virtue of taking advantage of Oriental characteristics, is able to enact the part with creditable authority. He baffles the crooks and detectives until such time as he declares his identity. The title is worked into the melodrama in an ingenious manner.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

Scenario by E. Richard Scheyer and Jack Cunningham.
Directed by Colin Campbell.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

One of the finest of the so-called crook plays ever shown in this city will be displayed at the ———— theatre next ————. It is "Black Roses" and presents the talented Japanese star, Sessue Hayakawa, in a role which permits him to show his histrionic capabilities. The story has to do with a gardener who becomes the victim of a frame-up and is convicted on circumstantial evidence as the murderer of his employer. He makes a thrilling escape from prison to discover the whereabouts of his bride who has been spirited away by the crooks. And he eventually bobs up in the metropolis assuming the identity of a famous Japanese nobleman.

He becomes an amateur detective and with Oriental cunning and intrigue is able to effect the rescue of his bride and bring the guilty culprits to justice. The evidence which convicts them is established by a bowl of black roses beneath which is secreted a dictagraph. The situations are dramatic, the heart interest intense and the picture as a whole is far above the average. Mr. Hayakawa is splendid in the leading role and his support is thoroughly adequate. Among the cast is Mrs. Hayakawa, commonly known as Tsuru Aoki.

PROGRAM READER

Did you ever hear of or see a black rose? Probably not. But Sessue Hayakawa, who plays the part of an expert horticulturist in his latest picture, experimented with botany enough to be able to produce one. This unique flower forms the pivot of a most interesting drama of crime and detection, love and intrigue, which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. "Black Roses" may be said to furnish the eminent Japanese star with the most dramatic role of his career. It is a picture crammed with startling situations, moments of tense thrills, and a romance which is charged with heart interest. "Black Roses" is a novel crook story which offers lively action and keen suspense. Don't miss it.

SUGGESTIONS

Of course it is impossible to get hold of any black roses. But if you decorate your lobby with ordinary roses and saturate the lobby and interior with some exotic Oriental perfume, and see that your ushers are garbed a la Japanese this will help considerably in supplying atmosphere. You can bill it as a most entertaining crook story, this "Black Roses." Tell that Hayakawa has a role which permits him to display his versatile talent. Play up the lively action and keen suspense. A quaint setting of a Japanese design with a couple of figures singing some crooning love song can be used for a prologue. Tell that Tsuru Aoki is in the cast. Emphasize the picture as carrying an abundance of thrills.

CATCH LINES

He was convicted on circumstantial evidence and separated from his bride. His love for her was so strong that even prison walls couldn't hold him. See the daring escape in "Black Roses," starring Sessue Hayakawa.

Mechanical Plot and Stilted Characters in This One

THIS picture starring Alice Lake appears mechanical in every department. The author has gotten off to an awfully slow start, arranging a puerile plot from the simplest triangle situation imaginable and incorporating figures which seem to jump around like puppets at his convenience. A heroine is drawn at conflict with herself whether to leave her vicious husband or give him another chance to show some manliness. For three reels she is shown asking advice from her father or indulging in arguments with her spouse—a spouse who is illogical because he is never permitted to show one human trait. The action here is exceedingly slow and the sudden transition of scene comes so abruptly that one cannot help imagining that melodrama was resorted to for the sake of adding a punch.

Before the triumvirate of characters are whisked up to the frozen North, a crude sequence is offered which shows the wife telephoning the other man to come and rescue her from her husband's insulting conduct. The latter has lugged three adventuresses home to taunt his wife, but before one can appreciate his punishment the incident is closed without any explanation. The picture suffers a deal from unfinished scenes and such development spoils the continuity and makes the plot seem futile. In order to give the husband another chance a proposition is offered him to trace a vessel of gold lost in Behring Straits. He must beat his rival who is also in quest of the golden fleece. A point about this other man. He is painted as a paragon of virtue in order to gain sympathy.

The next scene discloses the ill-tempered husband at the bridge of his ship, scanning the horizon like an experienced navigator. When he balks and throws the anchor overboard the rival comes alongside in a rowboat and rescues the bride, taking her on his boat. And so they sail the frozen channels of the North, the hero acting as pilot and skipper. In the fo'castle is a crew of cutthroats who go down to Davy Jones' locker when the ship strikes an iceberg. The vessel of gold is never found. It is forgotten in the effort of the characters to keep alive. The director has staged the picture amid fields of snowy ice, some of which is real, most of which has "studio" stamped on it. The northern lights is not a very good illusion. And the director will have to explain how he allowed Rudolph Valentine to appear clean-shaven for weeks when he is presented on the verge of starvation. When a beard is finally shown it is immediately eliminated with the hero at the point of death. The details are not convincing. A faint note of heart interest is reflected occasionally, but the story is so palpably a vehicle that it never appears real or human.—Length, 6 reels. —Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Lucretia Eastman ..... Alice Lake
Tom Eastman ..... Carl Gerard
Frank Underwood ..... Rudolph Valentine
Robert Alden ..... Fred Turner
Old Jim Eastman ..... Charles Mailes
Ruby Lawton ..... Rhea Haines

By John Fleming Wilson.
Scenario by George Elwood Jenks.
Directed by Wesley Ruggles.
Photographed by John B. Seitz.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Uncharted Seas," a Metro special starring Alice Lake, will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ————. This is an adaptation of John Fleming Wilson's short story and presents the combination of a gripping tale from one of our best fiction writers and the exceptional acting of Miss Lake. The story deals with Lucretia Eastman, whose husband is a moral derelict, addicted to opium and loose women. Lucretia's cup of disgust brims over at last, but Tom's father entreats her to give him one last chance.

The test is the finding of a deserted steamship, loaded heavily with gold. Tom is given a seaworthy craft, and a rotting vessel is foisted on Frank Underwood, who loves Lucretia and is loved by her. The cowardice of the one, and the courage of the other, as they go on a stirring cruise, leads to the heart-clutching climax. For her supporting cast the star has such capable players as Carl Gerard, Rudolph Valentine, who gives such a memorable performance in "The Four Horsemen," Fred Turner, Charles Mailes and Rhea Haines. The offering is said to be packed with thrills which succeed each other in a crescendo of interest.

PROGRAM READER

What is calculated to be an unforgettable picture is offered in "Uncharted Seas," Metro's latest offering starring Alice Lake. It is said to be startling and beautiful, packed with a continuous succession of thrills, carries the stark appeal of the frozen North, and is unquestionably a gripping drama. The story by John Fleming Wilson originally appeared in a popular magazine and tells of three characters who are sent to Behring Straits to find an abandoned vessel holding gold. In the supporting cast is Rudolph Valentine, who has achieved widespread fame through his memorable performance in "The Four Horsemen," Carl Gerard, Fred Turner and others. The acting of Miss Lake is a thing of joy. Her portrayal will surprise you. At the ———— theatre next ————. See "Uncharted Seas."

SUGGESTIONS

You can employ an artist who will prepare a map supposedly representing the Uncharted Seas. This should be in the familiar style showing the arcs of latitude and longitude with a sprinkling of little islands so placed as to work in with your scheme of making the chart. The map should be labeled "The Mystery of the Uncharted Seas." Use a cut of the map in your newspaper advertising. Bill the picture as a gripping drama enacted against realistic backgrounds in the frozen North. Tell that it offers a triangle play with courage and cowardice dominant. A teaser campaign would also be effective, built around compelling catch lines. Play up the star and by all means make good copy of Rudolph Valentine. He is one of the big hits of "The Four Horsemen."

"SACRED AND PROFANE LOVE"

(Paramount)

Elsie Ferguson's Latest Is Fairly Entertaining

ELSIE FERGUSON has in "Sacred and Profane Love," an adaptation of her stage play which was adapted in turn from Arnold Bennett's novel, "The Book of Carletta." Not being familiar with either the book or the play we cannot say whether the screen version is faithful or not. But it never seems to get beneath the surface. Somehow the plot and characterization appear artificial, which is probably due to the inability of the sponsors to catch the psychology of the theme. If one criticizes the title one will be forced to criticize the play too, for it does not carry two versions of love, but does show the length at which a heroine will go to regenerate a man through the call of romance.

It is a picture which has for its theme a woman's deep, abiding faith. A passionate, highly strung girl indulges in such hero-worship for a gifted, sentimental pianist that her romantic fancy conjures up for her an overwhelming love. When he goes out of her life and becomes an absinthe fiend, it is her duty to redeem him to society and reawaken the love spark. This play of romance is complicated by a triangle situation which never rings true. The heroine's publisher forsakes his wife and follows the girl to the continent declaring his love in a most crude fashion on every possible occasion. When he learns that his wife is dead he dispatches a bullet through his brain and topples over and out of the picture. The scenes are mostly transitional and the action jumps around at the convenience of the scenarist and title writer. In fact what would be real dramatic situations are glossed over, with the result that no deep note is sounded. The heroine is charmed over the pianist's interpretations and her love is depicted as profane when she gives herself up to him. Such a love is never painted in this fashion by the majority of screen writers.

We are shown Conrad Nagel as the hero in question playing before an enthusiastic audience. When he catches the adoration of the heroine's expression he orders the piano shifted so he may see her from a more advantageous position. But the stage hands come out in their shirt sleeves. The best sequence in the picture is the awakening of love in his apartment when they play a duet together. The subsequent episodes detailing the triangle note strike an artificial discord, principally because of the heavy and wooden performance of Thomas Holding. Some may criticize the elaborate furnishings and costumes of the heroine as inconsistent with the characterization. It is a picture which seldom moves with vital action. It is often wordy and dull. Mr. Taylor has contributed some good individual scenes, but these seldom score because their is no motive behind them. Miss Ferguson has very few moments to display any emotional talent.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A screen adaptation of Arnold Bennett's play, "Sacred and Profane Love," has been made by Paramount and will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ————. Elsie Ferguson, the star of the photoplay, was also the star of the spoken drama, and because of her familiarity with the subject, is able to duplicate her brilliant performance. The picture is called a dramatic masterpiece in that it offers characterization of the highest order, a plot which features the balancing notes of pathos and humor and a powerful romance. It is said that Miss Ferguson's "Carlotta" of the screen is even greater than the same character of the speaking stage. For the play version could show only scattered snapshots of the strange impulsive girl whose reactions to the love of two different men form one of the most impressive studios in literature.

The story revolves around a prudishly reared girl who has an affair with a celebrated pianist and who after many harrowing experiences, finds her pianist an absinthe fiend, and after curing him reaches the pinnacle of happiness. Conrad Nagel as the pianist gives a fine portrait and the supporting cast is excellent. William D. Taylor has staged the production in a manner worthy of the subject.

PROGRAM READER

We beg to remind you that Elsie Ferguson will appear at the ———— theatre next ———— in her latest picture entitled, "Sacred and Profane Love." This is a screen adaptation of the stage play of the same name in which the star created a distinctive performance. It is said that her portrayal in the silent drama is even greater than that of the speaking stage because of the greater scope of the camera. The picture is marked for its powerful drama which points a rich conflict, a fine characterization and an appealing romance. Miss Ferguson, being familiar with the demands of the role, easily duplicates her stage performance. It is a picture which impresses because of its effective drama. In the cast is Conrad Nagel and other brilliant players.

"SKIRTS"

(Fox)

Elaborate Comedy Not as Funny as the Two Reelers

CLYDE COOK has gone far enough along the road to popularity and has achieved enough fame as one of the real comedians to try his luck at a feature length comedy. In "Skirts" he has a picture fashioned considerably after his two reelers, but which because of its extensive footage is not so compact with fun and humor. Where "The Jockey" or "The Hunstman" carried rich incident which always scored because it was consecutively placed, the new comedy introduces several lapses, with the humorous points far apart. It may seem to some as if Cook wasn't slated to appear in "Skirts" at all, because he fails to make an appearance until the second reel.

The introductory scenes are given up to a bit of by-play based upon animated clay figures, representing Adam and Eve and the tempting apple. Then a sequence is offered in planting the plot and characters. Singer's Midgets, of vaudeville fame, are introduced, but they have very little to do aside from appearing in a huge reproduction of the shoe of the fairy tales.

The star plays the part of a handy man about a circus. His mother is the bearded lady in the side-show; his father is a millionaire, separated from his family. The plot hinges on the son endeavoring to get the old man's fortune, with the strong man of the circus scheming to beat him to it. Cook is funny in everything he tackles here until the incident becomes repetitious. A five-reeler cannot depend on one figure in its plot, so when the star is off the scene the comedy falters. There is none of the ingenuity found in "The Jockey" present here. The gags are old ones, although they are good for a smile because Cook is naturally funny. Circus atmosphere carries the piece through the majority of scenes.

The star acts as a dummy for the strong man and is kicked and cuffed about by the spike drivers, elephants, et cetera. Finally a cyclone carries the big top away and we next find Cook in his father's home and bathing suit emporium trying to prove his rightful inheritance. There is a spectacular shot at a banquet which offers the Sunshine Widows (a few hundred of them) in neglegee or familiar attire—a la ballet costume. This is the only scene in which they appear. The conclusion shows Cook in an aeroplane affecting the rescue of his sweetheart, who is in the clutches of a villain atop a moving train. "Skirts" is elaborate and amusing in spots. It would appear funnier if Cook hadn't made such good two-reelers.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Peter Rocks, Jr. ..... Clyde Cook
Supported by Singers, Midgets, Sunshine Widows and others.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Clyde Cook, the Fox de luxe comedian, is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— in "Skirts," his first feature length comedy. The star has earned the right to appear in picture of extended reels because of his undeniable ability. His grotesque make-up, his adaptability for any kind of stunts no matter how hazardous, and his well sustained sense of humor—these are enough to warrant him success. "Skirts" is similar in plot and incident to his two-reel comedies. These patrons are legion who think the short pieces as inadequate for complete amusement. So "Skirts" afford them ample entertainment.

The comedian duplicates his efforts in the short subjects and adds several new features. He is assisted by the Singer Midgets, a group of lilliputian people who are acrobats and comedians. The Sunshine bathing beauties, featured as Widows here, also render fine support. The girls really give color and dash to a comedy which breezes with plenty of pep, humor, and rich burlesque. Other players associated with Sunshine comedies aid the star in building the fun. The plot revolves against a circus background, with the hero appearing as a handy man whose mother is the bearded lady in the side show. The two conceive a plan to get the inheritance of Rock, senior—a plan which is nearly frustrated by the villain. The comedy carries good incident, a hair-raising thrill, and some colorful atmosphere.

PROGRAM READER

Clyde Cook, acknowledged to be one of the funniest comedians on the screen, comes to the ———— theatre next ———— in his first feature comedy entitled "Skirts." All of those who found delight in "The Jockey" will certainly get their money's worth in this mirthful comedy. The abundance of clever situations, the rich humor, the atmosphere, the laugh provoking stunts—these make "Skirts" one of the hits of the comedy season. Clyde Cook is an original comedian and he has in "Skirts" a picture which permits him to score his clownish efforts to the utmost. Sixty laughs a minute and sixty minutes of pure enjoyment. Don't miss it. Hundreds of people, hundreds of tricks keep the fun going on apace to the final scene.

SUGGESTIONS

In this Clyde Cook comedy, the Fox comedian has his first feature length picture. So play up the announcement that this distinctive funmaker is coming in a double-barreled epic of fun. Play up his past successes, telling that "Skirts" is doubly entertaining because it gives Cook just so much more to do. The title can be used for some novel exploitation. Use your newspaper space in featuring Cook and what a sensation he is in the comedy field. Bring out that he is supported by a clever company, that hundreds of people are employed here, including a galaxy of bathing beauties. Treat your copy in a humorous fashion. You might have an all-comedy week in presenting this picture from the overture to the finish. Have your artist draw a likeness of Cook with his quaint moustache.

CATCH LINES

Clyde Cook, the Fox comedian, is coming in "Skirts." Sixty minutes of fun and high jinks.

See the funniest comedian on the screen, Clyde Cook in "Skirts." A picture of a thousand laughs.

"PUPPETS OF FATE"
(Metro)

Heart Interest Story With Viola Dana in a Character Role

IT will come as a surprise to the steady screen patron to find Viola Dana giving expression to a character role and coming through with an admirable portrayal. The flapper parts have been relegated to the background for the time being and the star will not lose her popularity by occasionally doing the thing she does here—appearing in character. "Puppets of Fate" permits her to portray the part of a pathetic Italian girl whose husband sails for America to gain a fortune while she paints fancies of romance and happiness. The director has staged the foreign scenes with creditable atmosphere, using discretion in showing intimate touches rather than falter in presenting landscapes and inviting criticism.

The picture gets into its element after the planting of the characters and revolves around the pangs of separation. The little wife comes to New York entirely ignorant of her husband's home or profession. He has neglected to write because of failure, but finally wins success as a porter in a barber shop. At this point the picture becomes greatly overdrawn, the story carrying a wealth of convenient situations. Yet it carries a tug, a heart-throb which is caught by the spectator. The husband's hectic life is stressed for the sake of adding balance and emphasizing the pathos. He falls in the clutches of a wily adventuress, a manicurist in the shop in which he is employed. The author does not approach realities by exploiting him as suddenly wealthy through the kindness of a patron whose pocketbook he restores. The girl steers him to the race-track and by giving him tips on the winners he is able to make a snug fortune.

It seems illogical that he should become victimized into a marriage ceremony with the adventuress, since she is plainly not the marrying kind. In reality she would get his money some other way. In collusion with a group of bounders she is able to pull the wool completely over the ignorant Italian's eyes. In the meanwhile his real bride has found a position as flower girl in a cabaret and there it is that they encounter one another. After certain complications in which the husband is arrested for bigamy and a court trial is presented, he is paroled in the custody of his little bride. It is a good scene when she perjures herself to save him and the sympathetic judge comes to the rescue when the gullible husband fails to take advantage of the false testimony. Aside from the far-fetched incident attending the melodramatic sequences, the picture is thoroughly appealing. In fact it is a pleasing entertainment. The star and Francis McDonald are thoroughly in character.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The announcement that Viola Dana will be seen in a new picture, "Puppets of Fate," at the ———— theatre, on ———— and ———— will be glad news to the many admirers of this charming little screen star. It promises to stand out among all the previous pictures of Viola Dana, for here she has an opportunity to strike out from flapper roles into a characterization that permits her to show emotional heights and depths. The picture, from an original screen story by Donn Byrne, tells of an Italian beauty whose tragic experience touches the heart strings and compels interest.

As Sorrentina Palombra, Miss Dana pines away in her cracked old palazzio, while her husband, Gabriel, dissipates in America, whither he has gone to win his fortune. The husband becomes a successful gambler and eventually finds himself in the clutches of an adventuress who has made him marry her. The abandoned wife is poverty-stricken, but later wins fame with her marionette show. Unexpectedly startling is the thrilling denouement of the picture. It is rich in atmosphere through the scenes of Venice, and is well acted by a competent cast.

PROGRAM READER

The tremendous part that Fate plays in our lives is something that is bound to interest everybody. What it did to a young girl who came to the land of opportunity through love of "her man" is shown by captivating Viola Dana in a manner to enthrall you in the Metro picturization of "Puppets of Fate," from the story by Donn Byrne. The picture will be presented at the ———— theatre next ————. This feature is marked for goving the vital and vibrant star a different kind of role. She does not portray the irresistible flapper of society, but is permitted to step into character as an Italian beauty. Her dark features and exuberant personality are perfectly adaptable for the part.

SUGGESTIONS

You can work up a deal of good atmosphere for this picture which will certainly put it over. An organ grinder parading the streets and grinding out tunes will attract notice. The ushers can be garbed in Italian costumes. You can take advantage of the theme to exploit a mail campaign. A letter modeled after the following would be a good stunt: "Dear M————: If you believe that there is some force that compels people to do things they never intended to do, you will be interested in seeing the Metro picture, 'Puppets of Fate,' starring Viola Dana at the ———— next ————." Cards put out in show windows stating, "We are Puppets of Fate," and "If you would know why we are forced to do this pay a visit to the ———— theatre, where Viola Dana will give you the answer."

CATCH LINES

See "Puppets of Fate" and enjoy Viola Dana in an emotional role. A picture with a purpose.

Does Fate play a tremendous part in our lives? See Viola Dana in "Puppets of Fate."

"MADE IN HEAVEN"
(Goldwyn)

Fire Scene Best Part of Unreal Story That Fails to Impress

ASIDE from a good title, some exploitation possibilities, not the least of which is Rene Adoree now Mrs. Moore, "Made in Heaven" falls short of what the exhibitor and fan have a right to expect from Tom Moore and Goldwyn.

Neither story or development contain anything interesting and the production is so patently padded that the whole cast gets lost in meaningless scenes. There are a few laughs in the titles for people who like their humor of the broad variety and a well done fire rescue scene with Tom as the brave hero who walks right in among the smoke pots and carries the heroine down the ladder. The story also has an unusual twist if a fake wedding, just to help the heroine out, is to be classified as a legitimate way of constructing a picture plot.

Tom Moore wears a fireman's uniform and his Irish smile and the rest of the cast wear a lot of good clothes. Rene Adoree has a small role, that seems to have been written in for her and is given an opportunity to emote apparently for the same reason. However, she delivers fairly well and in consequence the wise exhibitor will have a chance to experiment with the public's curiosity in the matter of brides of famous personages.

The cast is good, with Helene Chadwick, Molly Malone, Kate Lester and Freeman Wood doing all that could be done with roles that present small opportunities.

The story of "Made in Heaven" is simple. A young fireman rescues a girl from a burning building, later listens to her story concerning a distasteful marriage that is being forced on her and proposes a marriage of convenience himself.

The girl accepts, but the hero has a fake ceremony performed, the idea being that the girl will repent of her bargain. After a while the supposed bride decides she would like to take up her abode with the supposed hubby, which presents complications for the hero. In the end, the firemen who in the meantime has become an inventor, makes up his mind that he will really marry the girl and so he carries her off to his new home, the inference being that they will be properly wedded immediatey.

Play it if you think it will make you some money, but don't promise anything out of the "movie" class.—Length, 5 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Popular Tom Moore in his latest Goldwyn picture, "Made in Heaven," is announced as the feature picture attraction at the ———— theatre for a ———— days' engagement beginning ————.

In "Made in Heaven" Mr. Moore plays the role of an Irish fireman who wins a wife whom he has rescued from a burning building after conspiring with her to escape a marriage with a distasteful suitor whom her parents desire her to wed. It is a light and entertaining comedy that has been evolved from a story by William Hurlburt and gives the star a role for which he is eminently fitted.

In support of Mr. Moore is Helene Chadwick, Molly Malone, Kate Lester and last but not least, Rene Adoree, now Mrs. Moore.

Picture fans will of course want to see the kind of a girl Mr. Moore has picked out. Miss Adoree is pretty and winsome and can act as is ably demonstrated in the role she plays in "Made in Heaven."

PROGRAM READER

"Made in Heaven" is the interesting title of next week's feature picture at the ———— theatre. Tom Moore is the star playing the role of an Irish fireman who rescues a girl from a burning building, pretends to marry her so she can refuse to marry a distasteful suitor and finally hitches up for keeps. The girl is pretty Helene Chadwick. Other members of the cast are Molly Malone, Kate Lester and Rene Adoree, now Mrs. Tom Moore. Miss Adoree has an engenue part that demonstrates her ability as an actress and possibly means that she is to be Mr. Moore's leading woman in his future starring vehicles.

There is a thrilling fire scene in the picture with the big trucks making a record run to the scene of the blaze and Tom as the hero doing a rescue act that is mighty realistic.

The story has a lot of new twists and surprises and a fine comedy angle. Titles of a humorous nature help to put the production over. All in all it is a typical Moore vehicle with the ever popular Tom with his smile and looking handsome in his fireman's uniform.

The production is in five reels and was directed by Victor Schertzinger from an original story by William Hurlburt.

CATCH LINES

Bill told Claudia that the marriage didn't take so they started looking for a regular preacher.

The fire bells rang first and the wedding bells last. Bill liked 'em both but Claudia insisted that being a fireman was beneath the dignity of the wealthy inventor.

When the fire bell rang Tom was there with the first truck. When wedding bells pealed he was just as enthusiastic and with good reason for Claudia was a peach.

"THE HIGHEST BIDDER"
(Goldwyn)

Often Told Story Holds Little Interest

THERE is not much to be said for "The Highest Bidder," Madge Kennedy's latest release, in point of entertainment values. Founded upon a timeworn idea which is developed along conventional lines and with very little dramatic incident to offer compensation, the picture is often extremely dull. One cannot become reconciled to the star displaying her talent along emotional lines regardless of the fact that she has real capabilities in that direction. But she is so much more excellent as a comedienne than as a straight legitimate actress that the thought occurs why she was ever allowed to appear in anything else but comedy.

These heroines who are sold on the auction block to the highest bidder have graced a thousand and one stories, a good share of which have found their way to the screen. The author of this particular sample, Maximilian Foster, is usually entertaining. Whatever he said in the printed article seems hopelessly old-fashioned on the silver sheet. The only variation in the characterization is the presentation of the heroine as an orphan who is bartered off by a scheming benefactress instead of an ambitious mother. The girl has nearly approached the gutter when she is rescued, clothed and fed, and whose guardian requests that she give full payment. A likely candidate is chosen. Since he is a millionaire he is unduly wary of romance, imagining that the opposite sex is after his money. He calls the turn here and sets a trap by calling in a bounder from a park bench whose purpose is to make the girl fall in love with him and thus victimize her. But the man of wealth is caught in his own trap and his honor comes to the rescue in time through his love for the girl.

The picture is pitched in this hectic key with scarcely a ray of sunshine or humor visible. Much of the action is told through interiors which show the four principals at cross purposes with one another. A bit of dialogue is offered between the hero, a society girl and the heroine, or else conversation takes place between the latter and her scheming guardian. Beneath it all the human interest note is supposed to throb, which stresses the sympathetic appeal and presents the heroine as more sinned against than usual. Lionel Atwill, as the moneyed figure, plays with admirable restraint, but his performance would be more satisfying had he allowed a sense of humor to light up his features occasionally. "The Highest Bidder," deprived of dramatic values, humor and novelty, is below the average.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Madge Kennedy is seen at her winsome best in "The Highest Bidder," her latest Goldwyn picture, which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— and ————. Consistent playing of light comedy for the screen the past seasons has not effaced her very genuine talent for emotional interpretations, as is shown in the new photoplay. Based on a story by Maximilian Foster, a recognized short story writer, the picture deals with the complications which ensue when marriage a la mode and marriage of a tender sort come into conflict.

Miss Kennedy plays the part of a girl who has bound hsrself to "marry for money." Fortunately or unfortunately, she meets Henry Lester, a millionaire, who has long been convinced that women are only after his wealth, and not his heart. Circumstances lead him to think that he has been dealing with a polite adventuress. So he plans a trap and introduces her to a supposedly wealthy man who in reality is a tramp. The latter plays his game very well—so well in fact that Lester realizes that he has fallen in the very trap he set for Sally. The picture points a good vein of conflict and the romance is compelling. Miss Kennedy is supported by Lionel Atwill and other accomplished players.

PROGRAM READER

She was a penniless girl seeking employment and had been taken in tow by an adventuress on condition that she marry a man with money and after her marriage make a financial settlement upon her benefactress. The girl was given all kinds of pretty clothes and taken to places where good "catches" could be made. She fell in love with a millionaire. When she did find it out, she could not live up to her bargain and the man of wealth, who had decided she wants only his money, set a trap for her which nearly proved the undoing of both of them. But love found a way. This is the brief outline of "The Highest Bidder," an adaptation of Maximilian Foster's delightful story. The picture comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with Madge Kennedy as the star.

SUGGESTIONS

You can work up the employment agency idea for exploitation here. A board with want-ads tacked on it and placed in your lobby will excite curiosity. Tell that it is a story by the well known short story writer, Maximilian Foster, which was originally called "The Trap." Bill it as a delightful picture of love and millions at cross purposes, with the glow of romance and youth running through it. The cast should mean something to your patrons. Lionel Atwill is a Broadway star in a current Belasco production, and the other players are all well known. Mention their names. In your teasers state that it is a story of the great love that comes but once to every man, but which some men are too blind to see, or too stubborn to follow.

"THE LAMPLIGHTER"
(Fox)

Shirley Mason Attractive, But Story Holds It Back

SHIRLEY MASON has been in better pictures than this. Here she is the picture's best asset, for the charm of her personality spurs on the interest when it is in desperate danger of it falling amid the improbabilities of the story and the overacting of some of the cast.

"The Lamplighter" might have been a very readable book, but its plot on the screen is jumbled up with incongruities which will not stand under the scrutiny of a thinking audience. The story begins with a romance of the heroine's mother. She marries secretly against her father's wishes. The child is born a few months after Graham's (the girl's father) return. This stern parent supposes (it is hard to understand why) that the child is illegitimate, and kidnaps it. Just why the wife concealed her marriage under the circumstances is hard to conceive. In this sequence is a blinding scene, in which ammonia is accidently applied to the wife's eyes. It is filmed realistically enough, but it is far from pleasant and out of place in a light Shirley Mason picture. It could be toned down with no harm at all to the continuity.

The story jumps a dozen years and the star is back in one of her familiar "slavey" roles. She runs away from her adopted mother and comes under the care of an old lamplighter. Here, in a death scene, is the one bit of emotional acting that the star is allowed and she acquits herself creditably. Eventually the girl is taken into the home of her real mother, and there is pathos in the situation of mother and daughter living together, with their relationship still unknown. Finally the girl's sweetheart and father return from India, where the latter has been living these many years, and a happy ending follows. There is an attempt at a physical thrill in a shipwreck scene which serves as the only climax.

Shirley Mason, we believe, belongs in comedy drama with a strong romantic flavor, rather than in a picture of this type. Raymond McKee plays opposite her, fitting well into her personality, but this is not primarily a love story and he cannot impress greatly. Philo McCullough and Albert Knott give good performances, and it may be the story's fault that Edwin Booth Tilton appears to overact as the hard-hearted parent. In the kidnapping scene, for instance, he appears to run about the streets with the infant in his arms, and, with no prearranged plan, give it to the first person he meets, and then dash off madly again, with only a few words of explanaiton.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Playing the leading role in "The Lamplighter" is dainty Shirley Mason, the popular Fox star. "The Lamplighter" is to be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ————.

This is described as a delightfully human story with the star in a role well suited to her peculiar personality. She is cast as a homeless little waif, who suffers many trials before she discovers her true parents and true love. Playing opposite her is Raymond McKee, a young and clever screen actor, who with the star, forms a pair that has won the admiration of all the romance lovers of the screen. Filled with the enthusiasm and exuberance of youth, they typify all that is clean and sweet in the romances of the young.

Albert Knott plays the lovable old lamplighter and Edwin Booth Tilton gives a gripping performance as the hardened father who cannot forgive his daughter for her marriage to an ancient enemy. The story is by Maria Susanna Cummins and the direction was under the capable hands of Howard M. Mitchell, who directed Miss Mason in "Her Elephant Man," "Love's Harvest" and "Wing Toy."

"The Lamplighter" will be shown at the ———— theatre for ——— days. For those who enjoy a clean and pleasing romance enacted by one of the most charming stars of the screen and supported by an equally capable leading man, no better evening's entertainment could be offered.

PROGRAM READER

Shirley Mason's newest production, "The Lamplighter," will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. Maria Susanna Cummins, who wrote this unusual story, has furnished the diminutive William Fox star with screen material which fits perfectly her charming personality. Miss Mason herself needs no introduction to the patrons of the ————. Her work in her previous pictures has endeared her to the hearts of all who have seen them. She is whimsical, dainty, vivacious, delicately emotional and at all times the perfect little actress who protrays her various roles in a way that shows not only careful and well applied study of the part, but also an innate ability.

Playing opposite the star is Raymond McKee, who has been seen in other pictures starring Miss Mason in the past, and who, with his boyish appearance and vivacity, is worthy to share the honors with the ninety-five pound star.

"The Lamplighter" will be shown at the ———— theatre for ——— days.

SUGGESTIONS

You have the book from which this picture was adapted and the star to talk about. Do not, of course, tell much of the plot of the story, but merely mention the name of the book and trust that this will attract them to the box office. The star is the best bet. There is no one exactly like her on the screen to-day. She is of the "cute" variety without being pollyannish to such a degree as to sicken the devotees of a more virile sort of drama. She is supported here by Raymond McKee who has played opposite in most of her pictures and who is well suited for her support.

At a cost of about $100,000 the Rialto theatre, North avenue, near Linden, will undergo enlargement and remodeling. A seating capacity of 1,700 is being arranged for and loges, mezzanine boxes and spacious rest rooms provided. Special attention is being given in plans to orchestral and organ furnishings.

The Rialto will close in June for the improvements and it is hoped to have the work finished by September. The front will be of brown unglazed terra cotta and gray brick and the interior decorations will be designed in the Adams style of architecture. Samuel Back is president of the operating company and J. Louis Rome directing manager.

Motion-picture theatres throughout the city are joining in efforts to get together a $2,000,000 fund for the rebuilding of St. Mary's Industrial School for Boys, which was burned. Aviator Howard A. Kelly, Jr., recently dropped free tickets to shows from the air in connection with the drive.

Herbert L. Weil of Port Huron, Mich., who recently sold out his theatre interests there, has formed a combination with Jacob Handelsman of Chicago, for the erection and operation of new theatres in Grand Rapids, Port Huron, South Bend, Ind., and other cities.

W. S. Butterfield will remodel the Family and Majestic theatres in Port Huron.

T. H. Ealand has resigned as general manager of the Miles circuit of theatres here and is succeeded by George Guise, formerly manager of the Orpheum and publicity director for Mr. Miles.

Claire Townsend, Metro exchange manager, is back at his desk after an illness of five weeks.

Frank Bessinger, who has been conducting song revues in various local houses, has opened an office to furnish similar acts to picture theatres through the state.

The Michigan Motion Picture Exhibitors' association has by resolution endorsed the drive for the Chinese famine relief fund.

Ben Cohen, of the Colonial theatre, is in the hospital where he was operated on two weeks ago. His recovery is expected.

MINNEAPOLIS

Theodore L. Hays, general manager of the Finkelstein and Ruben Enterprises, is ill at his home with small-pox, it was learned today. Mr. Hays has been confined to his home all week, and it was thought at first that he was threatened with pneumonia. Although quite ill earlier in the week, his condition is not considered serious.

Through the courtesy of local film exchanges and Al. G. Ruben, son of I. H. Ruben of the Finkelstein and Ruben Enterprises, unfortunates in local hospitals are now given the opportunity to witness movies several nights each week.

Certain nights each week Mr. Ruben visits the hospitals with a motion picture operator and a piano player to furnish music, and sometimes a vaudeville act or two. Feature films of high class are donated by the exchanges, and Mr. Ruben pays the rest of the expenses. The city hospitals are visited and also hospitals where wounded soldiers are undergoing treatment.

Charles C. Perry, former manager of the New Lyric theatre here and now managing director of the Capitol theatre, Winnipeg, was in the city for a few days the past week on business.

"Old-fashioned Movie Week" at the New Garrick theatre here, as put on by Manager C. P. Murphy, was a huge success. Although there was a considerable slump in business at all the theatres that week, the New Garrick box office statement gives eloquent testimony as to the popularity of the novelty.

Mr. Murphy secured an old split reel, "The Burglar and the Child" to be run as the feature and used a one shutter machine to get the old time effect. Cuts were made during the showing and the old slides, "One minute please while the operator adjusts the film" and so on were inserted. Previous to the showing of the feature Mr. Murphy ran several old time slides such as "Ladies Please Remove Your Hats," and Ronald Jonson, a local singer, sang an illustrated song, "Down By the Old Mill Stream."

Mr. Murphy through the medium of a trailer requested the audience to compare the old time movies with those of today and presented Lionel Barrymore in "The Great Adventure" by way of comparison.

SAN FRANCISCO

Frank J. Costello, general manager of the Turner and Dahnken circuit, has been bereaved by the loss of his mother who lived in San Francisco.

A Mutt and Jeff tie-up has been arranged between the Chronicle, San Francisco's morning newspaper which runs the cartoons daily and the Strand theatre where Mutt and Jeff are to be seen on the screen daily. A slide at the theatre announces that the cartoon can be seen in the Chronicle while the latter runs a line over the cartoon to the effect that the characters can be seen in motion daily at the Strand.

Samuel Gordon, who has houses in San Rafael and Napa will reopen the Majestic theatre in the Mission district after alterations, as a motion picture house. Seating capacity is 800. It was formerly a burlesque house.

Charles A. Nelson, business manager of the Allied Amusement Industries of Northern California, is in Sacramento, the state capitol, watching the progress of proposed censorship and motion picture blue laws before the legislature there.

William A. Mead, manager of the Robertson-Cole exchange, reports wonderful success with "Kismet." The picture has had a repeat booking on Market after playing the districts. "Seven Years' Bad Luck" is also meeting with great success throughout the territory. James R. Keitz has been hired as a new salesman.

WESTERN NEW YORK

The Buffalo Theatre Managers' association is planning a monster benefit to aid the starving children of Ireland. Walter Hayes of the Mark-Strand interests, has been appointed chairman for Buffalo. J. H. Michael, manager of the Regent theatre, has been named production chairman for the benefit performance which will be given in Elmwood Music hall in May. Harold B. Franklin is chairman of the publicity committee, E. O. Weinberg is in charge of tickets and Bruce Fowler will look out for the finances. The various theatres have already donated a sum of money to start the ball rolling. It is planned to have the Buffalo Orpheus, a local singing society, as one of the features on the program.

Wellington C. Playter, a former resident of Dunkirk and Fredonia, and who for the last several years has appeared in pictures, has signed a contract to appear in First National productions.

Samuel Carver, manager of the Empire theatre, Buffalo, has changed his policy to a new feature every day. Mr. Carver recently introduced big programs in Buffalo's downtown section at ten cents all over the house.

An usher in the Buffalo Olympic theatre mistook an Indian for a colored person and tried to order him and his squaw from first floor seats, telling him that colored persons were not allowed on the main floor. An argument ensued which ended this week in city court, where a jury in City Judge Lamson's court ordered the Olympic to come through with $100 to soothe the feelings of the Red Man.

Jane and Katherine Lee, appearing at Shea's vaudeville house last week, gave much of their time during their stay in Buffalo to aiding the American Legion Relief Fund drive. The screen kiddies appeared every noon at Lafayette Square and entertained the large crowds gathered there to hear the various speakers. Michael Shea and Ira M. Mosher were in charge of the program put on by the theatre men on Friday.

Howard J. Smith, manager of the Palace theatre, has been appointed representative for the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York State in the four western New York congressional districts by Charles O'Reilly and is now working on the organization of a Buffalo branch.

Charles H. Tarbox, associated with Charles H. Landers at the Fredonia Opera House, Fredonia, N. Y., was in Buffalo last week booking pictures for the Chautauqua Community summer season. Mr. Tarbox will have charge of the film entertainment at the Institute this year.

Earl L. Crabb, former manager of the Strand theatre, Buffalo and now general manager of the Buffalo Motion Picture Corporation, with headquarters in New York, was in Buffalo with Mrs. Crabb last week-end for a conference with local officers of the company.

ABOUT PLAYERS

GORDON STANDING has completed a season's engagement which was the reason for his departure from film plays, temporarily, following an offer to appear in J. M. Barrie's "Half an Hour," opposite Madame Besson. Mr. Standing's success in the role was indeed flattering, even to a "Standing," and in addition to the tribute of having been selected for an important role in a "Barrie" offering, the praise awarded his performance by critics throughout the Orpheum circuit, was gratifying in the extreme. Mr. Standing's last work in pictures has not yet been seen, account of productions awaiting release, including "The Foreigner," "Man and Woman" and "Miss 139."

Louise DuPre, who won International prominence as the former understudy of Mary Pickford, and who was to have been presented in April as a star in her own right by a newly organized producing company, the Fan Film Corporation, has been obliged to enter the French Hospital for what is known as "the rest cure" treatment. It would seem Miss DuPre found that artistic temperament and financial effort do not go hand in hand, and as a result of her exaggerated efforts to be active in all departments of the organization, the necessity of a complete rest delayed further proceedings. The treatment Miss DuPre is taking, under the care of Dr. Nagel, who has ministered to numerous stage and screen celebrities for similar complaints, requires absolute rest for at least ten days, so for the present Miss DuPre will take orders rather than issue them.

His present role as the artist-hero of "Love Is Everything," which Whitman Bennett is producing and directing himself, calls for Percy Marmont to execute a piece of sculpture before the camera. In his desire to make sure that his sculptural technique would not be too obviously amateurish, Marmont succeeded in enlisting the aid of Salvatore Bilotti, a prominent artist. Acquaintanceship begot interest, so that Marmont has been practising modelling constantly and will be seen carving an original piece of sculpture in this picture.

In addition, Mr. Marmont must also make an oil painting in this story and he is now studying this branch of art also. He declares,

Tom Terris, Cosmopolitan director and his juvenile discovery, Harry Lee too, that his present role is the most interesting he has ever created on the screen.

Mary Miles Minter, Realart star, will leave in June for a brief tour of Europe. She will be accompanied by Mrs. Charlotte Shelby and Miss Margaret Shelby, her mother and sister.

"I have been planning this trip for a long time," said Miss Minter, "but somehow I have never been able to spare the time. No sooner was one picture completed than another was scheduled for production and so Europe and all its attractions had to wait.

"Now it's different. By arranging a schedule and working very hard I was able to get sufficiently ahead of production plans to think about this tour and so I am practically assured now of a little vacation.

While abroad she will make a number of personal appearances at some of the larger motion picture theatres. Her pictures enjoy a wide popularity on the Continent and in England and it is in response to repeated requests from managers of those houses that Miss Minter promised to appear in person before her European admirers.

On her way East she will stop off at Chicago. She plans to sail from New York with her mother and sister early in June, and will visit England, France, Switzerland, Italy, Spain and other continental countries.

Niles Welch, after two years upon the west coast, has arrived in New York upon important business. Mr. Welch's latest picture, "The Spenders," is among recent Hodkinson releases.

ABOUT DIRECTORS

ALAN CROSLAND to direct Constance Binney in "Room and Board." Promising, indeed, is the combination of talent and acknowledged ability of both director and the star. Miss Binney, it will be remembered, has appeared in Realart productions under the direction of Kenneth Webb and John S. Robertson, while Mr. Crosland has won an enviable reputation for himself in the direction of feature productions, among which were some of the late Olive Thomas' greatest successes. By special arrangement with Myron Selznick, Mr. Crosland has been loaned to Famous Players for the production of "Room and Board," and while productions for Paramount-Artcraft release are not new to Mr. Crosland, it will be the first picture he has directed in the new Long Island studio. The results of the approved union in talent will be awaited with interest, Mr. Crosland having been selected particularly because of his previous work, pointing out his ability to portray the sympathetic, appealing happenings more often identified with youth.

Herbert Brenon will take a fling at light comedy. Emotional dramas and melodramas have long been his forte, and a recent success, "The Passion Flower," starring Norma Talmadge, has been hailed as one of the season's most artistic achievements. "War Brides," in which Nazimova made her debut into the film world, was the work of Mr. Brenon, as well as "The Lone Wolf," "The Sign on the Door," which awaits release. He will direct Norma Talmadge in "The Wonderful Thing," an adaptation by Clara Beranger from the play which won considerable popularity, and in which Jean Eagles appeared, originally.

John M. Stahl, director of "Sowing the Wind," a First National release which will make its New York bow at the Capitol theatre, is now engaged in directing another promising screen play, under the working title of "Muffled Drums." Mr. Stahl's successes seem to grow in number as well as in favor.

"Desperate Heritage," directed by Edward Jose, starring Alice Joyce, is reported as complete and ready for Vitagraph presentation.

Allen Holubar and Dorothy Phillips, director and star of "Man, Woman and Marriage," who have spent several weeks in the east, have returned to Los Angeles, where their next production will go under way, immediately.

Roy Neill reports encouraging progress in the making of "The Conquest of Canaan," starring Thomas Meighan.

It bore the date, February 10, 1921.

It bore a half-page advertisement of a firm of "Brewers, maltsters, wine and spirit merchants, sole agents for Dewar's Imperial whiskey."

Someone read this aloud and eager hands reached from every direction.

"Be calm, children," said Director Taylor. "The ad.'s all right, except that it's in the Auckland Weekly News, published in New Zealand."

The paper is a prop in "The Lifted Veil," which Mr. Taylor is producing.

Graham Moffatt, who wrote it, criticized Reginald Barker's production of "Bunty Pulls the Srings."

"Look here, mon, you show a Scotch family putting sugar on the porridge."

"When I was in Scotland," argued Mr. Barker, "I had sugar on my porridge."

"Then," retorted the author, "you must have been there on Christmas day."

As a matter of fact, Reginald Barker was raised in Bothwell, Scotland, where Harry Lauder used to mine coal. Did Barker have porridge only upon Christmas?

Mr. Barker, be it known, celebrated his thirty-fifth birthday by starting production upon his sixteenth motion picture, during which celebration the Goldwyn director remarked, "What I want to know about the blue Sunday is this—will profanity be permitted if you cuss a blue streak?"

As an afterthought, Tod Browning passed the remark, "Things look black in Russia for the Reds, but when they learn about our blue laws, they'll turn green with envy."

Title Writers Signed

Stewart B. Moss, of the National Motion Picture Title Company, has announced that Stanley J. Worris, Boston newspaperman and author, has signed a contract with the organizaton, whereby Mr. Worris later assumes full charge of the title writing department.

A force of title writers, specialists in their line, have been engaged to write titles for film productions handled by the National.
